We farther learn, that during harvest, six persons were informed against for taking in wheat on Sunday. Two of them, being boys, were discharged by the Justice; but against the other four judgments were given. One of the parties has taken his case up to court; the other three were to have gone to jail on third-day of last week.

After the above transaction, but little work was done in public on Sunday until the 2d inst., when a man and three boys picked apples, and were informed upon. If judgment is given against them, they will probably go to jail, as they have no property upon which the officers can lay hands.

—What a record of transactions in the State of Pennsylvania in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight! A band of peaceable and conscientious citizens, who believe that the fourth commandment requires them to rest on the seventh day and work on the first day, and act accordingly, are watched with inquisitorial strictness, and subjected to fines and imprisonment whenever a wicked law can be so construed as to apply to them. And what is worst of all, this kind of persecution, begun by base men for purposes of revenge, and sanctioned and approved by men calling themselves Christians, and even Christian ministers! Tell it not in the Vatican, lest our boasts of religious freedom be held in contempt! Tell it not among the heathen, lest they despise Christianity, and be emboldened to persecute and slay its advocates!

PROGRESS!

From the Philadelphia Ledger.

Letter from Lancaster—Law Opinions.

LANCASTER, Sept. 26, 1848.

In the Court of Common Pleas, Judge Lewis yesterday delivered an opinion on Sabbath breaking, which is herewith reported for the Ledger.

In the Commonwealth vs. George W. Wormly, a certiorari to remove a conviction for Sabbath-breaking, it appeared that in 1843 the Legislature passed a law against hogs running at large in the borough of Marietta, and that the borough Council, on the 2d of May, 1843, in pursuance of the act of Assembly, passed an ordinance on the same subject. The defendant was High Constable of the borough, and impounded a hog on the Sabbath day in accordance with the provisions of the act and the ordinance. For that act of official duty the officer was convicted before a justice of the peace of breaking the Sabbath, and fined under the act of 1794.

It was held that the common law doctrine, under which Sunday was no longer considered a juridical day, did not apply to the case, because the act of impounding a hog was not a juridical act. It was not so near an approach to it as receiving a verdict. It was also held that the act of 1705, against the execution of writs, judgments, or decrees, did not reach the case, because no judgment or decree had been pronounced, nor had any writ, precept, or warrant issued or been executed. It was also held that the act of 22d of April, 1794, against worldly employment or business "on the Lord's Day," did not apply to public rights, or to the Commonwealth, or the nation, or the public officers of either, in the official discharge of their duties.

The State is not affected by the general expressions of a statute. There must be a manifest intention to operate upon public rights, otherwise the statute is held to be applicable only to acts not official. A mail contractor, or a postmaster, in delivering or opening the mail, acts under the orders of government; a general in conducting a battle; a governor in resigning; a secretary in filing the resignation; a constable in keeping a jury together; a judge in receiving a verdict; a clerk in recording it; are all exercising official rights, under public authority, for the benefit of the public; and such acts do not come within the meaning of "worldly employment," prohibited by the act of 1794.

The mischief would be intolerable if every public officer, acting under a conscientious sense of his oath of office and his official duty, is bound to satisfy every justice of the peace who may claim jurisdiction, that the work was a work of necessity. The particular act in question may, however, be fully justified upon that ground. Of all days of the week, Sunday is the day on which the citizens should be protected from annoyances in going to and returning from their devotions.

If all the pigstyes of every populous borough and city are to be opened on Sunday, and their filthy tenants, (rendered more predatory and annoying by their previous deprivation of liberty,) are permitted to dispute the possession of the streets and side-walks with the citizens and their women and children, there would be but little value in the laws and ordinances for the restraint of such animals. Nor is it by any means certain that they would confine their excursions to the streets. The houses, yards, and even the churches, which are generally open on Sundays, might be made places of resort in pursuit of provision. There is as much room for impounding a hog on Sunday as there is for dispersing tipplers under the act of 1705, or for seizing the liquors and vessels of one who sells liquor to the annoyance of religious meetings under the act of 1822. A man who finds cattle trespassing upon his grain on Sunday is not required to suffer the destruction; nor is he bound, if his ox or his ass fall into a pit, to permit the animal to die without aid because it is Sunday. The Christian religion gives countenance to no such fastidious notions of morality.

This hog-catching and hog-impounding case presents a very seasonable commentary on the recent decision of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in affirming the constitutionality of the Sunday law as a "civil regulation." It works admirably indeed. The Supreme Court having stripped Sunday of all its sacredness, in a religious point of view, and proclaimed it a mere "civil regulation," places it on a common platform with all other civil statutes; and consequently cannot interfere with any other civil enactment. When it is brought into conflict with the hog-law, it is on a level with it, and cannot be raised above it. Both deriving their sanctity from the same source, the secular power, one cannot supersede the other to interfere with its execution. If one law requires that man must rest on the first day of the week, the other requires that hogs shall rest on all days; and the same authority may extend a like restriction on all bipeds also. The right arises from the same power in both cases, and in the eye of the law is equally sacred. Certain it is, Judge Lewis has decided, that the operation of the hog-law does not infringe on the sacredness of the "civil rest-day"—"Sunday"—"the Lord's day"—"the Christian Sabbath!"—and he has likewise declared, that some "worldly employment," for gain, the catching and impounding of hogs, may be performed on the "civil rest-day," with impunity; notwithstanding all the statutory provisions against its "profanation," to the contrary. Albeit, in the above decision, the hog-law is declared of equal authority, if not absolutely superior to the sacredness of the "civil rest-day." A few more such decisions will serve to expose the ridiculous absurdity of the award of the Supreme Court, and exhibit how great a loss the sticklers for the sacredness of the "first day of the week" have gained by that decision.

MUSIC—NO. 3.

The benefits resulting to the school where music is efficiently taught, supposing them to extend no farther, constitute an adequate reason for its introduction as a legal qualification:

1st. By a law of association, before mentioned, its proper exercise begets a liking for the school, and every thing connected therewith.

2d. It conduces, by its harmonizing influence, to order, chaining the hearts of teacher and pupils in inseparable bonds.

3d. It affords a respit from the dull and monotonous routine of study, which invigorates and induces to more efficient labor; and so far from retarding the progress in other studies, it accords with the experience of hundreds of able teachers, that one hour per day spent in the appropriate exercise of music actually facilitates the advancement of the school.

4th. The application of the principles of music alone can develop the human voice so that any person can become an easy and intelligible reader or speaker. So indispensable an auxiliary to success in reading is it considered in some Institutions, that none are considered qualified to teach reading who are unacquainted with the science of music. That any person who can become an effectual reader or speaker, can also become a singer, is a fact which challenges all criticism, and which meets the sanction of every unprejudiced mind well versed in the laws of man's physical and mental constitution. It is no invalidation of this fact, that so many, after attaining to adult years and forming the worst habits of articulation and discrimination, have made a few ineffectual efforts to acquire the art. It were a gross libel upon nature to suppose that such an one would learn to sing with any facility. With as much propriety might we expect to break the wild buffalo of the prairie with the same ease as the gentle calf.

5th. It is one of the most effectual preventatives of disease and restoratives of health ever resorted to. The position of the scholar much of the time necessarily contracts the thoracic cavity, thus of course contracting the bronchial cells and tubes of the lungs, preventing the free ingress of air to the same, and thus depriving the blood of a sufficient supply of oxygen to decarbonize it. This state is soon followed by the fearful symptoms of consumption and kindred diseases. To avoid this, but one expedient can be resorted to with certainty of success. By the forcible injection of a superabundance of air into the lungs, so as to counteract the external pressure induced by the scholar's sitting posture, these effects may be avoided. This is most effectually done in the faithful exercise of the vocal organs as in singing. The records of science afford many instances in which the most fearful symptoms of consumption have been subdued by this simple exercise. It is a remarkable fact, that among the Germans but few cases of consumption occur. This Dr. Bush justly attributes to their habit of training their children to sing, of whom (says a late traveler in Germany) in a school of two hundred I found only two who were not good singers. "It is scarcely possible that a nation of singers should be consumptive."

The fluency and ease with which the Germans and Italians pronounce their language, is attributable to the training to which their vocal organs are early subjected, more than to any peculiarity of the language. No deficiency in American students is more glaring and universal, than a want of efficient vocality. The dull monotony of ill-defined sounds, and indiscriminate mixture of imperfect inflections, and the untasteful fixture of appogitures and after-notes, are so common that the refined ear of a German would tire under the pronunciation of a half-hour discourse, however refined the sentiment. The indistinctness and irregularity of enunciation heard in the common conversation of every grade of American society, are withering rebukes of the public indifference to this branch of English education. Never can the English language be divested of that hoarse, gutteral, toad-like discord which fills the ears of foreigners with so much repulsion, until it shall be made the duty of teachers to take this delicate instrument of vocality in its elastic state, and tune each string to harmony, smoothness, and strength. When our language shall be spoken with the ease and fluency to which the vocal organs of every healthy person are attainable, then, and not till then, can it assume its deserved celebrity among the dialects of the earth. When the child is faithfully trained to the proper development of its vocal powers, then will the avenues to the soul's holiest emotions be unbarred—the highest impediment to the march of scientific and moral reform be torn down, and mankind will be linked in one harmonious, grand, and omnipotent concert, that shall lift the veil of ignorance, and let in the light of a brighter and holier day. Who will say that the wheels of this glorious reform of our race shall longer be clogged by the indifference and prejudice of the guardians of youth?

The "Christian Contributor" and the Sabbath.—A copy of the Christian Contributor for October 4th has found its way to our table, from which we learn that the editor has recently "published some arguments for the observance of the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath," which he expects to see transferred to our columns. Very gladly will we fulfill his largest expectations in this respect, if he will furnish us with the means of doing so. But it so happens, that the number of the Contributor before us is the only one we have seen since the date of those from which we copied the articles of brethren Hawes and Bailey. Of course we have been without the means of knowing what was going on, or keeping our readers informed upon the subject. Send us the articles, Bro. Grosvenor, and we will endeavor to do them justice.

Sailing of Missionaries.—On Monday morning last, Rev. Wm. M. Jones and wife, Missionaries of the American Baptist Free Mission Society to Hayti, who have been on a visit to this country on business connected with the Mission, sailed in the brig Hayti, Captain Cutts, for the field of their labors. They were accompanied by Miss Elizabeth Howard, of Owego, in this State, who goes out to fill the place made vacant by the return and recent death of Miss Young, of Union Village, a most devoted and useful Missionary for two years in Port-au-Prince, where she fell a victim to the severity of the climate, and returned home in February last. Rev. Mr. Cushman, a graduate of Brown University, with his young wife, late a graduate of Oberlin, were among the passengers, destined for the same field of labor, as Missionaries of the Evangelical Society.

Methodist Lawsuit.—At a meeting of the Commissioners of the Methodist Episcopal Church, South, on the 9th of Sept. last, it was resolved to institute suits as soon as practicable against the Northern portion of the Methodist Episcopal Church for the recovery of of the funds and property belonging to the Church at the time of the great seperation between the North and the South. Should the resolution be carried out, the trial will be one of the most important that ever took place in this country. This business of litigation among brethern is a very poor business. It would doubtless be better for both parties, under existing circumstances, if the property could all be annihilated before litigation commences.

Slavery in the New Territory.—A letter recently written by Judge McLean, of the Supreme Court of the United States, holds the following language in relation to slave ry in the newly-acquired territory:—

"Resting upon the principles of the Constitution, as they have been judicially settled, the free States, by moderation, vigilance and firmness, may prevent the extension of Slavery to the free territory lately annexed. Without the sanction of law, Slavery can no more exist in a territory than a man can breathe without air. Slaves are not property where they are not made so by the municipal law. The Legislature of a Territory can exercise no power which is not conferred on it by act of Congress."

State Temperance Convention.—A New York State Temperance Convention was held at Syracuse last week, which continued in session two days. The following is an abstract of the resolutions discussed and adopted on the occasion:—

1. Provides that the sale of liquors be prohibited by law, and that every exertion be made to get such law passed by the Legislature.
2. That it was the duty of temperance men to vote only for such as would be favorable to prohibiting the sale of liquor.
3. That people should attend the primary meetings for nomination, and endeavor to secure temperance men on the ticket.
4. That renewed and vigorous exertions be made to induce the people to sign the pledge; that it be recommended to the churches to present the same to their members for their signatures, and that the Society's agents be instructed to bring this subject before every church they might visit.

EUROPEAN NEWS.

The steamship Cambria arrived at Boston on Friday last, bringing European news seven days later than we published in our last.

The belief entertained when the previous steamer sailed, that a positive rebellion had broken out in Ireland, is to a certain extent without foundation, but it is nevertheless true that predatory bands of armed men had turned out in hostile array, encamped in almost inaccessible positions, openly defying the military authorities. Numerous attacks had been made upon the Police and the non-sympathizing residents. Those demonstrations, however, have in a considerable degree subsided, though the rash insurgents are far from being dispersed. The last accounts from Ireland state that the neighborhood of Garrick-on-Suir is still much disturbed; that the insurgents occupy formidable localities upon the Mountains; that signal fires are lighted every night, and that the utmost vigilance of the Military and Police failed to crush the display.

In regard to the state of France, a dispatch to the London Globe, dated Paris, Sept. 21, says:—"It is almost impossible to describe the gloom which has gone over the public mind here. Every body seems to think that Gen. Cavaignac and the National Assembly will find it impossible to establish the Republic, and yet nobody knows how it is to be got rid of without a conflict in which none of the friends of order are willing to engage. If it is to be overthrown, it will probably be by some sudden outbreak, probably a military conspiracy. The intentions of Gen. Cavaignac are believed to be excellent, and such a Republic as he would give us, the enlightened men of the country would willingly accept; but they have not the energy required to second his efforts. The great obstacle in the way of the Republic is the peasantry. The men who proclaimed the Republic in obedience to the orders of some 15,000 or 20,000 of the population of Paris, forgot that although they might get up a good deal of enthusiasm in the city and in a few of the large towns of the provinces, the agricultural population, who are by far the most numerous, must be consulted at last. The farmer has had 45 per cent. more to pay in taxes, and the farmer's man has his wages reduced to enable his employer to pay the taxes. Put your hand into his pocket and draw out his earnings to pay for the Republic, and then see whether he will support it.

A sanguinary insurrection broke out in Frankfort on Sunday. Upward of thirty barricades were erected throughout the city, and defended with desperate courage by the people. The loss of life was considerable.

A revolt took place at Chennrittee, Saxony, on the 11th. Barricades were formed, and the operatives, reinforced by numbers from the suburbs, had attacked the troops, but were effectually overcome.

Vienna has again been the scene of bloodshed, and still continues in a most distracted state.

Owing to the accepted mediation of France and England, Northern Italy is in a state of suspended hostility; but it is feared that influences are at work which will lead to a resumption of arms. The army of the Alps, meanwhile, is to be reduced by one-half.

Lord George Bentinck, well-known as the leader of the Protectionist party in the House of Commons, and the greatest sporting character in the world, died suddenly on Wednesday. He is said to have amassed upward of £80,000 sterling on the Turf within the last two months.

Intelligence has been received from Sir John Ross' expedition which went in search of Capt. Franklin. It is dated from Whale Island, Davis Straits, 29th June, but stated that nothing had, up to that time, been heard of the hardy and devoted explorer.

Mr. Doheny, the Irish refugee, has arrived in Paris; he landed at Boulogne after many hairbreadth escapes, and seems to be heartily rejoiced that he has avoided the fate of some of his fellow-conspirators.

Divers are at work upon the wreck of the Ocean Monarch, and it is expected that a portion of her cargo will speedily be recovered.

A sanguinary insurrection has taken place at Siam in the Dutch East Indies.

Dreadful Sabbath Accident.—On last Saturday afternoon, says the Baltimore Sun of Oct. 4, between the hours of 4 and 5 o'clock, an explosion of powder, attended with loss of life, took place at a blacksmith's shop, located within a short distance of Woodbine, about 38 miles from Baltimore, and near the line of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. A number of men employed in blasting rock in the stone quarry of Mr. Patrick Crowley, were returning from the scene of their labors, when, overtaken by a shower of rain, they entered a blacksmith's shop a short distance from the quarry, also owned by Mr Crowley. While there, some of the party commenced amusing themselves by placing heated coals upon the anvil and striking them with a sledge hammer, which, occasioning a communication of sparks to a quantity of powder contained in three or four kegs within a barrel, which had been placed there for safety, caused the whole to explode, instantly killing Alexander Mozetta, injuring others so severely that their lives are despaired of, and blowing the whole shop into atoms, some pieces of which were picked up nearly a mile from the spot. Patrick Waldran, of this city, was picked up dead some distance from the scene of the accident by his brother, who could hardly recognize him in consequence of the mangled condition of the body and the blackened appearance of his face.

Mr. Henry Crowley, son of the proprietor, and Mr. James Morgan, from Newmarket, FrederickCounty, are also so seriousl ymaimed and injured as to give no hope of recovery. Thomas Newman, from Baltimore, was thrown some distance from the ruins, had his back and two ribs broken and otherwise injured. Thomas McGivey, also from this city, received some injuries, but was enabled to walk a short distance to his house, and is doing well. Mr. Crowley's watch was driven two feet into the ground by some of the timbers. A number of horses were also in the shop at the time of the explosion, two of which were killed and four wounded. We learn that the unfortunate men were not aware that there was any powder in the shop, otherwise they would not have amused themselves in a manner fraught with so much danger—and which resulted in such a terrible catastrophe.

Emancipation in Kentucky. A correspondent writing from Frankfort, to the Louisville Courier, says that the election being over, and it having become a "fixed fact" that they are to have a Convention to form a new Constitution, the gradual emancipation of slaves seems to be the all-absorbing question; and from all he can learn from persons who live in different portions of the State, that will be the great question next summer in the election of members of the Convention, and that those in favor of gradual emancipation will not urge that the present generation of slaves are to be made free, but that all born after some period to be fixed, say 1855, or 60, should be free at the age of 25 years. He also says that four-fifths of the voters of Kentucky are non-slaveholders, and that the presumption may be indulged by those in favor of gradual emancipation, that a majority of the members of the Convention will be in favor of their peculiar notions. The great body of foreigners who support themselves by daily labor may be counted in opposition to slavery, and in favor of gradual emancipation.

France.—Statistics of crime.—The Minister of Justice has just published the Statistics of Crime in France for the year 1846, together with a variety of interesting tables relating to other years. It appears that the number of criminal prosecutions has steadily decreased since 1840, and is now much smaller than in the latter years of the Restoration. The Minister attributes this result to the improvement of the lower classes in respect to education and intelligence. On the other hand the number of suicides has increased; in 1841 there were 2,814, in 1846, 3,102; this is attributed to the extreme poverty of the same classes. The deaths by railroad accidents are very few compared with what we have in the United States: on all the railroads of France in 1846 there were only 45 persons killed, 624 perished by accidents happening to carriages and horses. A Relic.—We saw a few days since, says the Syracuse Star, a relic of olden time, when men wore heavy armor. It was an iron casque or helmet, weighing several pounds, which was dug up in a field some where in France. Within the casque was a human skull of massive proportions; with the hair and teeth as perfect as when the man was slain, the latter being double all round the lower jaw. The fatal stab appeared to have been made through the bars of the vizor directly into the eye, as the back part of the socket was broken. Whoever he was, he died with harness on his back, which, falling off piece by piece, left the skull confined in the helmet.

SUMMARY.

The Fair of The American Institute has been open at Castle Garden, in this city, since the beginning of last week, and will continue open through next week. Several important imprvements have been made this year in the arrangement of things, one of which is the erection of a new building for exhibiting machinery. The exhibition, as a whole, is probably superior to any of its predecessors.

The county jail at Huntingdon, Pa., was destroyed by fire on Tuesday night. The Lancaster Farmer states that two of the prisoners perished in the flames. The building is supposed to have been set on fire by one or more of the prisoners, in order to escape from confinement. The Sheriff being absent at the time of the occurrence, the door of the cell in which the two prisoners were confined could not be unlocked or broken open to rescue them from the awful death which they suffered.

A widow lady named Dawson, in Steubenville, shot a young man by the name of John Conley, when attempting to enter her house through the window a few nights ago. She warned him to keep out, but finding her entreaties would not prevail, she dropped him upon the pavement beneath the window. The ball entered his forhead just between the eyes.

A man named Timothy Losee was arrested at St. Louis on the 15th instant, charged with passing counterfeit money. He had purchased a stock of goods in that city, and paid $1200, all of which proved to be counterfeit, and after his arrest, about the same amount of money, also counterfeit, was found on his person. The money purported to be the issue of the eastern banks.

The Utica and Schenectady Rail Road Company have purchased seventeen new coaches, with the latest improvements. They are for night travel, and fitted up with seats as easy and comfortable as a rocking-chair. The newly-invented india rubber springs are used, and on the heavy rail there is none of the unpleasant jar experienced under the old order of things.

The new synagogue in Canterbury, Englaud, is being erected on the site of the ancient house of the redoubted Knight Templars, once the unrelenting foes of the persecuted Israelites, but now themselves swept from the face of the earth. "Verily they shall possess the gate of their enemies."

An infant son of Mr. W. Howe, of Philipston, met with almost instant death while enjoying himself in a baby jumper. The child was placed in the jumper, and, as is usual on such occasions, was highly delighted with his situation, jumping, crowing, and laughing in all the hilarity of infantile bliss, when the spiral spring above him broke, and striking him on the head, penetrated the skull, and caused almost instant death.

The Medical Times mentions a maniac who never slept, and yet lived in good health till his 73d year. He had a kind of dozing for about a quarter of an hour once a day, which was all the slumber he was ever known to take.

A London Journal says that the number of lawyers in London is no fewer than 4972, and that the amount of their costs, in 1846-7, was £16,219,165.

A few days since, a whirlwind passed through the meadow at the White Sulpher Springs, took up a cock of hay, and carried it nearly to the top of the mountain, some distance from the Springs. What is most remarkable in the affair is, that the hay was not separated, but continued together, and in that condition it was deposited on the mountain.

A few days since, while a couple of females were traveling in a wagon from Dexter to Guilford, Me., an old she bear, with two cubs, came out of the woods, and attempted to get into the wagon, by putting her fore-paws on the forward part, from which she was frightened by the cries of the females and the approach of persons from a neighboring house. Many sheep have been destroyed by bears in that vicinity within a short time.

Lt. George F. Ruxton, of the British army, the accomplished author of "Adventures in Mexico and the Rocky Mountains," and "Life in the Far West," died at St. Louis on the 29th ult. He was on his way to the Pacific when arrested by disease and death.

The police of Roxbury, (Mass.) arrested on Sunday twenty-two men and boys for helping themselves to apples and other fruit from the orchards in the vicinity of "Tommy's Rocks." Some of the delinquints were fined $5 and costs.

Helen Mar, daughter of Mr. Charles Russell, of Bath, Me., aged about ten years, and Adelaide, daughter of Mr. Robert B. Rogers, of Chelsea, Mass., aged about twelve years, were found drowned, locked in each other's arms, in Sewall stream, Bath, into which they went to bathe.

The Charleston Mercury of Sept. 23d, says: "A lot of cotton was purchased in this city on Friday last, forwarded to New York by the Southerner on Saturday, sold in that city on Tuesday, and advice of sale received here by telegraph on Wednesday.

A young man named Jacob Keefer, residing near Clearspring, Md., was instantly killed on Sunday last by the accidental discharge of his gun while on a hunting excursion. The charge entered below his jaw and passed out at the top of his head.

The Paris papers state that certain documents have been demanded from M. Montalivet, amongst which the marriage contract of the Duchess of Orleans is said to prove the existence of an immense amount of property belonging to Louis Phillippe in the United States.

Cincinnati is at last to have a hotel worthy of the Queen City. The Burnet House is to be one-third larger than the Astor House, New York, and the building will cost $150,000. It is built by a company, and it is expected that Mr. Coleman of the Astor House will become the lessee.

The Quebec Emigrant contains the particulars of the capsizing of three boats out of fourteen which entered for a boat race, near Quebec, last week. Four persons were drowned, and all hands had a narrow escape from death.

We see by a notice in the New Orleans papers that Capt. George W. White, of that city, is authorized by the Mexican Government to raise a regiment of 1,000 men, to go to the city of Mexico, to act as a guard in sustaining the present Government.

The following is given as a list of the emoluments of Mr. Clifford, our Minister to Mexico for the year 1848:—Salary as Attorney General, $6000; outfit as Commissioner, $9000; infit as Commissioner, $4,500; outfit as Minister Resident, $9000; total, $37,500.

It appears from official statements that the public debt of the United States, at the end of the last financial year, 1st July, 1848, was, ninety-eight millions four hundred and forty-seven thousand eight hundred and three dollars.

The town of Putnam is situated on the Muskingum River, opposite Zanesville, Ohio, containing a population of 2,000 people, and there is not at present an intemperate man in the place, and moreover, there is not, within the limits of the corporation, a single tavern, store or shop, where intoxicating liquors of any kind can be had.

Sergeant Donsberger, a young man of 22 years, was killed at St. Louis on Saturday, in attempting to stop a horse which was running away with a chaise, in which were Col. Lee and lady.

Letters announce the arrival at Valparaiso, July 12th, of the fine clipper ship "Sea Witch," in only 69 days from New York, the best time ever made between the two ports.

The colored men of Cortland county have nominated the Rev. Samuel Ward for the Assembly. Mr. W. is a man of fine talents, who would do honor to any constituency.

Harris Bell, who murdered Mrs. Williams' wife of Rev. Gershom Williams, in Scott Township, something over a year ago, was hung at Honesdale, Pa., on the 29th ult.

The editor of the Pontiac (Mich.) Gazette has been presented with an apple weighing one pound and three ounces, and measuring sixteen inches in circumference.

A young man named Henry Beach broke down the door of a Mr. Kilepoose, near Auburn, New York, Saturday night, and was immediately shot dead by the latter.

The city of Mexico on the 20th ult. was in mourning, it being the anniversary of the defeat at Churubusco.

Between April aud September, 21 lives and $54,000 worth of property were lost on Lake Michigan alone.

In the year of distress, 1842, the marriages in England were only 118,825, whereas, in the prosperous year of 1845, their number was 143,543, or an increase of one-sixth.

Oneida Conference (Methodist) reported last year a decrease of 449 members. It reports this year an increase of 1392.

The late Canada Wesleyan Conference reported an increase of members during the past year, amounting to two thousand and ninety-three.

Upward of 100 Baltimore tavern-keepers have been indicted for a breach of the observance of the Sabbath in selling liquor.

Officer Micheau, of St. Louis, was informed that a large negro man, supposed to be a runaway slave, had been seen loitering about the island opposite the Arsenal for several days past. The officer went to the island, saw the negro, and attempted to arrest him, but after a short race, the negro took to the water and swam the Mississippi. When he reached the Illinois shore he turned, and seeing no one in pursuit, sat down upon a log and viewed, with apparent satisfaction, the barrier he had placed between himself and his pursuer.

We learn, says the Louisville Courier, that there is every possibility of a large emigration to California this year. We hear of the organization of companies in various towns and neighborhoods of Kentucky for this purpose, as well as in nearly every other State in the Union. There is but little doubt that fifty thousand persons will be on their way to the fartherest West as soon as the green grass of the prairies shall show itself above the surface of the soil next Spring.

A canal boat has succeeded in making its way from this city to Chicago. Its route was up the Hudson River and Erie Canal to Buffalo—from Buffalo to Erie through the lake—from Erie to Pittsburg by the canal—from Pittsburg down the Ohio to the Mississippi—up the Mississippi to the Illinois—up the Illinois to the canal, and down the canal to Chicago.

MARRIED,

In West Greenwich, R. I., on Sunday, Sept. 10th, by Rev. John Tillinghast, Mr. Albert J. Brown, of Hopkinton, to Miss Eunice L. Gallup, daughter of Albans W. Gallup, Esq., of the former place.

In Brookfield, N. Y., Sept. 30, by Eld. W. B. Maxson, Mr. Edwin K. Clarke and Miss Lucinda M. Crandall, all of Brookfield.

DIED,

In Persia, Cattaraugus Co., N. Y., July 23d, 1848, Damaris Babcock, daughter of Dea. Oliver C. Babcock, aged 18 years. Though her sickness was short, and the struggle between the constitution and disease was desperate, she was, by the grace of God, amply prepared for the emergency. It was remarked by all who were present, that her death-bed scene was one of remarkable brilliancy. Her appeals to the members of the family, to the physician in attendance, and all who were present—her affectionate mention of the church of which she was a member, and of individuals who had abandoned its fellowship, accompanied as they were by that earnestness which is expressed only by those who stand upon the extreme boundary of life—the confidence with which she spoke of mingling with the heavenly hosts, and the clearness of voice, devotion of spirit, with which, in her dying moments, she sang the first stanza of the hymn

"Jesus, lover of my soul"—

all tended to relieve the spectator from the impression of being in the house of death. T. E. B.

In Plainfield, N. Y., on the 21st of Sept., Mr. Samuel Whitford, aged 51 years, after a protracted illness of some weeks. Mr. W. was a member of 1st Seventh-day Baptist Church in Brookfield, with which he became connected in early life. It may be gratifying to his distant relatives and friends to learn, that he anticipated his departure with Christian composure and a joyful hope of a glorious immortality. His loss is severely felt in his bereaved family, in the church, and in the community at large.

In DeRuyter, N. Y., on the 24th ult., of cancer, Lydia Crandall, wife of Oliver Chase Crandall, aged 76 years. The subject of this notice was a worthy member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church of DeRuyter. She endured her distressing illness with much Christian patience and resignation, and expired in good hope of eternal life.

OCTOBER.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

Ay, thou art welcome, Heaven's delicious breath,
When woods begin to wear the crimson leaf,
And suns grow meek, and the meek suns grow brief,
And the year smiles as it draws near its death.
Wind of the sunny South, O, still delay
In the gay woods and in the golden air,
Like to a good old age released from care,
Journeying in long serenity away.
In such a bright, late quiet would that I
Might wear out life like thee, 'mid bower and brooks,
And, dearer yet, the sunshine of kind looks,
And murmur of kind voices ever nigh;
And, when my last sand twinkled in the glass,
Pass silently from men as thou dost pass.

EMPIRE OF WOMAN.

Her might is gentleness—she winneth a way
By a soft word, and a softer look;
Where she, the gentle loving one, hath failed,
The proud or stern might never yet succeed.
Strength, power, and majesty, belong to man,
They make the glory native to his life,
But sweetness is a woman's attribute;
By that she has reigned, and by that will reign.
There have been some who with a mightier mind
Have won dominion, but they never won
The dearer empire of the beautiful;
Sweetest sovereigns of their natural loveliness.

A SCHOOL-MISTRESS'S FIRST DAY.

Enter! and whathave we here? A small room bounded by four walls of rough logs, badly 'chinked,' with a floor whose wide interstices look ominous of lost slate-pencils, books, and pens—to say nothing of our foolish apprehensions of snaky heads which may peep up through the gaping boards; a square aperture, where a window might be, and three or four long, unplaned benches. On the highest of the latter is perched a little white-headed boy, whose unshod feet depend from his wide, blue trousers, vainly seeking a resting-place on the floor below. A tall, red-haired girl is opposite him, and with sundry sun-burnt lads and lasses, among whom are interspersed some fair and intelligent faces, the human furniture is complete. No; here are the 'committee men,' each with a little black-eyed boy in his hand, come to consult with us on the prosecution of our new occupation. Ah! those committee men! why do they come before we had made acquaintance with that row of sharp, eager eyes, or got the 'hang of the school-house?' How can a tyro endure their criticism? We will elude it, and pass the time in jokingly devising 'ways and means' until our Mentors must return to their plows.

They're gone; and our juvenile corps is marshalled into something like acting order; though nothing can induce the white-headed boy to descend from his perch. He says he'd a 'heap rather sit with the big fellers.' To the inquiry, 'What is your name?' he replies, 'Bub.' This seeming to us an ambiguous appellation, we appeal to the urchin at his side—'Do you know this little boy's name?'

'I reckon it's Bub; aint it, Bub?' he answers, with a frightened look. A voice from the opposite bench solves the mystery. 'It's my cousin; his name is Jeames; we jist call him Bub, for short.'

Now comes the muster of reading books. One has brought an 'English Reader,' another a 'National,' and another an 'Eclectic,' and the 'golden tressed' young lady, the second volume of a novel, in which she 'allows' she can learn to pronounce the hard words as well as in anything else. Such a 'power' of books, and no two alike. It is dismaying. At length we commence operations by endeavoring to hear little roguish-eyed 'Johnny' say his letters. 'Tis a novel task; but the memory of our good dame, whose instructions enlightened our infancy, assists us.

'What's that letter, Johnny?'

'Dat's A, I reckon.'

'And that?'

'What? dat little felly down yonder? Dat's J, aint it?'

Our gravity is in great danger of a capsize; and, to increase its peril, a three-year-old urchin, whose age will account for his strange syntax, looks up, and with a very serious face remarks, 'Miss, I hope school will quit commencing before it gets very long.' A sentiment with which we entirely sympathize, when we have by a mental process decided his meaning.

We proceed to arrange the larger pupils into classes; but what a task! In geography, Smith, Olney, Worcester, and Mitchell, each presents a world-established claim. In grammar, Murray, Smith, and Kirkham, are disjunctively imperative and absolute; and in arithmetic the multiplication of authors overpowers us. In despair at ever bringing order out of this chaos of science, we manage, we know not how, until noon, when the happy children caper about in rejoicing freedom among the dinner baskets.

'Is them Ingin rubbers?' asks a girl, turning the overshoes about as carefully as if they were made of gold. 'I've heered on 'em, but I never seen any before.'

'Let's go out and play,' says another.

'No; Pap and Mother said I should'nt go out in the sun to get the agur.'

'Oh, the mistress says it is time to take up school!'

'Do you allow for us to write this evening?' This presents another difficulty. There is no desk or table; but the art of penmanship must be taught, since it was so 'nominated in the bond.' The ready invention of the children supplies a way. The high bench which 'Jeames' had chosen is placed behind a lower one, and serves the purpose of a desk.

The spelling class next requires attention. Delightful; every child has a Webster's spelling-book. But one or two have disappeared between the boards, and the entrance to the lower regions is raised by two stout girls, revealing the missing volumes, together with the dead carcass of a rabbit, several rat-holes, bits of earthenware, paper rags, and so forth. It is again closed; but before the word is fairly spelled, the tramp of cloven feet is heard; a horned head is thrust in at the possibility of a window; at the same moment a timid 'baa—baa' echoes over the prairie, and a crowd of very sheepish looking spectators surround the door. 'Shoe!' cries the young gentleman who wishes school to 'quit commencing,' involuntarily leaping from his seat; and, with one bound, our visitors are gone.

A VALUABLE DISCOVERY.

One of the most useful discoveries of the day appears to be a substance discovered some four years ago, in Sharon, near Akron, Ohio, by Mr. Wm. Blake, and since very largely introduced as a substitute for slate and iron in fire-proof roofs, and for other purposes. It is a metal, which, when taken from the mine, has the appearance of the finest indigo, and is about the consistence of cold tallow, but exposed to the atmosphere, in a few days becomes as hard as stone. Previous to being used, it is ground to a fine powder, and mixed with linseed oil, and applied with a brush, to either wood, tin, iron, canvas, or paper, and in a few months it turns to stone or slate, protecting whatever is covered, both from the action of the weather, and from fire; as the weather serves only to turn it to stone, and the longer the exposure, the harder it seems to become; and fire only chars the wood which has been covered by it, but it does not ignite, if the covering remains unbroken, as it keeps out the atmosphere.

Slates for schools are made from it, by covering thin boards or thick paper with it, and after it gets hard, it will show pencil-marks equal to the best slate. It is also susceptible of the highest polish, resembling the finest Egyptian marble, and it may, therefore, be found valuable for chimney-pieces, centre and pier tables, etc., as you have only to make the wood, and cover it with this paint, and after it hardens, polish it down, as you do marble. But its greatest value and consumption, we think, will be for roofs of buildings, steamboat and car decks, bridges—especially railroad bridges—fences, etc. etc. where we want them both fire-proof and weather-proof. Mr. B. sells it, we understand, at his mill, in barrels, ready to mix with the oil, at $3 per 100 lbs. This quantity will cover a roof 32 feet square, or 1000 superficial feet, the cost of the oil, and putting on, is the same as for ordinary painting. It may be applied to tin, iron, zinc or shingle roofs, already on. If your roof has been long shingled, you need not take them off, but sweep off all the moss and lint with a stiff broom, and cover them with this artificial slate, and in a few months you have what is equal to a perfect slate roof.

It is said that there is nothing equal to it for all iron work that is exposed to the weather, as it forms a complete stone covering, becoming nearly as hard as the iron itself, and entirely prevents its corroding. [N. Y. Tribune.

CURIOUS CLOCKS.

Almost every person has heard of the curious clocks of Strasburg, and Lyons in France, and we were of the opinion that they were the most wonderful in the world, yet we have discovered that there are two in China, made about thirty years ago for the Emperor, by the East India Company, which are perhaps the most wonderful.

The two clocks are in the form of chariots, in each of which a lady is placed in a fine attitude, leaning her right hand on a part of the chariot, under which appears a clock of curious workmanship, little larger than a shilling, that strikes, and repeats, and goes for eight days. On the lady's finger sits a bird finely modeled, and set with diamonds and rubies, with its wings expanded in a flying posture, and which actually flutters for a considerable time, on touching a diamond button below it; the body of the bird, in which are contained part of the wheels that animate it, is less than the 16th part of an inch. The lady holds in her left hand a golden tube, little thicker than a large pin, on the top of which is a small round box, to which is fixed a circular ornament, not larger than a sixpence, set with diamonds, which goes round for three hours in a constant regular motion.

Over the lady's head is a double umbrella, supported by a small fluted pillar not thicker than a quill; under the cover of which a bell is fixed at a considerable distance from the clock, with which it seems to have no connection, but from which a communication is secretly conveyed to a hammer that regularly strikes the hour, and repeats the same at pleasure, by touching a diamond button fixed to the clock below. At the feet of the lady is a golden dog; before which, from the point of the chariot, are two birds fixed on spiral springs, having their wings and feathers set with stones of various colors, and they appear as if flying away with the chariot, which, from another secret motion, is contrived to run in any direction, either straight or circular, while a boy, that lays hold of the chariot behind, appears to push it forward. Above the umbrella are flowers and ornaments of precious stones; and it terminates with a flying dragon set in the same manner. The whole is of gold, most curiously executed, and embellished with rubies and pearls.

ROMANCE OF INSURRECTION.

The death of Laroche, editor of the Pere Duchesne, and president of the most revolutionary club in Paris, is a sad blow to the ultra-democrats, as it is well-known that he was the head of the party, and the most active planner of the insurrection. The circumstances of his death are as romantic as those connected with that of any hero of ancient ballad. He was one of the handsomest men in Paris, and seems to have possessed, in an eminent degree, the art of captivating all who approached him. He was well-known in the Boulevard des Italiens, where he might be seen every evening in kid gloves and varnished boots, smoking his scented cigar upon the chauesse, opposite Tortoni's. He was always accompanied by a young lad of about fifteen, to whom he seemed much attached, and who is reported to be a foundling adopted by him. The same boy, attired, like Laroche, in a blouse and casquette, was seen during the fight combating, without a moment's respite, at his side, following him wherever he went, loading his gun, and frequently standing before him when he paused to give orders. Laroche fell at the very moment when the National Guard took the barricade, and the insurgents fled to intrench themselves behind another one raised at a short distance. But Laroche's companion fled not; he remained with his hand locked in that of the dead man, and gazing in speechless agony upon the gaping wound in his side from which the life-blood oozed away. He spoke not; he moved not, when the surgeons came to transport the dead and relieve the wounded. It required almost superhuman force to tear his hand from that of the corpse. He was taken, still apparently in a state of unconsciousness, to a neighboring house, where he died, without having uttered a word or tasted food of any kind since the event, which seems to have separated the soul from the body long before death. [London Atlas.

AN INDIAN WOMAN'S LIFE.

It is often remarked by the traveler among the Indian tribes, how degraded and sad is the lot of woman. It seems as if she had been crushed and bowed to the earth, in order that man might be more savage and ferocious. A recent traveler remarks:

As to labor, the bowed down and wrinkled squaw does the whole. She takes down the lodge when it is moved, rolls together the mats, and puts them, the kettles, and papoose, on her back. The husband loiters along with his gun. When loaded, she looks like a beast of burden, covered with packages, under which she is just able to move. When game is killed, she goes to the hunting-ground for it; when they are on a lake or river, she places the nets, and takes away the fish. At twenty-five she is old, and at forty decrepid—she is the most disgusting, the most pitiful object in human form, that can be imagined.

On the contrary, foreigners have often observed, that in our country, where we have supplanted the Red Man, courtesy to woman is the distinguishing trait of our people, and we verily believe that this very manifestation of character is the best evidence that we are a superior nation. The elevation of woman is the distinctive mark of an advancing civilization.

AMSTERDAM.

A correspondent of Bentley's Miscellany, speaking of Amsterdam, says: "Like a toad, the city sits squat upon the marshes; and her people push out the waters, and pile up the earth against them, and sit quietly down to smoke. Ships come home from India, and ride at anchor before their doors, coming in from the sea through paths they have opened in the sand, and unloading their goods on quays that quiver on the bogs. Amsterdam is not the most pleasant place in the world, when a June sun is shining hot upon the dead waters of its canals, and their green surface is only disturbed by the sluggish barges, or the slops of the tidy housemaids. I went through the streets of the merchant princes of Amsterdam. A broad canal sweeps through the centre, full of every kind of craft, and the dairy-women land their milk from their barges on the quay in front of the very proudest doors. The houses and half the canals are shaded with deep-leaved lindens, and the carriages rattle under them with the tall houses on one side, and the waters on the other. No where are girls' faces prettier than in Holland: complexions pearly-white, with just enough of red in them to give a healthier bloom, and their hands are fair, soft, and tapering, as their eyes are full of mirth, witchery and fire.

THREE GRADATIONS OF LOVE.

A Christian, says Richard Baxter, doth love God in these three gradations: he loveth him much for his mercy to himself, and for that goodness which consists in benignity to himself; but he loveth him more for his mercy to the church, and for that goodness which consisteth in his benignity to the church. But he loveth him most of all for his infinite perfections and essential excellencies, his infinite power, and wisdom, and goodness, simply in himself considered. For he knoweth that love to himself obligeth him to returns of love; especially differencing, saving grace; and he knoweth that the souls of millions are worth more incomparably than his own, and that God may be much more honored by them than by him alone, and therefore he knoweth that the mercy to many is greater mercy, and a greater demonstration of the goodness of God, and therefore doth render him more amiable to man. And yet he knoweth that essential perfection and goodness of God, as simply in himself and for himself, is much more amiable than his benignity to the creature.

FIGHT BETWEEN A RAT AND A FROG.—The Dover Gazette gives the following account of a most singular and desperate encounter between a frog and a rat, at a brook near a slaughter-house, in that town, a few days since:—"It appears that a rat came down to the brook to drink, and discovering a frog, 'with force and arms,' made an attack upon him, by making a firm grasp with his teeth; no sooner did the rat make his hold, than the frog dove into the water, dragging his antagonist with him, where he remained until the rat was compelled to let go, and make for dry land, closely pursued by the frog. As soon as the frog appeared above water he was again attacked by the rat, and a second time became the subject for cold water bathing. This feat was several times performed, until the rat, from exhaustion and drowning, fell a prey to his antagonist. After the frog became fully assured that his combatant was dead, he seated himself upon his dead carcass with all the complaisance imaginable, where he remained nearly half an hour, exulting as it were over his hard-won victory. Several persons were present and witnessed the fight."

WORTH KNOWING.—An article in the New York Tribune, exposing the mock auction villanies in this city, makes the following statement:—"Let all strangers remember, once for all, that there is no establishment in the city where real watches and valuable jewelry are sold at auction. Such goods can neither be bought nor sold at any great reduction from the standard price. Whoever offers them thus, is a swindler or a thief. Either he has stolen what he sells, or else the articles he offers are nothing but paste and galvanized pewter, and are utterly worthless. By following this plain direction, the stranger in New York will save his money and avoid being obliged to regard himself as a fool and a spooney."

INVOCATION OF SAINTS.—When Dr. Barnes, a Lutheran, was condemned to the flames on account of his religious scruples, in the reign of Henry VIII., he discussed theological questions even at the stake; and as the dispute between him and the sheriff turned upon the invocation of saints, he said he doubted whether the saints could pray for us; but if they could, he hoped in half an hour to be praying for the sheriff and all the spectators.

THE LATE IRISH INSURRECTION.

The following appears in the Morning Chronicle; it is from an occasional correspondent, dated Mullinahone, Aug. 16:—

"Much has been said and written on the 'rise and progress,' as well as the 'decline and fall,' of the Irish rebellion of 1848, but as yet the public cannot clearly understand how it came to pass that a conspiracy so deeply laid, organized, and wide-spread, could have been so easily crushed; crushed almost without an effort on the part of the conspirators; I shall tell you. At a respectable farmer's house, not many miles south of the city of Kilkenny, there met on the 25th of July, the Tuesday previous to the affair at Ballingarry, seven of the principal leaders of the insurrectionary movement. It was, in point of fact, a council of war. The first subject brought under consideration had reference, naturally enough, to the Commissariat; and the question was proposed, 'How were the rebel forces to be maintained?' This interrogatory was at once answered by one of the most youthful, and certainly the most chivalrous and gifted, of the insurgent leaders. 'How are we to maintain our friends,' said he, 'but at the expense of our enemies? Those who are not with us are against us, and we shall make them pay the penalty of their disloyalty to their country.' All were in favor of this bold, decided, and, under the circumstances, certainly not unreasonable proposition, save one, and that one was Smith O'Brien. 'I belong,' he replied, 'to an ancient family; perhaps the oldest in Europe, whose honor has remained untainted during a succession of ages, and it shall never be said that I tarnished its fair fame by having recourse to plunder and robbery, no matter in what cause or under what circumstance.' A discussion, or rather an altercation of an angry character, ensued. Arguments as well as threats were used to induce the descendant of the hero of Clontarf to change his opinion, but to no purpose; and those who know anything of the personal character of M. O'Brien will not be surprised at the display of pertinacity. Eventually the majority separated from Smith O'Brien, and retired into an adjoining apartment, for the purpose of deliberating on the best mode of getting rid of him; and one individual even went so far as to propose a method of a very summary character for effecting that object. The council broke up in despair, without resolving on anything. The leaders separated, each left to his own discretion, and the result is well known. Thus it was that the rebellion was strangled at the very moment of its birth, and to the divisions of those who labored so seduously to bring it into existence is the country indebted for a deliverance from all the horrors of civil war. The pride of Smith O'Brien has been at once the 'bane and antidote' of Ireland. The 74th regiment broke up its encampment at Callan yesterday, and will be replaced, it is said, by the 57th."

IMPROVED BEDSTEAD.—We learn from the "Blue Hen's Chickens," that Mr. John Jebo, a cabinet-maker of Wilmington, (Del.,) has made a decided improvement in the article of bedstead. Instead of being screwed up at the head and foot, it is made fast; thereby avoiding the usual harbor for bugs. Half way between the head and foot, the side-pieces are sawed in two, and a strong hinge attached, by screws, so that when you wish to remove the bedstead from one room to another, all you have to do is to raise it in the middle, by means of the hinge, and it folds the head and foot together, like a cot, and thus you can, at once, carry it through a door, or up stairs, without the trouble of unscrewing the head and foot. The gentleman who has made this improvement, was the inventor of the life-preserving trunk, in which a voyager went by water from Washington to Philadelphia. [Farmer and Mechanic.

REVOLVING HEELS TO BOOTS.—We yesterday, says the Baltimore Clipper, examined a beautiful boot, made by Mr. Robert T. Harman, to which he has attached what is called the Revolving Heel, an invention of his own, for which he is about to take out a patent. The heel is put on by means of a screw, and can be taken off or put on by a single turn of the hand. A great many persons usually wear one side of the heels off in a few days, and thus, although "as good as new," make them set uneven and assume an ugly shape. By this invention, it is only necessary to give the screw a slight turn with the hand, and the side of the heel not worn off is made to take the place of the one which is gone, so that the boot soon again sets evenly, as well as easily, on the foot.

"I HAVE NO COMPLAINTS TO MAKE."—This was the language of a woman at Trenton, N. J., who had been completely disfigured by a brutal assault from her husband. Her eyes and face were swollen in black and disgusting blotches, inflicted by the rude hands of a brutal husband, who had vowed to protect and love her. But when the officers of the law appeared to redress her wrongs, she meekly replied—"I have no complaints to make." Who can find language to speak the affection of that woman?

Mr. John Holmes, of Massachusetts, has made improvements in the mode of constructing fiddles, whereby the volume of sound is concentrated and made far more powerful than by the present manner in which they are made. The invention does not relate to additional strings—the outside is unaltered—but by the combination of steel-wires brought to an extraordinary degree of tension and fitted in the interior of the instrument, a poor and indifferent violin can be made equal to the finest, at least in the depth and fullness of tone.

The Pennsylvania Cultivator publishes a communication from Jonah Oglesby, of Dauphin county, stating that the best, indeed the only preservative against the Hessian fly, is to destroy by fire the wheat, oat and rye stubble. He affirms that he never had a fly in any wheat which was sown in a field which had just before been fired over.

In an admonition addressed by the present Emperor of China to the officers of the government, is this remarkable passage: "He who sincerely loves his country, leaves the fragrance of a good name to an hundred ages; he who does not, leaves a name that stinks tens of thousands of years."

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

BOARD OF INSTRTCTION.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., } Principals.
IRA SAYLES, A. M., }

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage.

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULATIONS.

1. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.
2. Punctuality in attending all regular Academic exercises will be required.
3. The use of Tobacco, for chewing or smoking, will not be allowed either in or about the Academic buildings.
4. Playing at games of chance cannot be allowed.
5. Using profane language cannot be allowed.
6. The use of any kind of intoxicating drinks cannot be allowed, unless prescribed in case of sickness, by a regular physician.
7. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, cannot be permitted.
8. Gentlemen and ladies of the Institution will not be permitted to visit the rooms of the opposite sex, except in cases of imperious necessity, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.
9. Good order must be maintained at all times, and in all the rooms and halls of the Institution, and in all the intercourse of students with each other.
10. All students are required to retire regularly at the ringing of the bell designated for that purpose, as occasion may require; and to rise at the ringing of the morning bell, also designated.
11. Any room, occupied by students, will, at all times, be subject to the visitation of the Teachers of the Institution, who are required to see that the regulations are complied with.
12. Students will be required to keep their own rooms in good order, and to pay all unnecessary damages, either of rooms or of furniture furnished with the rooms.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

GOVERNMENT.

The Government of the students will be in the hands of the Principals, and will be strictly and steadily exercised, and at the same time, strictly parental. The object of our academic government being to secure the greatest possible amount of physical, intellectual, and moral good to the students themselves, regularity and order of exercises, and good and wholesome citizens to society. No unwarrantable means will be made use of to enforce the observance of the above regulations; yet our constant endeavor will be, to make the means resorted to as effective as human means may be.

Parents who place their children in this Institution, and all students who are sufficiently old to understand the necessity of order, cannot be too well assured that the foregoing regulations form the most essential part of the contract between them and us; and that whatever student wantonly violates them, and shows himself incorrigibly determined on pursuing his waywardness, will be expelled from the privileges of the Institution, and will not be permitted to re-enter it again, without special proof of reformation. Nor will an expelled student have any deduction made from full term charges.

Farther, parents are requested not to place money for expenses, in the hands of students who are not old enough to use money with discretion and economy. Either of the Principals, or the Book-keeper of the Institution, will act as fiscal guardian of such students without charge.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

EXPENSES.

|---|---|
| Board, per term, | from $14 50 to $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | 1 50 |
| Washing, | 2 50 |
| Fuel, spring and fall, | 75 cents, winter, 1 50 |
| Tuition, | from $3 50 to 5 00 |
| Lights, | 1 50 |
| Incidental Expenses, | 25 |
| EXTRAS—Music on the Piano Forte, | 10 00 |
| Oil Painting, | 7 00 |
| Drawing. | 2 00 |

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except the extras above mentioned) need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall, should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchanges and losses.

SAMUEL RUSSELL,
President of the Board of Trustees.

The Sabbath Recorder.

JAMES A. BEGG ON THE SABBATH.

The recognition of the Sabbath, and its having been devoted to spiritual exercises, is implied in the expostulation of the husband of the pious and hospitable "great woman" of Shunam, when she was about to set off to the prophet Elisha, at Mount Carmel, to entreat for the life of her child: "Wherefore will ye go to him to-day? It is neither new moon nor Sabbath?" 2 Kings 4: 23. To these allusions I thus refer, because it is only in such incidental notices that we are enabled historically to trace the continued observance by Israel of the appointed Sabbath of the Lord. But even from such allusions as that of this Shunamite, we are entitled to conclude that, besides its more public observance in the temple and otherwise, it was no unusual thing for the faithful, on Sabbaths and new moons, to meet for instruction and worship—resorting, when opportunities were afforded, to prophets and other public instructors for fellowship and guidance.

In the days of King Joash, when Jehoiada the priest labored for the reformation of the kingdom of Judah, and when giving directions to the rulers over hundreds, with the captains of the guard, for securing the coronation of Joash, without danger from the machinations of Athaliah, his wicked grandmother, Jehoiada commanded, saying, "This is the thing that ye shall do; a third part of you that enter in on the Sabbath shall even be keepers of the watch of the King's house; and a third part shall be at the gate of Sur; and a third part at the gate behind the guard; so shall ye keep the watch of the house that it be not broken down. And two parts of all of you that go forth on the Sabbath, even they shall keep the watch of the house of the Lord about the King. And ye shall compass the King round about, every man with his weapon in his hand; and he that cometh within the ranges, let him be slain; and be ye with the King as he goeth out, and as he cometh in. And the captains over the hundreds did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest commanded; and they took every man his men that were to come in on the Sabbath, with them that were to go out on the Sabbath, and came to Jehoiada the priest." 2 Kings 11: 5—9.

In the parallel text, (2 Chron. 23: 4, 8,) we have this more fully recorded, the names of "the captains of hundreds" referred to, being inserted. The part which the priests and Levites took in the transaction is also presented, with a reference to their appointed courses: "This is the thing that ye shall do; a third part of you entering on the Sabbath, of the priests and of the Levites, shall be porters of the doors; and a third part shall be at the King's house; and a third part at the gate of the foundation; and all the people shall be in the courts of the house of the Lord." "So the Levites and all Judah did according to all things that Jehoiada the priest had commanded, and took every man his men that were to come in on the Sabbath, with them that were to go out on the Sabbath." The explanation of these two classes coming in on the Sabbath and going out on the Sabbath, we have in the words which immediately follow, "for Jehoiada the priest dismissed not THE COURSES." From this merely incidental notice we learn, that, notwithstanding the general defection of Israel, the appointment by David of the priests and Levites ministering in courses or classes in the temple, was still continued. Of this arrangement Jehoiada, on this occasion availed himself—there being present at the changing of the courses a double number—those whose period of service had just expired, and those who were just about to enter upon it. The change took place weekly; and while one party went in, another went forth on the Sabbath of the Lord. Of the assistance of both, Jehoiada availed himself in dethroning the wicked Athaliah, and for setting Joash on the throne of his fathers.

Amos prophesied in the days of Jeroboam, son of Joash; and in his book, probably both complaining of present disregard of the ordinances of God, and predicting such an evil state as still to come, he exclaims, "Hear this, O ye that swallow up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail, saying, When will the new moon be gone that we may sell corn? and the Sabbath that we may set forth wheat, making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit? that we may buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes; yea, and sell the refuse of the wheat? The Lord hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob, Surely I will never forget any of their works. Shall not the land tremble for this, and every one mourn that dwelleth therein? And it shall rise up wholly as a flood; and it shall be cast out and drowned as by the flood of Egypt. And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day. And I will turn your feasts into mourning, and all your songs into lamentation; and I will bring up sackcloth upon all loins, and baldness upon every head; and I will make it as the mourning of an only son, and the end thereof as a bitter day." Amos 8: 4—10.

Such are the fruits to Israel of disregard of the Sabbath, and other ordinances of divine appointment. In the expressions of God's mind upon the subject, as we thus advance towards the Christian era, we are still as far as ever from finding the slightest intimation of any purposes of absolving from the obligations of the Sabbath, or of changing in any way the day which God had originally hallowed and blessed. Were it not that we have evidence to produce still less liable to question, we would here found an argument on the prediction as evidently looking down to times later far than those in which Amos lived. Let it suffice for our present purpose, that the prophecy contains, in reference to the age in which it was written, a full recognition of continued Sabbath sanctity, containing as it does the divine complaint against the Jews of their disrelish of the Sabbath, because of its standing in the way of their expected gains.

There is an uncertainty as to what is to be understood by "the covert for the Sabbath, that they had built in the house, and the king's country without," which Ahaz turned from the house of the Lord, and the purpose it was intended to serve, when he despoiled the temple, to secure by his presents the favor of the King of Assyria. (2 Kings 18: 18.) But it was a time of great declension; and this sacrilegious act was followed, in the succeeding reign, by a signal display of the divine displeasure, when "the King of Assyria came up throughout all the land, and went up to Samaria, and besieged it three years. In the ninth year of Hoshea, the King of Assyria took Samaria, and carried Israel away into Assyria, and placed them in Halah, and in Habor, by the river of Gozan, and in the cities of the Medes. For so it was, that the children of Israel had sinned against the Lord their God, which had brought them up out of the land of Egypt, from under the hand of Pharaoh King of Egypt, and had feared other gods, and walked in the statutes of the heathen." 2 Kings 17: 5—8. Thus even that captivity from which the Ten Tribes have never been recalled, has one point of connection, however obscure, with the Sabbath of the Lord.

When Hezekiah came to the throne, he reformed many abuses, promoted the observance of divine ordinances, and provided for the sacrifices which God had enjoined. "Then the priests and the Levites arose and blessed the people; and their voice was heard, and their prayer came up to His holy dwelling-place, even unto heaven." 2 Chron. 30: 27. Hezekiah's authority went forth, recommended by his example; for having "appointed the courses of the priests and the Levites after their courses, every man according to his service, the priests and Levites for burnt-offerings, and for peace-offerings, to minister and to give thanks, and to praise in the gates of the tents of the Lord; he appointed also the King's portion of his substance for the burnt-offerings, to wit, for the morning and evening burnt-offerings, and the burnt-offerings for the Sabbaths, and for the new moons, and for the set feasts, as it is written in the law of the Lord;" and the people "brought in abundance the first fruits of corn, wine, and oil, and honey, and of all the increase of the field; and the tithe of all things brought they in abundantly." 2 Chron. 31: 2—5.

Of the reigns which followed that of Hezekiah, before the Babylonish captivity, we have that of the good King Josiah, who, having "found a Book of the Law of the Lord given by Moses," in the Temple, "made a covenant before the Lord, to walk after the Lord, and to keep His commandments, and His testimonies, and His statutes, with all his heart, and with all his soul, to perform the words of the covenant which are written in this Book. And he caused all that were present in Jerusalem and Benjamin to stand to it. And the inhabitants of Jerusalem did according to the covenant of God, the God of their fathers." 2 Chron. 34: 14, 31, 32.

During the reigns which followed, Israel is characterized by deep apostacy from the true God, till that of Zedekiah, who "hardened his heart from turning unto the Lord God of Israel. Moreover all the chief of the priests, and the people transgressed very much, after all the abominations of the heathen." On this account, they were given over into the hands of the King of Babylon, "who slew their young men with the sword in the House of their Sanctuary, and had no compassion upon young man or maiden, old man or him that stooped for age; He gave them all into his hand." 2 Chron. 36: 13, 17. Now it is instructive in reaching this sad stage of Judah's history, to note God's reason for this His dread poceedure with His people. "Them that had escaped from the sword, carried he away to Babylon, where they were servants to him and his sons until the reign of the kingdom of Persia; to fulfil the word of the Lord, by the mouth of Jeremiah, until the land had enjoyed her Sabbaths; for as long as she lay desolate she kept Sabbath, to fulfil threescore and ten years." Ver. 20, 21.

Jeremiah and Moses are thus in harmony; not merely in respect of both speaking the word of the Lord, but as showing the mind of God concerning the Sabbath to be still the same in the later times of the one, that it had been in the earlier days of the other. Jeremiah had indeed entreated Judah, saying, "Thus saith the Lord, stand ye in the ways and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein." Jer. 6: 16. Our translation does not give the full force to the original in the call of the prophet. The "good way" in which the Jews are thus called to walk, is not merely "the old paths," (old though they were,) but from the usage of the Hebrew word, would with more propriety read, "the perpetual paths." The covenant of the Lord with Israel continues to be regarded by the Most High as a perpetual covenant, even when He has to complain of His people, "Ye have broken my covenant." [To be continued.

A ROUGH GUESS.—Mr. O'Connel, speaking of the Established Church in Ireland, and the contrast between its past and present ministers, related an incident illustrative of Episcopal 'good nature.' A Mr. Barry, brother of Lord Barrymore, had in the course of the last century, been desirous to qualify himself, by taking orders, for the enjoyment of an excellent living in the gift of his Lordship. The bishop to whom he applied for ordination had expressed some fears that Barry's theological knowledge was not sufficient for the ordinary duties of the pulpit, and recommended further study to the postulant. Not long afterwards Barry was ordained, and appointed to the living. A friend who knew him intimately, asked how he contrived to get over his examination? "Oh, very well indeed," replied the Rev. Mr. Barry. "The bishop was very good natured, and did not puzzle me with many questions." "But what did he ask you?' enquired the other. 'Why he asked me who was the great Mediator between God and man, and I made a rough guess, and said it was the Archbishop of Canterbury."

WHO MADE THE LITTLE FLOWER?

The Atheist in his garden stood,
At twilight's pensive hour;
His little daughter by his side,
Was gazing on a flower.

"O, pick that blossom, pa, for me,"
The little prattler said;
"It is the fairest one that blooms Within that lowly bed."

The father plucked the chosen flower,
And gave it to the child—
With parted lips, and sparkling eye,
She seized the gift, and smiled.

"O, pa—who made this pretty flower,
This little violet blue?
Who gave it such a fragrant smell,
And such a lively hue?"

A change came o'er the father's brow;
His eyes grew strangely wild;
New thoughts within him had been stirred
By the sweet artless child.

The truth flashed on the father's mind—
The truth in all its power;
"There is a God, my child," he said,
"He made that little flower."

From the New York Evangelist.

LEIPSIC FAIR.

Who has not heard of the great fairs of Leipsic, and who, that has not himself resided here during these three weeks of excitement, business, and frolicking, has the remotest idea of what they are, unless, perchance, from the minute description of some kind friend or traveler!

I have frequently tried to compare these fairs to something in America, but as frequently failed in the attempt. Sometimes it has seemed to me they slightly resemble (the frolicking part of them, I mean,) a protracted American Fourth of July, or New England "general training;" but then they lack the cannon, pistols and fire-crackers, the drunkenness and fighting that seems to form a necessary part of these our great national festivities.

Our annual fairs give not the most distant notion of them, for they are merely exhibitions of the best specimens of goods, fruit, machinery, agricultural implements, &c., and the fairs that American ladies sometimes give to "help support the minister," "pay off the church debt," or "educate young men," it would be very unfair to make mention of at all in this connection.

But I must try to give some idea of it—faint and weak though it may be—as we are now in the midst of the greatest, and usually the most splendid, the "Oster Messe," Easter Fair. (There are three during the year.) These fairs are composed of the merchants and traders from all parts of Europe, and also from America, who meet here for the purpose of buying, selling, and getting gain. Every hotel and lodging house is filled to overflowing, the streets are thronged with strange faces and costumes; Jews from Poland, Tyrolese, Americans, and even Persians from Teflis, Armenians, Turks, and Greeks, are here mingled as in a masquerade, and most of the countries of Europe send representatives hither with their produce. Three or four hundred guests sit down daily to the tables-d'hote of the principal hotels; the gardens and coffee-houses are also thronged. To all who love to study character from human countenances, the Leipsic Fair will afford constant and interesting employment. Within the last fourteen days, the arrivals have amounted to about 25,000 souls, and this is a very small number indeed for the Easter Fairs; but the great pressure in the money market, together with the unsettled political state of the country, has made the present one of the dullest seasons ever known, and you can hear nothing but "Freiheit Versamlungs"—freedom meetings, and hard times.

As to the "amusements." Under this head I shall not include music (properly so-called) though it is the most refined of the amusements, but make the subject of another letter.

It requires the "great men," it is true, to give the fair weight and character, but it equally needs the small ones to give it that peculiar life and vivacity, at no other season or place to be found. The business—which must take its turn after the amusements and music—is done in the heart of the city proper. The fun is chiefly outside. Long rows of booths and temporary houses are erected on the "horse market," a wide, open space of that name, with a moderately good thoroughfare between them. About half a dozen of the buildings are occupied for all kinds of puppet-shows, and mechanisms, wonders of nature and art, cows with two heads, and goats with half a dozen horns, circular railroads for the little children, and pop-gun shooting alleys for those of larger growth. The other half of the booths are fitted up as refreshment rooms. And I may as well add here, that although immense quantities of this German beer is drunk, (for it is a universal beverage,) and even much stronger liquor also, yet I have scarcely seen an intoxicated person during the whole of these first ten days of the fair; and I do not recollect of having seen more than five or six during my whole residence in Leipsic.

All things being ready, the fair opens—to the shame and disgrace of the land of Martin Luther and of the reformation be it said—on Sunday, and that is the greatest day of the seven for all kinds of business and pleasure. Eating and drinking, frolicking, swinging, dancing and singing, merry-making of every imaginable kind, puppet-shows, menageries and museums are under full sail. Little bands are playing, hand organs are grinding, guitars are thumbing, itinerant blind fiddlers are sawing, flutes are blowing, and bass drums are pounding, all at the same time, and within a few feet of each other, and each, of course, playing on his own account, and for his own especial benefit. Add to this the squealing of monkeys and the screeching of parrots, with the occasional roar of wild beasts, the rough voice of the local advertisers or criers, each at the door of his own tent, straining his leathern lungs to their utmost tension, in order to outthunder his next neighbor, who, in his humble sphere, is endeavoring with all his might and main to entice the bystanders into his own den, the sights of which he extols with all the superlatives he has learned in his own language, borrowing occasionally from his French neighbor, altogether make up a scene so indescribably odd, ludicrous and confused, that one is completely bewildered. This scene is kept up incessantly for three weeks, and were it not that the Sabbath is here regarded more as a holiday than a day of retirement, meditation and prayer, the government would undoubtedly put a stop to such doings on that day.

A CHINESE CONVERT.

The following account of a Chinese convert to Christianity, is given by Dr. Ball, Missionary at Canton, through the Missionary Herald:—

Since the middle of January I have been assisted in the Fu-kien service by Thum Tsae, who was baptized six years ago in Singapore. His attention, as he says, was first directed to the Christian religion, by a tract which he received from me on the highway, in one of my excursions into the country for distributing tracts. After reading the tract, his mind was excited to make further inquiries respecting this new religion. He wrote a letter to me, asking for more books and more light on this interesting subject. This led to an interview.—He became a regular attendant on a meeting held in my house on Sundays, and an interesting inquirer, frequently coming during the week to receive instruction. He lived some few miles in the country, and so was unable to attend the two weekly meetings that were held at night. After some weeks of instruction, he desired to make a profession of religion, and become a member of Christ's church. About this time I left Singapore for China; and this man, together with the little prayer meetings and the Sunday meeting, was committed to the care of Rev. Mr. McBryde.

Not long after this, he was examined by Messrs. Abeel and McBryde, and baptized by the latter. He continued at his regular business as farmer or gardener, attending on the service of different missionaries, till last year, when he came up to Hong Kong. He has borne an excellent character among the missionaries that have known him. He manifests an ardent zeal for the salvation of souls. He does not wait to be urged to address his countrymen. "He need not be wound up," to use the language of another, "before he can run," but he can speak, and then speak again and again, from his own promptings. He receives regular and almost daily instruction in the Scriptures, with others, from a member of my family.

He seldom converses on any other subject than that of religion; and it is most interesting and profitable to listen to him. Early and late is he engaged reading the Bible or some other religious book; and he never allows an opportunity of talking to any who understand him to pass unimproved. I have often been rather amused at his conduct. When he sees me alone he comes and asks if I am well; and after a little while I miss him. But in a few moments he will return with a Testament in his hand; and if I happen to be disengaged, he begs me to spend a little while in explaining to him those verses or portions of Scripture which are not perfectly clear to his mind; and often I have spent one or two hours at a time reading and talking to him. But he will never say it is enough; and I have always been obliged to tell him that I could not, at that hour, spend more time with him. I have counted on one occasion more than twenty leaves turned down at different places in his Testament, which he desired to be explained. A missionary friend of ours, not long ago, wished to examine him; and various important questions were asked, to all of which he gave most satisfactory and interesting answers.

We regret that he does not speak the Canton dialect, for his opportunities of proclaiming the glad tidings of salvation would be far greater. I once spoke to him of attempting to learn this dialect; but he seemed to think he was rather to old. (He was now fifty years of age.) He watches every junk that comes in; and he is soon on board with his bundle of tracts, of which he gives away but few, spending most of his time in lecturing to those on board. Oh, how zealous he is, and how anxious that others may taste, as he has done, and see that the Lord is good! He is evidently a praying Christian; and, indeed, religion seems to be his meat and drink.

When he sees females coming to us, he often comes to me and says, "Preach, preach to the women! Their hearts are not as hard as those of the men; they will listen; and tell them to repent." So you see, he is not only busy himself, but anxious to keep others at work.

He mourns that so few are converted, and that of the few who profess Christ, many, as we believe, are false to him. He said one day to me, "Oh, last night, when partaking of the communion, the tears rolled down my cheeks, as I was thinking of the love of Jesus." My father has had but little time to devote to him; and this is the reason of my seeing so much of him. I feel that it is a privilege to have him in the house. He is kind, and pleasant in his manners; and, when conversing on the subject of religion, quite animated.

THE RUSSIAN CHURCHES.

These edifices generally resemble one another exactly in form. They are built in the shape of a Greek cross, and surmounted by a dome in the center. In the interior, one arm of the cross is shut off by a gorgeous screen adorned with stately pillars, and containing large folding doors, covered with gilded carving. The space behind the screen is the sanctum sanctorum, and always contains a figure of our Savior in a glass case, which is made use of in certain ceremonies. The altar is also here, and though we found no difficuly in gaining admission to the mysteries of their shrines, no woman is ever permitted to enter their sacred precincts; while the carpet in front of the altar is never trodden but by the priest alone. The whole interior is always devoid of seat or pew, as the worshipers of the Greek religion pray standing; but there is in every church a place set apart for the Emperor to stand in, which is raised above the floor, and usually covered with a canopy or small dome. All the churches in St. Petersburg, except that of the Smolnei monastery, are filled with banners, horse's tails, keys of fortresses, and other spoils of various wars. Turkish, Persian, Polish, Swedish and French colors are grouped around the massive columns; keys of vanquished cities, and insignia of conquered generals adorn the wall; while over the trophies of her victorious children soars in triumphant majesty the black eagle of the north, and seems here to be nearly as sacred a symbol as the cross of Christ. The Greek churches contain no statues; but pictures of different saints are hung around in great profusion; the face, feet and hands of the holy personage whom the painting represents, are the only parts of the body or drapery visible, as the rest of the picture is covered with either gold or silver plates, and sometimes studded with precious stones of immense value: so we generally, in the richest pictures, see the face of the holy departed peeping through a pavement of gems, the hands springing from a diamond wristband, and the feet potruding from an emerald petticoat. The churches and their treasuries are always guarded by one or two old soldiers, who lie on a bench near the door, rolled in their sheepskins, and who are delighted to show everything to strangers, in expectation of the copeck that usually reward their civility. The service is chaunted, and the continual crossing and genuflexion practiced by the worshipers far exceed what I have seen in Catholic countries.

The sacred music is generally excellent, and the imperial choir, whereof I shall hereafter speak, is the finest in the world. Instrumental music is totally excluded from their churches.

A ROYAL LESSON ON HUMANITY.

Queen Caroline, wife of George the Second, being informed that her eldest daughter (afterwards Princess of Orange) was accustomed, at going to rest, to employ one of the ladies of the court in reading aloud to her till she should drop asleep, and that on one occasion the Princess suffered the lady, who was indisposed, to continue the fatiguing duty until she fell down in a swoon, determined to inculcate on her daughter a lesson of humanity. The next night, the Queen, when in bed, sent for the Princess, and commanded her to read to her aloud. After some time her royal highness began to be tired of standing, and paused, in hopes of receiving an order to be seated. "Proceed," said her majesty. In a short time a second pause seemed to plead for rest. "Read on," said the Queen again. The Princess again stopped, and again received an order to proceed, till at length, faint and breathless, she was forced to complain. "Then," said this excellent parent, "if you thus feel the pain of this exercise for one evening only, what must your attendants feel who do it every night? Hence learn, my daughter, never to indulge your own ease, while you suffer your attendants to endure unnecessary fatigue." [Noble Deeds of Women.

THE SULKY GIRL.

Mr. Robert Raikes visited the parents and children of his school at their houses. He called on a poor woman one day, and found a very refractory girl crying and fretting. Her mother complained that correction was of no avail, obstinacy marked her conduct, and it was very bad. After asking the parent's leave, he began to talk seriously to the girl, and concluded by telling her that, as the first step towards amendment, she must kneel down and ask her mother's pardon. The girl continued sulky.

'Well, then,' says he, 'if you have no regard for yourself, I have much for you. You will be ruined and lost, if you do not become a good girl; and if you will not humble yourself, I must humble myself, and make a beginning for you.'

With that he kneeled down on the ground before the child's mother, and put his hands together with all the solemnity of a juvenile offender. 'Pray forgive,' etc. No sooner did the stubborn girl see him on his knees, on her account, than her pride was overcome at once, and tenderness followed. She burst into tears, and immediately falling on her knees, earnestly entreated forgiveness. Afterwards she never occasioned her mother any trouble.

CHRISTIAN VOTERS.—"I think," says Dr. Wayland, "that every Christian citizen is under obligation to vote in every case where a public officer is to be chosen. The happiness and virtue of the community, no less than the security of property, depend greatly on the character of the magistracy. If I am injured in person or property by a wicked public officer, I have a right to complain of my fellow-citizens who gave him authority over me, or who, when it was in their power, did not prevent his election. A Christian in this country, above all others, has a duty to perform in this matter, and he disobeys the commandment if he does not perform it.

CONSISTENCY.

More Church Spoliation.—The Rev. W. Fraser, pastor of the Baptist Church, Regent street, Lambeth, has just been robbed by the ecclesiastical authorities of a chair, which cost him 4*l.*, to cover a rate of 12s. for the new Churches, Lambeth. The expenses were as follows:—Rate 12s.; expenses 3s. 4d.; levy and man, 5s. 6d.; auctioneer's commission and cart hire, 3s.; total 1*l.* 3s. 10d. The chair was sold for 1*l.* 3s. How long shall such abominations be suffered in the name of religion? Mr. Fraser and his congregation are projecting the building of a new chapel, at the estimated cost of 3,000*l.*, to be raised by the free-will offerings of the people; yet they are to be coerced into the payment of rates to support the richest Ecclesiastical Establishment in the world!

The above paragraph from the London Patriot is going the rounds of the Baptist papers of this country, and furnishes a text for numerous sermons on John Bull's want of conscience in endeavoring to support the Established Church by forced contributions from those who do not attend it. This is all very well in itself, and would perhaps deserve praise if associated with a consistent course in relation to other and similar things. But we are sorry to say, that such is not the case. The editors of many of these Baptist papers, who have so much sympathy for their English brethren, and so much indignation to pour out upon their persecutors, have looked on and seen a community of Baptists in this country suffer a persecution, similar in some respects, but ten-fold worse, with scarcely a word of sympathy for the persecuted, or of reproof for the persecutors. This fact shows a degeneracy from the spirit of the early Baptists, which is painful to behold. The time has been, when the very term Baptist indicated a hater of ecclesiastical domination and oppression, who was not afraid to express his hatred, even if there was popularity and power on the side of the oppressor. It was so when our Sabbatarian brethren, the Stennetts and Bampfields of England, were foremost in opposing the aggressions of the Established Church upon the Dissenters. But things have changed now. The Baptists have become numerous and popular; and in proportion as their numbers and popularity have increased, their tenacity for first principles has decreased. Alas that they should so soon furnish an illustration of the degenerating influence of numbers and popularity.

Does any one question whether the case to which we have alluded in this country, is as aggravated as that in England which awakens so much sympathy? If so, he must be ignorant of the facts, or strangely darkened in his perceptions. In England, the "powers that be" have decreed, that every property-holder shall pay a small tax for the support of a religious establishment which shall be free to all who please to enjoy its benefits—a system in favor of which no doubt many things may be said by those who are accustomed to this mode of providing for the religious instruction of the people. In carrying out this decree, a Baptist minister is taxed twelve shillings sterling, and in default of payment his property is sold to pay the tax and expenses. Now what is that in comparison with the tax laid upon the Seventh-day Baptists of some portions of this country? They believe that they ought to rest from labor on the seventh day of the week, and attend to their work on the first day. But the "powers that be" have decreed that no civil or judicial business shall be transacted on the first day—thus subjecting the Sabbatarians to the loss of one-sixth portion of their time for transacting business, to say nothing of the inconvenience of having the day on which they worship made the busiest and noisiest day of the week. Nor is this all. Not content with robbing them of one-sixth portion of their time for transacting judicial business, the law is so construed as to subject them to fines and imprisonments for even attending to their innocent and unobtrusive labors on their retired farms or in their secluded workshops. And what is all this for? Not to raise money to support religious institutions;—if that were the object, the law would be comparatively innocent;—but no, it is to sustain the dogma that the first day of the week is the Sabbath—a dogma which cannot be supported from the Bible, and is disbelieved by a large portion of the community. Here is a case worthy of sympathy; and we confess our astonishment, that Baptist editors can lavish so much upon a man who is taxed a few shillings to support religious institutions which his conscience does not exactly approve, while they have none to spend upon a community of Baptists, acknowledged to be equally conscientious, who have been taxed hundreds of dollars, with occasional imprisonments in the bargain, to support a questionable religious dogma. Consistency is indeed a rare jewel.

A Quaker Expelled for Paying Tithes.—Mr. Jelico, a Quaker, having, as agent for a number of persons in Kilkenny and Tipperary, paid the tithe rent charge to the various incumbents on the properties under his control, has been expelled by the Society. Mr. Jelico caused application to be made to the Court of Queen's Bench, last winter, for a mandamus to compel the Society of Friends to restore him to their body. The Court held that it had no jurisdiction.

OPENING OF A JEWISH SYNAGOGUE.

The following account of the opening of a Jewish Synagogue in Newark, N. J., is copied from the New York Observer. To the question with which it closes, "When will the eyes of this people be opened to see the King in his glory?" it is not easy to give an explicit answer. One thing, however, we regard as certain, and that is, that their eyes will never be opened through the influence of Christians who trample upon the Sabbath of Jehovah. The Jews know very well, that the Messiah foretold by the prophets was not to abolish the Sabbath of the fourth commandment, or change the day of its observance; and when the claims of Jesus as the Messiah are urged upon them their first and strongest objection to him is based upon the notion that he changed the Sabbath. Intelligent Jews know, as the celebrated Augustus Neander has affirmed, that "opposition to Judaism" introduced the observance of the first day; and that the principal reason for the change of the Sabbath urged by Constantine, that great pioneer in the work, was to place a distinction between the Christians and the Jews, so that, to use his own language, "we may have nothing in common with that most odious brood." The feeling expressed by Constantine has been countenanced and perpetuated from that day to this by the observance of Sunday, subjecting the Jews at times to persecutions and confiscations unparalleled in the history of the world. Who can wonder, that they refuse to listen to the Gospel as proclaimed by those whose practice fosters opposition to them? We do not. On the contrary, we wonder that under existing circumstances any are found to come out from their own people and abandon the Sabbath. O ye who profess so much anxiety for the salvation of Israel, remove the stumbling-blocks which ye have placed in their way, and then will there be some reason for surprise if their eyes are not opened to "see the King in his glory."

Newark, N. J., Sept. 23, 1848.

I was invited last evening to attend the opening of a new place of worship for the Jews in this city. The place was a small upper room in a school-house in Harrison street, not capable of holding more than fifty persons, about half that number being present, of whom perhaps half were Jews.

Mournful indeed it was to see these children of Israel, in their blindness and hardness of heart, here gathered, a little remnant, unnoticed and unknown, meeting in this obscure corner to worship the God of Abraham, and with no knowledge of the way to him through Christ.

The High Priest, carrying the law in a scroll upon his shoulders, and followed by several who officiated as priests, walked in procession around the room, chanting Hebrew passages from the Psalms of David, and now and then ejaculating brief but earnest prayers. Each priest took his turn in heading this procession, and leading the service, which seemed to be sad and painful, as if they mourned the absence of the glory that should shine in the courts of the Lord.

One of them named a text from the history of Solomon's dedicatory service of the temple; and proceeded to make a discourse in English and in German, but his brethren became impatient, and desired him to desist, which he did after speaking a few minutes.

The procession was then renewed, and after prayer and singing, the law was deposited in a closet before which the veil was hung, and the services were brought to a close.

When will the eyes of this people be opened to see the King in his glory?

CHRIST THE END OF THE LAW FOR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

Several weeks ago we published a paragraph on this subject, written by Dr. Chalmers, of Scotland. The following criticism upon it has come to hand, and may interest our readers:—

If I have gained Dr. Chalmers' meaning, which I think I have, his idea is, that we can be justified by nothing short of perfect obedience to the law of God; and inasmuch as we have fallen short of such obedience, we must have Christ's perfect obedience made over to us and become our own; which, I am apprehensive, is a thing utterly impossible, for obedience consists in actions, and I cannot conceive how the act of another can become my act. Thus, you see, he makes out that we are justified by the deeds of the law; not by our own deeds, however, but by the deeds of another made ours. I have not so learned Christ. The Scriptures tell us, that we are justified by his blood, not by his righteousness imputed to us. It is the blood of Christ, that cleanseth us from all sin. 1 John 1: 7. The Bible says we are reconciled to God by the death of his Son, not by his righteousness. I find no such language in all the Bible as that of his righteousness being imputed to us. I understand that it is by the forgiveness of sin that we become justified; for when our sins are all forgiven, we are then as free from sin as if we had not sinned at all, until we commit sin again, which if we do we shall have as much need of forgiveness as we did before. Hence we ought always to remember, that being thus made free from sin by having all our sins forgiven, and being then in a justified state by that means—I say, being thus made free from sin, and become servants to God, we ought to remember, that we must have our fruit unto holiness, that the end may be everlasting life: Rom. 6: 22. For if we sin willfully after we have received the knowledge of the truth, there remaineth no more sacrifice for sins. Heb. 10: 26. For if, while we seek to be justified by Christ, we ourselves also are found sinners, is Christ therefore the minister of sin? God forbid. Gal. 2: 17. We know, however, that his perfect righteousness was essential and indispensable to constitute him the Saviour of sinners, for without it he would have been a sinner himself, and could not have redeemed us to God by his blood. But I cannot say that he had any more righteousness than was necessary to secure his own happiness, for I have not much faith in the Romish doctrine of supererrogation. But his death and suffering was what he did not deserve or need for himself; all of that he endured for us, and on our account, and thereby purchased and procured our pardon; for we are bought with a price, and I think well enough might ten thousand times ten thousand exclaim with a loud voice, "Blessing, and honor, and glory, and power, be unto the Lamb, for he was slain, and hath redeemed us unto God by his blood." But Doctor Chalmers says: "It is the merit of his obedience, imputed to us, and made ours by faith, that forms our right or title deed of entry into the kingdom of God. He is the Lord our righteousness; and in receiving him, we receive that righteousness which it was the end of the law to have secured for us, had it been by us fulfilled, but which we in vain seek by the law, now that it has been broken." Now I firmly believe, that if all men from first to last had been uniformly and universally as perfectly obedient to the law of God as Christ himself was, all that obedience would not have purchased eternal life for one soul. Nor would it ever have paid the debt we owed to God for our very existence; for we should then have done no more than it was our duty to do, whether we received eternal life or not. It seems probable, that it was in the mind of God to have given us eternal life, if sin had not entered into the world, and death by sin. But even then it would have been his own free will, and not what we had merited (i. e. purchased) by our righteousness. How, then, could the merit of his obedience be so imputed to us as to form our right or title deed of entry into the kingdom of God, which all our own obedience never could have done, even if we had never sinned? Perhaps I have said enough to make you understand why the Doctor's explanation is not satisfactory to me. And now, since the subject is broached, I wish you would think of it, and see if a more satisfactory explanation cannot be given of that text. And if no one else will undertake it, I do not know but I may try it myself.

RISE AND PROGRESS OF SLAVERY.

As the question is soon to be decided at the ballot-boxes, whether the traffic in human flesh shall be extended and perpetuated by the United States, and as the subject at this time is unusually interesting to every Christian philanthropist, I have been induced to collect a few scraps from ancient history, detailing something of the rise and progress (and would that I could say termination) of slavery among the civilized nations of the earth.

That slavery existed to a great extent in the early ages of the world, will not be denied. From the Patriarchs down to the days of Greece and Rome, it appears to have been the practice to make slaves of prisoners of war. It was a recognized rule of Greek national law, that the persons of those who were taken prisoners of war became the property of the conqueror. Greece also obtained a great number of slaves from pirates, who kidnapped persons on the coast, and sold them for slaves; and none of the Greek philosophers ever seem to have objected to slavery as a thing morally wrong. But the slaves could not be sold out of the country, nor separated from their families, and their lives and persons were protected by law. A person who struck or maltreated a slave was liable to an action, and the slave could not be put to death without legal sentence. Yet notwithstanding the mild treatment of the Grecian slaves, insurrections were not unfrequent.

Slavery existed in Rome in the earliest times of which we have any record. Slaves do not appear to have been very numerous, however, under the kings, and in the earliest ages of the Republic. But since it was the practice of the Romans to deprive a conquered people of a part of their land, the estates required a larger number of hands for their cultivation than could readily be obtained among the free population; and since the freemen were constantly liable to be called away from their work to serve in the armies, the lands began to be cultivated almost entirely by slave labor. Through war and commerce slaves could be easily obtained, and at a cheap rate, and their numbers soon became so great that the poorer classes of freemen were thrown almost entirely out of employment. This state of things continuing, laws were made to counteract the evil, and relieve the freemen; but this provision of the law was of little avail, and the land still continued to be cultivated by slaves.

In Sicily, at that time under the Roman yoke, which supplied Rome with a vast quantity of corn, the number of agricultural slaves was immense. The oppression to which they were exposed drove them twice to open rebellion, and their numbers enabled them for a time to defy the Roman power. The first of these servile wars began 134 B. C., and lasted two years. The second commenced 102 B. C., and lasted almost four years. Notwithstanding the immense number of prisoners taken in the constant wars of the Republic, the increase of wealth and luxury augmented the number of slaves to a prodigious extent. The mechanical operations, which were formerly in the hands of freemen, who had property of their own, were entirely performed by slaves—a natural growth of things, for where slaves perform certain duties or practice certain arts, such duties or arts will be esteemed degrading to a freeman. Then the games of the amphitheatre required an immense number of slaves or gladiators, trained for the purpose. At length they became so numerous that they again rose, about 73 B. C., on their oppressors, and under the able generalship of Spartacus, defeated a Roman consular army, and were not subdued in two years, when 60,000 of them had fallen in battle.

The steady growth, extent, and long duration of the Roman Empire, proves the wisdom of its political system; but it fell at length a prey to the dreadful evils of domestic slavery. Slavery had been the ruin of many of the states and empires of antiquity. The influence of wealth corrupted the higher orders; and the lower, separated by a line of demarkation from their superiors, furnished no accession of strength to revive their energies.

But at length the influence of a religion which proclaimed the universal equality of mankind in the sight of Heaven, and addressed its revelations in a special manner to the poor, destroyed this ruinous distinction, and in many states and empires slavery gradually yielded to the rising influence of Christianity. From this period there appears but little complaint of tyranny and cruelty to slaves, and they finally mingled with their oppressors, (being of the same color,) and became merged in the serfs of the middle ages.

Happy would it have been for many millions of the human family, could this have been the end of the inhuman tale. But passing on to the fifteenth century, another scene opens to our view, which for wickedness and cruelty out-strips every thing which had preceded it. It was commenced by the Portuguese about the year 1441, when they established their first fort at D'Elmira. Other nations of Europe gradually followed the example—England, France, Spain, Holland, and Denmark, each performing their part. But England, having by far the most extensive possessions, has ever taken the lead in this inhuman traffick. A system was established by which the Chiefs of the African tribes doomed their prisoners of war and their convicts to everlasting servitude, and exchanged them for the luxuries of European commerce. As the West India Islands advanced in prosperity, the demand for slaves increased. Speculators and adventurers from every part of Europe carried to the coast of Africa the alluring articles of their respective manufactories. Thus tempted on all sides, the African tyrants resolved to use every practical method of obtaining slaves. War was created for the purpose of taking prisoners. The innocent were charged with crimes which they never committed. The helpless were seized by violence, and the inhabitants of their own villages were sometimes carried off in a body to supply the means of the inhuman barter. Thus organized, they have prosecuted their work with a zeal commensurate with their wicked ambition. The number of the poor sufferers imported since the commencement, could it be accurately ascertained, would exceed the bounds of human credulity. Twenty-four thousand four hundred and ninety-five slaves were imported into the British Islands in the year 1788, and previous to the abolition of the slave trade, in 1807, twenty thousand negroes were annually imported into the same places by British settlers; and the number in Cuba is nearly the same, to say nothing of all the other Islands. Now from the year 1441 to 1807, not mentioning the 40 years since that date, is 368 years; and as no record will show the progressive rate of importation, we will suppose the middle of the time, or the year 1624, to be the average, which will give twenty thousand a year for 368 years, or in the aggregate 7,360,000 Africans, torn from their families, wives and children, brothers and sisters, country and friends, and all they held dear on earth, to serve the wicked purposes of wicked men. Happily the day of deliverance appears to be dawning. England, with some of the European nations who are called civilized, has passed laws prohibiting the slave trade. But degraded America, or that part of it called the United States, I believe, stands alone vindicating the inhuman traffick, and is the only place in any nation, state, or society, under the influence of Christianity, where African men and women can be bought and sold, especially in the capital of the nation, and none to hinder or make afraid.

A Veteran Missionary Returned.—We learn from the N. Y. Evangelist, that Rev. Daniel Poor, D. D., and his wife, missionaries of the American Board in Ceylon, arrived in New York on the 25th ult., in the packet-ship Victoria, with two sons of Rev. Miron Winslow, missionary at Madras. Mr. Poor was one of the second company sent out by the American Board, and one of the first company sent to the Island of Ceylon. He sailed from Newburyport Oct. 23, 1815, in company with Rev. Mr. Meigs, Rev. Mr. Richards, Rev. Mr. Warren, and Rev. Mr. Bardwell. Two of the number, Rev. Mr. Richards and Rev. Mr. Warren, have deceased. Rev. Mr. Bardwell is settled in this country, and Mr. Poor and Mr. Meigs remain in the field, after a period of thirty-three years. In June, 1819, a reinforcement was sent to Ceylon, consisting of Dr. Scudder, Rev. L. Spaulding, Rev. M. Winslow, and Rev. H. Woodward. Mr. Woodward died, and the remaining three are now on missionary ground successfully pursuing their work. Of the nine clergymen thus sent out, six are still living, and five of them remain veteran missionaries of the Board. It is believed that no instance of greater longevity can be found in the history of Indian Missions—perhaps of any Missions.

Baptist Immigration.—The Montreal Register says that the Rev. G. C. Moore of Ireland is now on a visit to Montreal, with a view to take measures for the immigration of a large number of persons, principally consisting of members of the church and congregation formerly under the pastoral care of the late Dr. Carson. It is proposed to obtain land for them in one of the Western Townships, and to form a Baptist Settlement.

Operations of the American Tract Society.—The American Tract Society has nine steam-presses in continual operation, throwing off an average of about 2400 volumes per day, and including tracts, more than 27,600 distinct publications every twenty-four hours. It distributes monthly 130,000 copies of the "American Messenger," and ten thousand copies of the same work in German. The "Illustrated Christian Almanac," for 1849, is ready for circulation, and of this annual 150,000 copies will be printed. Since the first of April, the Society has granted for gratuitous distribution over 9,000,000 pages of evangelical reading. During the month of August 33 new colporteurs were commissioned, and 15 commissions were renewed.

Extraordinary Decision.—An English Judge has recently decided, "that a priest in holy orders of the Church of England, styling himself a seceder from that Church, and being, in fact, a voluntary seceder therefrom, may be committed to prison for contempt of court in preaching as a dissenting minister contrary to the lawful monition of the court. This is placing a ban upon seceders, and exposing them to a punishment, which would have become the dark ages better than the nineteenth century.

* * *

Objects Before the Christians of France.—A highly intelligent Christian layman of Paris, wrote, just before the late revolution of February, "The two things which we desire to see prevailing in this kingdom, are, the gospel of our highly exalted Lord Jesus Christ, and the separation of the Church from the State. We have, for eighteen years, written these two sentences upon our colors for the work which we are attempting for Paris and for France."

* * *

Liberal Bequest.—The Liverpool Intelligencer states that the late Mrs. Matthewman, of Harrowgate, England, has by her will left about $125,000 of her property, to be applied by her trustees, with the sanction of the bishop of Rippon, in promoting within the borough of Leeds, divine worship, according to the liturgy and usages of the church of England.

Defections from the Roman Catholic Church.—Our readers are aware that Bishop Hughes, of New York, has written a series of letters in answer to those of "Kirwan," alias Rev. Dr. Murray, of Elizabethtown, N. J. In one of his letters the Bishop speaks thus, of the numerous defections from the Catholic Church:

"These defections, alas, may be called not only numerous, but frightfully numerous. Every priest will attest, every town in the land is a crying witness of it. Week before last, two gentlemen unacquainted with each other, called on us at different times. Each had recently arrived from Ireland, and the conversation chancing with the first of them to turn on the comparative state of the Irish at home and in America, he remarked with horror, that of his numerous acquaintances who had preceded him to this country, he found a fearfully large proportion of them who never went to a church at all; and on our mentioning it to the second gentleman, he said he had found the same thing. They had become Kirwanites—Infidels."

Revival among the Indians.—The Baptist Missionaries among the Creeks, as appears from the Christian Reflector, have for some time past enjoyed special success in their labors among that tribe. A missionary says;—

Within seven months ninety-three have been received for baptism; among the number Gen. Chilley McIntosh, the most talented chief in the Creek nation. His son has been an active member, and has a good English education; he is an excellent interpreter, and I expect to have the pleasure of making known that he has commenced preaching. There are now seven Baptist churches in the Creek nation, with 550 members. There are five native preachers.

* * *

Extraordinary Baptismal Scene.—The Raleigh (N. C.) Biblical Recorder relates the particulars of a revival at Ballard's Bridge, Chowan Co., in that State, which resulted in a large number of conversions. On the Monday previous to the 21st of August, the candidates for baptism—163 in number—met on the banks of the Chowan river, for baptism. 'The line of candidates,' says the writer, 'went into the water hand in hand, and extended over one hundred yards; and a more interesting sight I never beheld. Brethren White, Waff, Leary, and myself, at different parts of this extended line, were all engaged in baptizing at the same time. When through, and we began our march for the shore, the joy was overwhelming, both on the part of those on the shore to receive, and those coming out to be received.'

* * *

Converts from Heathenism.—In the annual report of the London Missionary Society for the present year, we have an interesting fact connected with the Christian liberality of the converts to the faith. It is stated that for the last seven years, the amount of contributions raised at the several mission stations toward their own support, has exceeded $75,000 annually; being nearly one-fifth of the Society's income.

Graduates of Colleges.—The following table presents the number of graduates at the recent commencements of the Colleges of New England, New York, and New Jersey:—

| | | | |
|---|---|---|---|
| Harvard Univ. Mass. | 59 | Waterville College, Me. | 6 |
| Williams College, " | 43 | Columbia College, N. Y. | 23 |
| Amherst College, " | 32 | Union College, N. Y. | 90 |
| Yale College, Conn. | 89 | Hamilton College, N. Y. | 36 |
| Trinity College, " | 13 | Geneva College, N. Y. | 14 |
| Wesleyan Univ. " | 25 | N. Y. City University, | 27 |
| Dartmouth College, N. H. | 51 | Madison University, N. Y. | 75 |
| Brown University, R. I. | 30 | New Jersey College, N. J. | 71 |

| Middlebury College, " | 10 | | |
| Bowdoin College, Me. | 33 | Total, 20 Colleges, | 705 |

The average number to each is 35. Union and Yale have the largest numbers; Waterville and Middlebury the least. [N. H. Democrat.

General Intelligence.

Pennsylvania and Ohio Elections.—Elections were held last week in pennsylvania and Ohio. As to the results there has been a good deal of uncertainty and dispute, in consequence of conflicting reports by telegraph. We believe, however, it is generally conceded that Pennsylvania has elected the Whig Governor, Johnston, and a majority of Whigs to the Legislature. The result in Ohio is not agreed upon at the time of writing this, Monday afternoon. One day we are told that Ford (Whig) is elected Governor; the next, that Weller (Loco) is chosen, and so on. A few hours will probably settle the question.

Sabbath Accident and Remarkable Coincidence.—We are informed, says the Peoria (Ill.) Register of Oct. 6th, that on last Saturday David M. Ridgeway, a son of Jonathan Ridgeway, was at the house of Lewis Fee in company with other persons. He had a loaded rifle in his hand, and was in the act of sitting down on the fence to rest himself; the end of the gun was placed on a piece of square timber which was used as a step. The breech of the gun slipped from the position, the muzzle came against his person some where near the lower rib, the cock struck upon the piece of timber, the gun was discharged, and the ball passed in close to the lower rib and came out at his back below the fourth rib from the top. He was carried into the house and died the same evening at 11 o'clock.

In Marshall Co., upon the same day and hour, John Van Scoyk, went into the house where he was boarding, took down his gun, and remarked to Mrs. Clements, the lady of the house, that he believed his gun was not loaded, drew the cock back, placed the breech upon the floor, placed his mouth on the muzzle, was in the act of blowing in the muzzle, when the gun was discharged, the ball passed through his head, and he fell dead upon the floor.

These two persons were cousins.

An attempt to Poison Mrs. Calhoun.—An attempt was recently made by the slaves of John C. Calhoun, to poison his lady. The facts are these: Mrs. C. purchased a bottle of acid, to remove stains from cloth, and took it home. She carried it into the kitchen, told the servants what it was for; and that as it was a deadly poison, they must be careful in handling it, so as not to get any on their fingers. Nancy, a kitchen servant, took charge of it, but before putting it away, made another kitchen servant pour out a small vial full, and put that aside also. Mrs. Calhoun usually takes a cup of coffee early in the morning, and a few days afterwards, when a little negro boy brought a cup to her, as usual, she perceived, on tasting the coffee, that it had an unusual flavor. This she remarked to the boy, who became frightened, and wished to take it away, which she would not allow him to do, but immediatly sent for a physician. When he arrived, he pronounced the coffee poisoned. The girl Nancy then confessed that she had put some of the article intended for cleansing clothes, in the coffee. A man servant, (Tom,) Nancy, and the boy, were then sent off to jail.

Caution to Farmers.—In Bucks County, Pa., week before last, a farmer lost ten fine cows. They had broken into his corn-field and eaten heartily of the growing corn, when the trespass was discovered by some of the family, and they were driven into another field in which there was an abundance of water. The cattle being feverish from the large amount of corn they had eaten, immediately drank freely of the water, and in a short time the whole of them were dead. Cattle are often killed by eating green corn fodder. Farmers should exercise a great deal of care in this particular.

A Novel Colporteur.—A poor fellow in Pittsburg, who has been long known as a c[illegible]firmed inebriate, has at last pa[illegible] the forfeiture of his vice in the loss of his reason. The manner in which his insanity displays itself, however, is quite peculiar. He has gone frequently to the Bible depository and purchased whole armfuls of Bibles and Testaments, which he leaves in every house. On Saturday week he was at the door of the theatre, engaged in his labor of love.

Sandwich Islands.—At the last dates an interesting work of grace was in progress at Honolulu. The royal family attend the meetings. In Rev. Mr. Bond's church at Kohala, there were 1,369 members in good standing. About 100 were added in 1847.

According to the Journal of the fifty-eight annual convention, the Episcopal Church in Massachusetts has 65 ministers, 57 parishes or societies, 4645 communicants, and 3133 scholars in the Sunday Schools. The contributions for religious and charitable objects for the year, amount to $16,928 09.

Mr. Bain, whose electric telegraph attracted a great deal of attention while he was here last spring, has just returned from England with a second improvement on his plan, by which a man may write his name at the other end of the electric wire, preserving the autograph perfect and distinct.

An intelligent physician of New England says, that as the almost uniform rule, the families of intemperate persons are not prolonged beyond the second or third generation, and then run out.

The Spirit of Jefferson states that Mr. John P. Kennedy, a citizen of Harper's Ferry, took his life on Thursday night by taking laudanum. He was about 38 years of age, and leaves a wife and children. Mortification at having broken the pledge, after once reforming, is supposed to have been the cause.

On Saturday, the 5th ult., Mr. Dennis Wildman, of Danbury, Conn., was thrown from a cart on which he was pitching hay, and so much injured that he lived only an hour after.

SUMMARY.

The total valuation of the Real and Personal Estate of the City and County of New York, according to the Controller's statement, is $254,192,027, showing an increased valuation of $7,038,724, of which $5,712,190 is on Real Estate and $1,326,534 on Personal Estate. The aggregate Real Estate is $193,027,576, and Personal $61,154,451. The largest amount of both Real and Personal Estate is in the First Ward, the aggregate being $52,410,201, more than one-fifth of the entire property of the City and County. The lowest valuation is in the Thirteenth Ward, about 4,600,000.

The bark Fairy, at Provincetown, reports that on the 23d instant, lat. 40, lon. 54, she fell in with the wreck of the whale ship Mobile, of and from New Bedford, Sept. 7, for the Pacific, and took off twelve persons. When seven days out the Mobile was struck by a sea and knocked on her beam ends, which carried away all her topmasts, filling her instantly, and washed overboard Capt. Long, the first mate, two boat steerers, and six men.

We mentioned a week or two since, that a party of robbers had plundered several of the Mexican towns east of the Sierra Madre, and retired into Texas. The Matamoras Flag confirms this statement, and says that this party carried off property to the amount of $80,000. The Flag also states that hundreds of deserters from the American army, and adventurers, have formed a league, like the banditti of other periods, and have spread themselves all over the country east of the Sierra Madre.

Fruit thieves have been detected by an ingenious method, which is thus described by the Boston Transcript. A physician selected three or four of the best looking peaches on his trees, and inserted tartar emetic under the skin. The next day he was called to attend a boy, who had been taken with violent vomitings, and he readily detected the culprit in his patient.

The French army actually on foot amounts, according to the declaration of General Lamoriciere before the committee appointed to examine and report upon the budget for the Minister of War, to be 548,000 men. The estimated expense of the War Department for the year is 425,233,224f. (upwards of £17,000,000 sterling.)

We learn from the Charlestown News, that Mrs. Sarah Campbell obtained a verdict in Kent County (Md.) court, of $1,500 damages from Samuel Ringgold for a breach of promise of marriage. The swain was about 75 years old. The love letters read in the case were particularly amatory and amusing.

Since the introduction of the penny postage in 1840, the number of letters passing monthly through the General Post Office, London, has increased from 2,102,281 to 8,526,432, and the weekly average for the whole kingdom has increased from 1,515,983 to 6,382,941.

The St. Louis New Era of the 26th ult. has the following paragraph—James Maddox, a suspicious character, was fined $100 by Recorder Hyde this morning for loafing about North Market. Jose Martiney, another person of the same stripe, was fined $20 for a similar offence. Both were sent to the Workhouse.

At the Supreme Court in Worcester, Mass., John Cook, of Ashburnham, was arraigned for the murder of his wife, by poison, some fifteen years ago.

In the case of Treator vs. Stickle, tried in Poughkeepsie, N. Y., the jury awarded $2000 damages for seduction.

Three young ladies were knocked down by a runaway horse, at Hartford, the other day.

Mrs. Barnan, wife of Mr. Patrick Barnan, says the Hartford Times, was recently delivered of four children, three girls and one boy. Three of them are alive, and their average weight is seven pounds. The mother died the next morning. Her age was thirty-six years. Mr. B. resides in Wells street, in that city. The Hartford Courant says, that the woman had twins twice, and within the space of ten years and eight months became the mother of fifteen children.

The substitution of coal in our railroad locomotives for wood, has been repeatedly attempted without much success. It is said that an engine has recently been constructed by Mr. Winan, a celebrated locomotive builder, which promises to answer the purpose of enabling our railroad companies to save the extra expense now incurred by the use of wood instead of the cheaper and more portable article, coal.

There arrived at New Haven, Conn., not long since, in the schooner Gold Hunter, from Porto Rico, twenty-three passengers, Portuguese, who were forced to leave the island of Madeira, some two years ago in consequence of their religion being obnoxious to the laws of that country. It is stated that they are of the Presbyterian denomination.

Another great fire broke out in Constantinople on the 19th August last, which laid a vast section of the city in ruins, destroying 3000 shops and dwellings, several of them magnificent palaces and Mohammedan mosques; and a vast amount of merchandize, as the stores were filled with the rich productions of the East. Some put the loss at $10,000,000; some make the estimate $15,000,000. This fire far exceeded that at Pera two months previous.

John D Williams, Esq., of Boston, left bequests to the Massachusetts Hospital, Theological School at Cambridge, and Farm School, with other legacies to the amount of $50,000, and a million and a half to his heirs. He commenced a market gardener—drove his own wagon into the city—became a merchant afterward, and a large owner of real estate, and eventually a millionaire.

Samuel Lawrence, a very large dealer in wool, says that within twenty-five years we shall produce more wool than any other nation in the world, and says further, that there is not now enough annually raised in this country, by 100,000,000 pounds, to meet the demand of the manufacturers.

The Batesville (Ark.) Eagle, of the first ult., states that Mr. Joshua Dilingham, of that vicinity, was bitten, whilst asleep at night, by a tarantula, or poisonous spider, which entered the crevices of his log cabin—his body swelled until the close of the second day, when he died.

STATE OF NEW YORK,

SECRETARY'S OFFICE.—Albany, Aug. 21, 1848.—To the Sheriff of the City and County of New York: Sir, Official information having been received this day, that on the 19th of April, 1848, the House of Representatives of the Congress of the United States, passed a resolution in the words following, viz:

"Resolved, That David S. Jackson is NOT entitled to his seat as a Representative from the Sixth Congressional District of the State of New York," thereby creating a vacancy in the said District.

Notice is therefore hereby given, that a Representative in the 30th Congress of the United States, for the Sixth Congressional District of this State, composed of the Eleventh, Twelfth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, and Seventeenth Wards of the City of New York, is to be elected to supply the said vacancy at the general election to be held on the Tuesday succeeding the first Monday of November next.

CHRISTOPHER MORGAN,
Secretary of State.

SHERIFF'S OFFICE,
New York, August 22d, 1848.

The above is published pursuant to the notice of the Secretary of State, and the requirements of the Statute in such case made and provided.

JOHN J. V. WESTERVELT, Sheriff.

☞ All the public newspapers in the county will publish he above once in each week until the election, and then hand in their bills for advertising the same, so that they may be laid before the Board of Supervisors, and passed for payment. ## GOOD-BYE.

Farewell! farewell! is often heard,
From the lips of those who part;
'T is a whispered tone—'tis a gentle word,
But it springs not from the heart.
It may serve for the lover's closing lay,
To be sung 'neath a summer sky;
But give to me the lips that say
The honest words—"Good-bye!"

Adieu! adieu! may greet the ear,
In the guise of courtly speech;
But when we leave the kind and dear,
'T is not what the soul would teach.
Whene'er we clasp the hands of those
We would have forever nigh,
The flame of friendship bursts and glows
In the warm, frank words—"Good-bye."

The mother, sending forth her child
To meet with cares and strife,
Breathes through her tears, her doubts, and fears,
For the loved one's future life.
No cold "adieu," no "farewell," lives
Within her closing sigh;
But the deepest sob of anguish gives—
"God bless thee, boy! Good-bye!"

Go watch the pale and dying one,
When the glance has lost its beam—
When the brow is as cold as the marble stone,
And the world a passing dream;
And the latest pressure of the hand,
The look of the closing eye,
Yield what the heart must understand,
A long—a last "Good-bye!"

A MAN OVER NIAGARA FALLS.

On the first instant, a man from Buffalo, who had been upon the river in a sail boat, and ventured too near the rapids, was carried over Niagara Falls. The following account of the matter is given by a correspondent of the Buffalo Commercial Advertiser:—

I was on the head of Goat Island when I first discovered the boat—then near half a mile below the foot of Navy Island, and nearly two miles above the Falls. There seemed to be two in the boat. It was directed toward the American shore—the wind blowing from this shore, and still the sail was standing. Being well acquainted with the river, I regarded the position of the boat as extraordinary and hazardous, and watched it with intense anxiety. Soon I discovered the motion of an oar, and from the changing direction of the boat, concluded it had but one. While constantly approaching nearer and nearer the rapids, I could discover it was gaining the American shore, and by the time it had got near the first fall in the rapids, about half a mile above Goat Island, it was directly above the island. There it was turned up the river, and for some time the wind kept it nearly stationary.

The only hope seemed to be to come directly to Goat Island, and whether I should run half a mile to give the alarm, or remain to assist, in the event the boat attempted to make the Island, was a question of painful doubt. But soon the boat was again turned toward the American shore. Then it was certain it must go down the American rapids. I ran for the bridge—saw and informed a lady and gentleman just leaving the Island, but they seemed unable to reply or move. I rallied a man at the toll-gate—we ran to the main bridge in time to see the boat just before it got to the first large fall in the rapids. Then I saw but one man—he standing at the stern with his oar, changing the course of the boat down the current, and as it plunged over, he sat down. I was astonished to see the boat rise with the mast and sail standing, and the man, again erect, directing the boat toward the shore. As he came to the next and each succeeding fall, he sat down, and then would rise and apply his oar in the intermediate current.

Still there was hope that he would come near enough to the pier to jump, but in a moment it was gone. Another, that he might jump upon the rock near the bridge, but the current dashed him from it under the bridge, breaking the mast. Again he rose on the opposite side. Taking his oar and pointing his boat toward the main shore, he cried, "had I better jump from the boat?" We could not answer, for either seemed certain destruction. Within a few rods of the Falls, the boat struck a rock—turned over and lodged. He appeared to crawl from under it, and swam with the oar in his hand till he went over the precipice.

Without the power to render any assistance—for half an hour watching a strong man struggling with every nerve for life, yet doomed with almost the certainty of destiny to an immediate and awful death, still hoping with every effort for his deliveranee—caused an intensity of excitement I pray God never again to experience.

BEGINNINGS OF STEAMBOATING.

In Ewbank's Hydraulics, some interesting stories are told of the first efforts of the pioneers in steamboating. One of them relates to Oliver Evans, who in 1786, urged upon a Committee of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, the advantages to be derived from steamboats, and "steam wagons," and predicted their universal adoption in a short time. The opinion which the Committee formed of him was expressed a few years afterward, by one of its members, in the following words: "To tell you the truth, Mr. Evans, we thought you were deranged when you spoke of making steam wagons." The other relates to John Fitch, a clock and watch maker, than whom a more ingenious, persevering, and unfortunate man never lived. In spite of difficulties that few could withstand, he succeeded in raising the means of constructing a steamboat, which he ran several times from Philadelphia to Burlington and Trenton in 1788. As a first attempt, and from the want of proper manufactories of machinery at the time, it was imperfect: then public opinion was unfavorable, and the shareholders finally abandoned the scheme. His feelings may be imagined, but not described; for he saw and predicted the glory that awaited the man who should succeed in introducing such vessels in a more favorable time. "The day will come," he observes, "when some more powerful man will get fame and riches by my invention, but no one will believe that poor John Fitch can do anything worthy of attention." He declared that within a century the western waters would swarm with steam vessels, and he expressed a wish to be buried on the margin of the Ohio, that the music of marine engines in passing by his grave might echo over the sods that covered him. In a letter to Mr. Rittenhouse, in 1792, he shows the applicability of steam to propel ships of war, and asserts that the same agent would be adopted to navigate the Atlantic, both for packets and armed vessels. Descanting on one occasion upon his favorite topic, a person present observed, as Fitch retired, "poor fellow! what a pity he is crazy!" He ended his life in a fit of insanity by plunging into the Alleghany.

DEATH OF AN EX-SLAVE.

The Alabama Tribune gives the following notice of a worthy man who recently died in Mobile:

We hastily announced on Tuesday the death of Major Pierre Chastang. He was so remarkable a man in many respects, that a brief sketch of his life will, we are sure, interest many of our readers, and perhaps have a beneficial influence upon his own caste. Pierre was born in this city in 1779, and was consequently 79 years old at his death. He was the slave of Jean Chastang, and in 1810 or 1811 became the property of Regest Bernody. During the Indian war, and at the time Jackson was in command of the troops of this city, Pierre, then known to the citizens as a brave, honest, trustworthy man, was appointed by Jackson patroon, or captain of a government transport, to carry provisions to the troops stationed at fort Montgomery or fort Mims, and to those in camp near the present site of Mount Vernon. The undertaking was perilous, as at that time the whole country was infested with hostile Indians, and but few persons could be found to take charge of an expedition attended with so much risk of life. Pierre was, however, successful, and reached the troops in safety, with a supply of provisions, &c.

In 1819, during the ravages of yellow fever, Pierre rendered essential service to the city by taking care of the sick and protecting the property of the citizens. He and one or two other persons were compelled to act as nurses and sexton. The sickness and mortality were so great that it was difficult to have the patients properly cared for—three, four or five bodies were taken at a time in a cart, and deposited in a pit. As a matter of course, all who could get away, precipitately fled from the pestilence, leaving their property in charge of Pierre. He daily opened the stores for the purpose of ventilation and securing the goods from damage. On the return of the merchants in the Fall, they found everything safe, and as some appreciation of his services and honesty, a subscription was at once taken up for his emancipation, also to purchase him a horse and dray. Since that period, his avocation as a drayman has enabled him to support his family quite handsomely, and at the same time amass a snug little property.

Pierre, until a year or two past, enjoyed uninterrupted health, and always seemed happy and contented. No person in this community, whether white or black, was ever more highly esteemed, and no one in his sphere has been a more conspicuous, honest, benevolent and upright man. He always acted on the golden rule of doing unto others as he would be done by.

BRAZILIAN INDIA-RUBBER SHOE MANUFACTORY.

Many of our readers who enjoy comfort and luxury, afforded by the use of India rubber shoes, have but little idea of the process employed in their manufacture, from their original state of gummy fluid as taken from the simple receptacle of clay attached to the body of the tree which exudes the liquid, to the beautifully adapted elastic material, prepared with so much skill, in form and proportions, and fitted with admirable nicety to the most delicate ladies' foot.

The shoes which are imported from Brazil, are generally manufactured in the interior, and brought down the river to sell by the natives, who furnish for export at last 250,000 pairs from the province of Paraclome, annually.

The first operation is the procuring of the gum from the trees, which are tapped in the same manner that New Englanders tap maple trees. The trunk having been perforated, a yellowish liquid, resembling cream, flows out, which is caught in small clay cups, fastened to the tree. When these become full, their contents are emptied into large earthen jars, in which the liquid is kept until desired for use.

The operation of making the shoes is as simple as it is interesting. Imagine yourself in one of the seringa groves of Brazil. Around you are a number of good-looking natives, of low stature and olive complexion. All are variously engaged. One is stirring with a long wooden stick the contents of a cauldron, placed over a fire of blazing embers. This is the liquid as it was taken from the rubber tree. Into this a wooden last, covered with clay, and having a handle, is plunged. A coating of the liquid remains. Another native then takes the last, and holds it in the smoke arising from the ignition of a species of palm fruit, for the purpose of causing the coating to assume a dark color. The last is then again plunged into the cauldron, and this process is repeated, as in dipping candles, until the coating is of the required thickness. A number of Indian girls (some very pretty) are engaged in making various impressions, such as flowers, &c., upon the soft surface of the rubber, by means of their thumb-nails, which are especially pared and cultivated for this purpose. After this final operation the shoes are placed in the sun to harden, and large numbers of them may be seen laid out in mats on exposed situations. The original name of the rubber is cahucha, from which the formidable word of caoutchouc is derived. In Para it is styled borracha, or seringa. [Farmer and Mechanic.

FOSSIL FOOTPRINTS.

Dexter Marsh, laboring mechanic of Greenfield, many years ago discovered, on the flagging stones with which he was laying a sidewalk, what appeared to be the footprints of some strange bird. The geologists pronounced them to be such, and to belong to a period before the creation of man. This discovery so exalted the curiosity and scientific ardor of Mr. Marsh, that he has since made it his amusement to look for such impressions, and he has traversed the valley from the northern Massachusetts line to Wethersfield, Conn., some times spending a week in quarrying these ancient tracks. In the last number of Silliman's Journal of Science he gives a brief account of his labors and successes, from which we may understand that the Connecticut valley, in bygone ages, was a favorite resort of birds that would have made no more of putting men in their crops, than turkies do of swallowing grasshoppers.

Mr. Marsh has in his possession more than eight hundred footprints of birds and quadrupeds, besides having furnished many specimens to others, in this and other countries. In some cases these specimens are so distinct as not only to show the print of the toes, but the impression of the skin. He has perfect tracks of quadrupeds so small that a half dime will cover the whole foot, and again others of birds where the foot measures half a yard from the toe to the heel, so that if the birds that made them were proportioned like those we now have, they must have been twenty feet high!

He has some times followed the track of a bird thirty or forty feet in the rock, the track being at first faint, as if on hard soil; then more distinct, as if imprinted on the sand at the water's edge, and finally sinking in the mud and disappearing in the water. He has one slab, four or five inches thick, on which the tracks appear as mere straight lines upon the surface; but on splitting it into five layers, they grow more and more distinct, till the lower slab shows where the foot rested, just as if, when the stone was in a state of mud, the bird trod to the bottom of it, and on withdrawing the foot the mud closed up.

Among the tracks are many very unlike to those made by any known animals, but still so marked as to leave no doubt that animals made them. A sort of kangaroo, for example, shows very small fore feet and very large hind ones. Of this the Journal of Science gives a striking cut.

SEVENTY THOUSAND POUNDS FOR A POEM.

Some sixteen or seventeen years since, there appeared in one of the Philadelphia journals, under the quaint caption, "Lines suggested by the presence of the English Friends now in America," a poem, yes, a poem of some forty-six lines, no more nor no less. The effusion was what it professed to be, a congratulatory epistle, addressed to two English wealthy Friends, (no offence) whose visit to this country was a mission of gospel love to the churches here. It happened, and it will sometimes accidentally happen, that, in casting their eyes over the journal they espied the article in question, and were pleased with the friendly feeling by which it seemed to have been inspired. The poem was anonymous, yet, upon inquiry, they found that the writer was a fair countrywoman of ours, whose fame had hitherto scarcely traveled out of the limits of her own quiet country air. They sought an interview with this meek, unpretending Quaker girl, who, while she was penning the article in question, was little aware of the feeling it would awaken in the bosom of these warm-hearted Friends; nor did she dream of what this humble tribute of hers was destined to lead to. The interview was satisfactory, and a firm friendship commenced between the parties, so that when these public Friends of whom we have spoken, had finished their mission, and were preparing to return to their home, this young lady, by a warm invitation on their part, was induced to accompany them, and was introduced by them into the circles in which they moved—the Quaker aristocracy of good old England. Some time after, a distinguished British philanthropist, now deceased, met her, and we presume was forcibly smitten with her charms, for not many years afterwards we find the acquaintance renewed, which had then ripened into an attachment, and they were accordingly united in marriage, offensive or defensive as the lawyer would say, or as better expressed, "sin injuria tibi ullus," without injury to any one. A few years afterwards the husband died, and by his will it was found that he had left his wife seventy thousand—seventy thousand pounds for forty-six lines of poetry!

LIABILITY TO INSANITY.

From a table illustrative of the occupations and civil condition of the insane, it appears that the farmers and laborers, whose natural and healthy employments might be thought to bestow almost an exemption from this malady, afford no less than twenty per cent. of the whole number. The mercantile class, whose anxieties and feverish speculations might be supposed to irritate the nervous system far more than the unvaried and steady occupations of the farmer, yield only three per cent.; while among the female patients, the monotonous tone of an indolent or merely housewifery occupation, seems to afford a parallel to the agricultural, their numbers bearing as high a proportion to the whole as forty-two per cent. Does it not seem to follow that the energetic employment of all the powers of the brain, which is the necessary condition of a life of trade and business, is more favorable to the continuance of health than the partial employment of some faculties, and the stagnant condition of many others, as in the farming and domestic classes? The medical profession supplied ten patients, and the clerical six. But what will be considered surprising is, that the civil condition of married and single give respectively almost equal proportions, the former being 545, and the latter 564.

THE FIRST STEAM PRESS.—The first person who introduced steam into a printing office was Mr. Walter, who was the principal owner of the London Times. On the 29th of November, 1814, he made the experiment, but not without much and virulent opposition, as the following account will show:—

"The night on which the curious machine was first brought into use in its new abode was one of great anxiety and even alarm. The suspicious pressmen had threatened destruction to any one whose inventions might suspend their employment—'destruction to him and his straps.' They were directed to wait for expected news from the continent. It was about 6 o'clock in the morning when Mr. Walter went into the press-room and astonished its occupants by telling them that 'The Times' was already printed by steam—that if they attempted violence there was a force ready to suppress it; but that if they were peaceable, their wages should be continued to every one of them till similar employment could be procured—a promise which was no doubt faithfully performed—and having so said, he distributed several copies among them. Thus was this most hazardous enterprise undertaken, and successfully carried through, and printing by steam on an almost gigantic scale given to the world."

A JOKE.—A joke may change the most resolute will of the most ferocious tyrant. All know how despotic and ferocious was Henry VIII., of England. He, having some motives for discontent with Francis I., of France, sent to him, as ambassador, an English bishop, whom he wished to charge with a message full of gall, pride, and menace. The prelate, perceiving all the peril of his mission, sought to excuse himself. "Fear nothing," said Henry to him, "since, if the King of France should take your life, I will cut off the heads of as many Frenchmen as I can lay my hands on." "True," replied the bishop, "but among all those heads there would not be one that would fit my bust as well as the one which is there now!" This jest made Henry laugh, and ended in causing him to change his resolution. Without this, perhaps England and France would have written the history of another war.

SINGULAR SUICIDE.—The Saratoga Republican of the 29th ult. says:—A woman named Lois P. Smith, a milliner by trade, who occupied a shop and tenement on Broadway, nearly opposite the Presbyterian Church, of this village, hung herself in her bedroom on the 26th inst. She was discovered on Wednesday morning suspended by a sheet thrown over the top of the door. An inquisition was held over the body by W. A. Mundell, Esq., and the Jury found that she killed herself in a fit of mental derangement. No particular cause is assigned for this rash act. She was always regarded as a singular, eccentric, weak-minded woman, and no doubt had been partially insane for years. In the room was found a dead kitten, and on a chair she left the following note, which shows that she was in a fit of mental derangement at the time of committing the deed: "O dear! bury my poor little kitten with me, as it is to me as an angel from above. O, grant me my wishes. Bury me in my back yard until the time expires that I have paid for the house. Lay my little angel by my right side on my right arm. Do not deny my wishes."

THE SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTE—Philosophical Apparatus.—In one of the rooms of the Smithsonian Institute is to be erected the philosophical machinery presented to the Institution by Dr. Hare, of Philadelphia, and worth $25,000. The chemical lecture room, on the next floor, has a groined ceiling, is heavily ribbed, and foliage at the intersections of the ribs. The cloister has pillars, heavily capped with every variety of foliage. The window glass, in the shape of the diamond fine crown, was imported from England. The inner doors are of Georgia pine, varnished; the outer are bronzed, ornamented with old Norman hinges and shields. The west wing, which is nearly complete, is highly ornamented, but of a heavier and more substantial structure than the east. The most distinguished feature is the apsis, a semi-circular projection, with vaulted roof and pillars.

VARIETY.

Some few years ago, when the population of London was not so numerous as it is at present, an able calculator estimated the number of Londoners who spent Sundays in adjacent villages, inns, tea-houses, &c., at 200,000. These he calculated spent each half a crown, amounting in the whole to £25,000. That sum multiplied by the number of Sundays in a year, gave, as the annual consumption of that day of rest, the immense sum of £1,300,000. Of these 200,000 persons, he calculated the returned situations as follows: —sober, 5000; in high glee, 90,000; drunkish, 30,000; staggering tipsy, 10,000; groggy, 15,000; dead drunk, 50,000. "Much," adds the calculator, "depends upon the weather."

When Capt. Parry wintered in the arctic regions, one of his officers, while the thermometer indicated 55 below zero, took a bottle of fresh water up the main top, and pouring it down through a colander, by the time it reached the roofing of the ship, it was congealed into irregular spherical pieces of ice, and was caught in a tin dish. The height was less than forty feet, and the water must have frozen in less than two seconds of time.

When Mr. Wedderburn, afterwards Lord Chancellor Loughborough, first traveled from Edinburgh to London, ninety years ago, he performed the journey in two days and three nights, in spite of all remonstrance, his friends advising him to rest a night at York, "several passengers who had gone through without stopping having died of apoplexy from the rapidity of the motion."

Old Isaac Walton says, a companion that is cheerful and free from swearing and scurrilous discourse, is worth gold. I love such mirth as does not make friends ashamed to look upon each other next morning; nor men, that cannot well bear it, to repent the money they spent when they be warmed with drink. And take this for a rule: you may pick out such times and companions, that you may make yourselves merrier for a little, than a great deal of money—for 'tis the company and not the change makes the feast.

We, all of us, have two educations, one of which we receive from others; another, and the most valuable, which we give ourselves. It is the last which fixes our grade in society, and eventually our actual value in this life, and perhaps the color of our fate hereafter. All the teachers and professors in the world would not make you a wise and good man, without your own co-operation; and if such you are determined to be, the want of them will not prevent it.

The best confession of wrong-doing in the past is right-doing now. When a man brings forth fruits meet for repentance, we take it for granted he is repentant, whether he says so or not. And yet we like confession, where error has been committed or wrong done. A man tenacious of opinion, and proud of his consistency, must possess rare moral courage to say, "I was wrong."

We have frequently witnessed, says the Maine Cultivator, the surprising docility of the cow when subjected to the surveilance of the yoke, and have often been surprised that she is not oftener made to assist in the performance of agrestic toils. In Scotland, speyed heifers are considered as valuable for farm work as young oxen, and those who have practiced using them in this country, speak in the highest terms of their tractableness and docility.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

BOARD OF INSTRTCTION.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., } Principals.
IRA SAYLES, A. M., }

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULATIONS.

1. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.
2. Punctuality in attending all regular Academic exercises will be required.
3. The use of Tobacco, for chewing or smoking, will not be allowed either in or about the Academic buildings.
4. Playing at games of chance cannot be allowed.
5. Using profane language cannot be allowed.
6. The use of any kind of intoxicating drinks cannot be allowed, unless prescribed in case of sickness, by a regular physician.
7. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, cannot be permitted.
8. Gentlemen and ladies of the Institution will not be permitted to visit the rooms of the opposite sex, except in cases of imperious necessity, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.
9. Good order must be maintained at all times, and in all the rooms and halls of the Institution, and in all the intercourse of students with each other.
10. All students are required to retire regularly at the ringing of the bell designated for that purpose, as occasion may require; and to rise at the ringing of the morning bell, also designated.
11. Any room, occupied by students, will, at all times, be subject to the visitation of the Teachers of the Institution, who are required to see that the regulations are complied with.
12. Students will be required to keep their own rooms in good order, and to pay all unnecessary damages, either of rooms or of furniture furnished with the rooms.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

GOVERNMENT.

The Government of the students will be in the hands of the Principals, and will be strictly and steadily exercised, and at the same time, strictly parental. The object of our academic government being to secure the greatest possible amount of physical, intellectual, and moral good to the students themselves, regularity and order of exercises, and good and wholesome citizens to society. No unwarrantable means will be made use of to enforce the observance of the above regulations; yet our constant endeavor will be, to make the means resorted to as effective as human means may be.

Parents who place their children in this Institution, and all students who are sufficiently old to understand the necessity of order, cannot be too well assured that the foregoing regulations form the most essential part of the contract between them and us; and that whatever student wantonly violates them, and shows himself incorrigibly determined on pursuing his waywardness, will be expelled from the privileges of the Institution, and will not be permitted to re-enter it again, without special proof of reformation. Nor will an expelled student have any deduction made from full term charges.

Farther, parents are requested not to place money for expenses, in the hands of students who are not old enough to use money with discretion and economy. Either of the Principals, or the Book-keeper of the Institution, will act as fiscal guardian of such students without charge.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

EXPENSES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Board, per term, | from $14 50 to | $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | | 1 50 |
| Washing, | | 2 50 |
| Fuel, | spring and fall, 75 cents, winter, | 1 50 |

JAMES A. BEGG ON THE SABBATH.

SECTION VIII. [Concluded.

During the captivity in Babylon, the prophet Ezekiel was commanded to testify still against the sins of his people, and in his enumeration of the various forms of evil which their departure from the Lord assumed, one is, "Thou hast despised mine holy things, and hast profaned my Sabbaths." "Her priests have violated my law, and have profaned mine holy things; they have put no difference between the holy and profane, neither have they showed difference between the unclean and the clean, and have hid their eyes from my Sabbaths, and I am profaned among them." "Moreover, this they have done unto me; they have defiled my sanctuary in the same day, and have profaned my Sabbaths." Ezek. 22: 8, 26; 23: 38.

Thus it was ever while under the chastening hand of the Lord in the land of their enemies.

We advance beyond the period of the captivity, to the no less memorable epoch of Judah's restoration from Babylon. Through the instrumentality of Cyrus, and under the direction of Ezra the scribe, and Nehemiah, cup-bearer to king Artaxerxes, Jerusalem was rebuilt. Although, in the language of the latter, Judah had dealt very corruptly, and had not kept the statutes nor the judgments which the Lord had commanded by Moses, this eminent patriot, in the true sense of that abused term, yet remembered and pleaded the divine promise, that if they turned to the Lord, He would redeem them from their captivity, and bring them again to their place. God heard his prayer, and gave him favor with the king his master; who not only allowed him to go up to rebuild Jerusalem, but gave every facility for the accomplishment of the work which Nehemiah had so much at heart. Now, touched with the long-suffering and love of God, and convinced that all God's appointments were for their good, we soon find that while engaged in rebuilding the city of Jerusalem, "all the people gathered themselves together as one man into the street that was before the water gate; and they spake unto Ezra the scribe, to bring the Book of the Law of Moses, which the Lord had commanded to Israel. And Ezra the priest brought the Law before the congregation, both of men and women, and all that could hear with understanding, upon the first day of the seventh month. And he read therein, before the street that was before the water gate, from the morning until midday, before the men, and the women, and those that could understand, and the ears of all the people were attentive unto the Book of the Law." Nehem. 8: 1—3.

The Levites caused the people to understand the Law; and the people stood in their place; so they read in the Book, in the Law of God, distinctly, and gave the sense, and caused them to understand the reading. Nehem. 8: 7, 8. There is a beautiful simplicity in this narration, which conveys important instruction as to the value of those Scriptures which are "given by inspiration of God." In the effort to instruct the people, to impart to them a correct knowledge of the revealed will of God was the great aim. The Levites read the Law, and gave the sense, and caused the people to understand it. No improvement on divine ordinances was expected or desired. "And they found written in the Law which the Lord had commanded by Moses, that the children of Israel should dwell in booths in the feast of the seventh month." (8: 14.) Strange as it appears, "since the days of Joshua the son of Nun unto that day, they had not done so." But the fact that Israel had long neglected and forgotten the divine appointment was not pleaded as a reason for continuing the omission of a declared duty. And they proceeded to celebrate the feast of Tabernacles seven days; "and there was very great gladness. Also day by day, from the first day unto the last day, he read in the Book of the Law of God." (8: 17, 18.)

Three days after, the children of Israel were assembled, with fasting, and with sackcloths, and earth upon them. And the seed of Israel separated themselves from all strangers, and stood and confessed their sins, and the iniquities of their fathers. And they stood up in their place, and read in the Book of the Law of the Lord their God, one-fourth part of the day, and another fourth part they confessed, and worshiped the Lord their God. (9: 1—3.)

Recounting the marvelous loving-kindness of the Lord, the Levites testifying of His mercy towards their fathers, thus in the name of their brethren acknowledge His grace in the gift of the Law and sanctification of His Sabbath: "Thou camest down also upon Mount Sinai, and spakest with them from heaven, and gavest them right judgments, and true laws, ['laws of truth,' marg.,] good statutes and commandments; and madest known unto them thy holy Sabbath, and commandedst them precepts, statutes, and laws, by the hand of Moses thy servant" (9: 13, 14.) Brought into a right condition of heart, such are the terms in which they speak of God's Law "given by the hand of Moses;" they are a precious divine gift. "Thou gavest them" the Law, as a whole, and as contemplating especially the preciousness to man of the hallowed day, they add, "And madest known unto them thy holy Sabbath." They speak from experience, and are enabled to give God the thanks due unto His name.

Although instituted at creation, the blessing of the Sabbath had rarely if ever been prized as it ought to have been; and in Egypt, the Israelites had by oppression probably been much prevented from enjoying many of its advantages. But from Sinai, the Lord again "made known unto them" His holy Sabbath. That this, however, cannot be meant as a declaration that the Sabbath was instituted only when promulgated from Sinai, is as we have seen no less evident from its primeval appointment than from the history of its observance by the Israelites themselves when favored with the manna before they reached the Mount of Sinai. It was God's "holy Sabbath" before he at this time made it known. No more, indeed, are we to infer that any other of the Ten Commandments made known to Israel at the same time were then new. The first commandment, requiring exclusive love and worship of the living God, and the sixth commandment prohibiting murder, for example, involve duties which were not unknown till promulgated from Sinai. God had said to Noah, "Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his blood be shed," (Gen. 9: 6,) and the whole history of the Lord's dealings with his people in all ages, previously, as well as since, has been the inculcation of and the encouragement to that love of God which the first commandment requires. And the same remark applies to God's making known to Israel his Sabbath, so long after its institution in Eden.

Nehemiah's chosen instructors of the people, still in confession to God say, "Nevertheless they were disobedient, and rebelled against Thee, and cast Thy Law behind their backs, and slew thy prophets which testified against them to turn them to Thee." They acknowledge the gracious purpose of God in His severest dealings, saying, Thou "testifiedst against them that Thou mightest bring them again unto Thy Law; yet they dealt proudly, and hearkened not unto thy commandments, but sinned against thy judgments, (which if a man do he shall live in them,) and withdrew the shoulder, and hardened their neck, and would not hear." (9: 29.)

With this confession of the sin of their kings, their princes, their priests, and their fathers, they made acknowledgment of God's righteousness in the chastisements He had administered, and entered into covenant to reform, including "their wives, and their sons, and their daughters, every one having knowledge, and having understanding." They "entered into a curse, and into an oath, to walk in God's Law which was given by Moses the servant of God, and to observe and do all the commandments of the Lord our Lord, and His judgments and His statutes; and that we would not give our daughters unto the people of the land, nor take their daughters for our sons. And if the people of the land bring ware or any victuals on the Sabbath day to sell, that we would not buy it of them on the Sabbath, or on the holy day, and that we would leave the seventh year, and the exaction of every debt." Nehem. 9: 26, 29; 10: 29—31.

This resolution of preserving the sanctity of the Sabbath was fully acted upon; for we find Nehemiah, in the concluding chapter of his book, in the enumeration of his various efforts for reform, thus testifying before the Lord, "In those days saw I in Judah, some treading winepresses on the Sabbath, and bringing in sheaves, and lading asses, as also wine, grapes, and figs, and all manner of burdens, which they brought into Jerusalem on the Sabbath day, and I testified against them in the day whereon they sold victuals. There dwelt men of Tyre also therein, which brought fish, and all manner of ware, and sold on the Sabbath unto the children of Judah, and in Jerusalem. Then I contended with the nobles of Judah, and said unto them, What evil thing is this that ye do, and profane the Sabbath day? Did not your fathers thus, and did not our God bring all this evil upon us, and upon this city? yet ye bring more wrath upon Israel by profaning the Sabbath. And it came to pass that when the gates of Jerusalem began to be dark before the Sabbath, I commanded that the gates should be shut, and charged that they should not be opened till after the Sabbath, and some of my servants set I at the gates, that there should no burden be brought in on the Sabbath day. So the merchants and sellers of all kinds of ware lodged without Jerusalem once or twice. Then I testified against them, and said unto them, Why lodge ye about the wall? If ye do so again, I will lay hands on you. From that time forth, came they no more on the Sabbath. And I commanded the Levites that they should cleanse themselves, and that they should come and keep the gates to sanctify the Sabbath day. Remember me, O my God, concerning this also, and spare me according to the greatness of thy mercy." Nehem. 13: 15—22.

Such is the form which Nehemiah's zeal for the honor of his God, and desire of good for his people, assumed. And have we not reason to believe, that still enlightened zeal for reformation will ever manifest a concern for the sanctification of the true Sabbath? When God put it into the heart of Nehemiah to seek the good of Jerusalem and Judah, he perceived the importance of so witnessing for the honor of his God, and of his people being thus blessed.

We have thus brought up this brief sketch of the Scriptural History of the Sabbath to the period of Judah's Restoration to their own land. In doing so, we have found nothing to indicate any purpose of God to change the Sabbath, or any relaxation of the authority under which at first it was sanctified. Every thing, on the contrary, indicates that the seventh day, till that period at least, retained all its importance in the view of the God of the Sabbath, and that of those who best knew His mind, and most loved His ways.

But before concluding this part of our subject, there remains to be considered for a moment the light which the Old Testament casts on the advancing age of Christianity. In the instructions of the prophets, is there any preparation made for a change of the Sabbath? Is there any weaning of the people from the integrity of the day which God had already sanctified and blessed? Any weakening of the authority of the Law given by the hand of Moses, for Israel, in which the fourth as well as the other commandments found a place?

The answer to these questions is instructive. For not only is there no premonition that such a change is contemplated; but there is the most urgent reinforcement of the Law. The latest injunction of God by Malachi, the last of the Old Testament prophets, is of this character: "Remember ye the Law of Moses, my servant, which I commanded to him in Horeb, for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments." Mal. 4: 4. With these words fully in view, as the latest communication of the mind of God, and as closing that communication, the faithful of Israel were found waiting for the Messiah when the law of God appeared. And from it, we ask, What reason had they to expect either the repeal of the Sabbath or the abrogation of any part of the Law? Independently of the fact that the Sabbath had been sanctified to Adam and his seed from the beginning, the entire Mosaic itual, as well as the Ten Commandments embraced within the Law, was given at first as a perpetual covenant, throughout all their generations; and here the prophet still declares it was commanded by God "for all Israel." The ushering in the Son of God into the world—nay, the crowning him with Millennial glory, which is the subject of this prediction, in which the injunction to remember the Law of Moses occurs, contemplates no change for Israel in this respect, either immediate or remote. The Law is, on the contrary, invested with all the force and all the sanctity of a re-injunction; and Israel would surely be well entitled to expect very clear and explicit authority from God of any asserted change of their ordinances in a new dispensation, with the language of the closing canon of inspiration of their own dispensation sounding in their ears: "Remember ye the Law of Moses, my servant, which I commanded to him in Horeb, with the statutes and judgments." And more particularly with reference to the subject of our present investigation, with our hearts refreshed by the review of promises of blessing upon those who sanctify the Sabbath, and the denunciation of the prophets against Sabbath violation, we are surely called to beware of it, whatever form it may assume, or under whatever specious name its desecration may be disguised.

GOOD-BYE.

Good-bye, proud world! I'm going home;
Thou art not my friend, and I'm not thine,
Long through thy weary crowds I roam;
A river-ark on the ocean brine,
Long I've been tossed like the driven foam;
But now, proud world! I'm going home.

Good-bye to Flattery's fawning face;
To Grandeur, with his wise grimace;
To upstart Wealth's averted eye;
To supple Office, low and high;
To crowded halls, to court and street;
To frozen hearts and hasting feet;
To those who go, and those who come;
Good-bye, proud world! I'm going home.

I am going to my own hearth-stone,
Bosomed in yon green hills alone—
A secret nook in a pleasant land,
Whose groves the frolic fairies planned;
Whose arches green, the livelong day,
Echo the blackbird's roundelay,
And vulgar feet have never trod
A spot that is sacred to thought and God.

Oh, when I am safe in my sylvan home,
I tread on the pride of Greece and Rome;
And when I am stretched beneath the pines,
Where the evening star so holy shines,
I laugh at the lore and the pride of man,
At the sophist schools, and the learned clan;
For what are they all, in their high conceit,
When man in the bush with God may meet?

CONVERSION OF A FEMALE INFIDEL.

The Rev. Dr. Mason, of New York, was requested to visit a lady in dying circumstances in that city, who, together with her husband, openly avowed infidel principles, though they attended his ministry. On approaching her bedside, he asked if she felt herself a sinner, and her need of a Savior. She frankly told him she did not, and that she believed the doctrine of a Mediator to be all a farce. 'Then,' said the Doctor, 'I have no consolation for you, not one word of comfort. There is not a single passage in the Bible, that warrants me to speak peace to one who rejects the Mediator provided; you must take the consequences of your infidelity.' He was on the point of leaving the room, when one said, 'Well, if you cannot speak consolation to her, you can pray for her.' To this he assented, and kneeling down by the bedside, prayed for her as a guilty sinner just sinking into hell, and then, arising from his knees, he left the house. To his great surprise, a day or two after, he received a message from the lady herself, earnestly desiring that he would come down and see her, and that without delay. He immediately obeyed the summons. But what was his amazement, when, on entering the room, she held out her hand to him, and said with a benignant smile, 'It is all true,—all that you said on the Sabbath is true. I have seen myself the wretched sinner that you described me in prayer. I have seen Christ to be that all-sufficient Savior you said he was, and God has mercifully snatched me from that abyss of infidelity in which I was sunk, and placed me on that Rock of ages. There I am secure; there I shall remain: I know whom I have believed.' The Doctor's prayer, through the Divine blessing, fastened on her mind; she was convinced of her guilty state, and enabled to rest wholly on the Savior; and, after solemnly charging her husband to educate their daughter in the fear of God, she expired in the exercise of joy and peace in believing.

CHRISTIAN HOSPITALITY.—"In this country," writes an Illinois colporteur, "I found one professed Universalist, who told me he was 85 years of age, and never yet owned a Bible. He would not purchase, neither would he receive one as a gift, remarking, 'that they were too religious for him.' All my entreaties and arguments were unavailing. During the nine months I have been employed, I have visited 813 families, sold 1,789 volumes, and supplied 530 Bibles and Testaments to these destitute. I have not been charged for food, lodging, or horsekeeping, during these nine months, or once denied the privileges of Christian hospitality."

DEAN SWIFT AND THE TAILOR.

A tailor in Dublin, near the residence of the Dean, took it into his head that he was specially and divinely inspired to interpret the prophecies, and especially the book of Revelations. Quitting the shop-board, he turned out a preacher, or rather a prophet, until his customers had left the shop, and his family were likely to famish. His monomania was well known to the Dean, who benevolently watched for an opportunity to turn the current of his thoughts. One night, the tailor, as he fancied, got an especial revelation to go and convert Dean Swift, and the next morning took up the line of march for the Deanery. The Dean, whose study was furnished with a glass door, saw the tailor approach, and instantly surmised the nature of his errand. Throwing himself into an attitude of solemnity and thoughtfulness, with the Bible open before him, and his eyes fixed on the 10th chapter of Revelations, he awaited his approach. The door opened, and the tailor announced in an unearthly voice—

"Dean Swift, I am sent by the Almighty to announce to you."

"Come in, my friend," said the Dean, I am in great trouble, and no doubt the Lord has sent you to help me out of my difficulty."

This unexpected welcome inspired the tailor, and strengthened his assurance in his own prophetic character, and disposed him to listen to the disclosure.

"My friend," said the Dean, "I have just been reading the 10th chapter of Revelations, and am greatly distressed at a difficulty I have met with; and you are the very man sent to help me out. Here is an account of an angel that came down from heaven, who was so large that he placed one foot upon the earth, and the other upon the sea, and lifted his hands to heaven. Now my knowledge of mathematics," continued the Dean, "has enabled me to calculate exactly the size and form of this angel; but I am in great difficulty, for I wish to ascertain how much cloth it will take to make him a pair of breeches, and as that is your line of business, I have no doubt the Lord has sent you to show me."

The exposition came like an electric shock to the poor tailor! He rushed from the house, ran to his shop, and a sudden revulsion of thought and feeling came over him. Making breeches was exactly his kind of business. He returned to his occupation thoroughly cured of his prophetical revelation by the wit of the Dean.

THE GUIDE.

A traveler had a long and dangerous journey to make over a rugged, rocky mountain, and was not acquainted with the road. He therefore inquired of one who he had heard had traveled over the same road. This man described to him very precisely and accurately the right way, as well as all the bye-paths and precipices which he must avoid, and the rocky heights which he must climb. And the better to aid him, he gave him a map, on which everything was marked out with mathematical percision.

The traveler laid all well to heart, and at every post of his progress, and every bye-way, he recalled the directions, and carefully examined the map of his friend. So he went on his way expeditiously; but the farther he advanced, the higher did the rocks tower, and the road seemed to lose itself in the desolate, dreary cliffs.

Then his courage failed; he looked up anxiously to the grey, high-jutting rocks, and exclaimed: It is impossible for a mortal to travel over so rugged a way, and to climb this steep ascent—eagle's wings, and the feet of the chamois, are needed for it!

Already he looked back and thought of the way which he had come, when a voice called to him:—Take courage, and follow me! When he turned about, to his great joy, he beheld before him the form of the man who had described to him the way, whom he saw quietly and securely wending his way among cliffs, and precipices, and rushing mountain torrents. This gave him confidence, and he followed on after the other with equal spirit and expedition. Before evening they had ascended the mountain, and a lovely valley, where myrtles and pomegranates bloomed, received them at the end of the journey.

The glad traveler thanked his guide, and said:—How shall I repay thee? Thou hast not only directed me in the right way, but hast also given me strength and courage to travel it.

The other replied: O, no! am not I a pilgrim like yourself? And are you not the same as you were? You have only learned from me what you are, and of what yon are capable.

THE RUSSIAN CLERGY.

All the writers, of every nation and creed, with whom we are acquainted, are unanimous on these points; all declare, una voce, that to appreciate, or even to imagine, the moral or social degradation of the Russian clergy, it is necessary to have lived amongst them. The very proverbs which are current in Russian society, of every class, and which are heard in Russia alone, reveal their true character. "Son of a priest," is the last insult to which a man has recourse in reviling an enemy. "Am I a 'pope,' that I should eat twice?" is the disdainful allusion to the habits of the half-famished clergy. 'Like pastor like flock,' is the comment upon the irregularities of laymen. And these are only specimens. Like the fallen priesthood of Syria and Armenia, the chief characterisics of the Russian clergy appear to be habitual drunkenness, profound ignorance, and the lowest habits of a sordid and animal existence. "The vice of drunkenness is so common amongst them," says Theiner, "that it excites no observation." In the ships of this navy, he adds, where they always receive an increase of salary, "the commanders usually place the chaplain under arrest twenty-four hours before divine service, to make sure that he will not present himself drunk before the altar. Their general character may be gathered from the official and annual "reports" of the "holy synod" itself. In the report for 1836, it appears that, during that single year, one in fifty of the whole Russian clergy was under condemnation by the public sentence of the various tribunals. Since that period the moral state of the clergy, if we may believe the reluctant testimony of the synod, has steadily deteriorated. Thus in 1837, comparing the number of condemnations with the total number of clergy, it appears that these amounted for the whole empire to one in twenty-four! in 1838, to one in twenty-three! and in 1839, to one in twenty! In the four years, from 1836 to 1839, the synod reports that 15,443, or one-sixth of the 102,456 ecclesiastics of every rank and grade, were under judgment, and that, as the supreme procurator himself declares, "for infamous crimes."

ORIGIN OF THE ARMENIAN REFORMATION.

In 1829 a young man saw a cheap Testament, in a shop in Constantinople, which he bought. He read it, and found to his surprise that it contained different views and doctrines from what were taught in the Armenian church. His mind became excited, and he communicated his feelings to two other friends, and they anxiously studied the New Testament together. In 1833, they heard of the Ameircan missionaries at Constantinople, and visited them. They were delighted when they found the missionaries had brought to them the religion of the New Testament, which they never before heard professed by any people. Since that time the progress of truth has been silent and slow among the twenty millions of Armenians in Western Asia, yet it is progressive. Colporteurs sell Bibles and religious tracts readily, and eager ears are opened to the expounders of the new religion. Already five flourishing Protestant churches are established in different parts of Turkey; persecution has followed in its worst forms, but the adhesion of Christians to their faith, and their consistent piety, has secured for them the protection of government, and they are now enjoying an unexampled degree of religious liberty in the Mohammedan empire. ### "MORE LIGHT—MORE LIGHT."

It is recorded of one of the worthies of the Scottish Church, that when he had acquitted himself, in a public disputation, with great credit to his Master's cause, a friend begged to see the notes which he had been observed to write, supposing that he had taken down the arguments of his opponents, and sketched the substance of his reply. Greatly was he surprised to find that his notes consisted simply of these ejaculatory petitions—"More light—more light—more light!" Greenham being asked his judgment of some important matters, answered, "Sir, neither am I able to speak, nor you to hear, for we have not prayed. I may indeed talk, and you may answer, as natural men, but we are not now prepared to confer as children of God." How soon would controversy cease in the church, if such a spirit were prevalent.

THE CONFIDENCE OF A DYING CHRISTIAN.—The Rev. Mr. H. was for many years a co-pastor with the Rev. Matthew Wilkes, of the congregations at the Tabernacle and Tottingham court chapel, London. His venerable colleague, who called upon him a few hours before his death, in a characteristic conversation, said, "Is all right for another world?"

"I am very happy," said Mr. H.

"Have you made your will?"

Mistaking the question—"The will of the Lord be done," said the dying Christian.

"Shall I pray with you?"

"Yes, if you can," alluding to Mr. Wilkes's feelings, at that moment considerably excited.

After prayer, "Well, my brother, if you had a hundred souls, could you commit them all to Christ now?" alluding to an expression Mr. H. frequently used in the pulpit.

With a mighty and convulsive effort he replied, "A million!"

CHRISTIAN LIBERTY.—Among the prisoners taken captive at the battle of Waterloo, there was a Highland piper. Napoleon, struck with his mountain dress and sinewy limbs, asked him to play on his instrument, which is said to sound delightfully in the mountains and glens of Scotland. "Play a pibroch," said Napoleon, and the Highlander played it. "Play a march," it was done. "Play a retreat." "Na, na," said the Highlander, "I never learned to play a retreat!" No retreat! should be the motto emblazoned on the standard of every Christian warrior, as he goes forth to battle, "not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places."

Ephes. vi. 13—Wherfore, take unto you the whole armor of God, that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all to stand.

CARE IN ADMITTING TO THE CHURCH.—A writer at the West speaks on this subject in the Home Missionary as follows: "Could I address the churches at the East, I would say: Be very cautious in the reception of members. When you admit a person, you say emphatically, 'We believe you are a Christian, prepared for the church triumphant.' If you encourage him to trust in a false and delusive hope, he will in all probability be lost forever. Those who here apostatize, exert the strongest influence against religion, and their case is more hopeless than any others. Beware of that liberal human policy which tolerates gross inconsistencies among professors, and which practically lowers the standard of God's law. [N. E. Puritan.

THE ZEAL OF THE JEWS.

"Of late our city has appeared to be alive with the multitudes of Jews, who have been celebrating the opening of their new year. It is quite interesting to see the self-denial with which most of these children of Israel attend to their numerous religious festivals. Passing along the streets where they reside, a stranger in the city is surprised to see so many stores and shops closed, while the majority in the vicinity are open and prosecuting business. Every Friday evening, from sundown to Saturday at the same time, the conscientious Jews remit their business, while the Gentiles around them are busily engaged in their vocations. In addition to this, they have numerous festivals during the year; and, as they cannot do business on Sunday, the time they devote to their religious observances is far beyond that thus employed by Christians. If the same zeal were only according to knowledge, it would enable these ancient covenant people to do much good."

The above paragraph from the New York correspondence of the Baptist Register, pays a merited tribute to the zeal of the Jews in attending to their religious institutions. On a recent Sabbath-day, we had occasion to pass through several streets of this city, and were surprised to see how many of the stores occupied by Jews were closed, while the neighboring stores were driving a brisk and profitable business. On one side of the Bowery alone we counted some thirty stores closed, and in a single block on Chatham street, between Pearl and Duane streets, we counted nearly as many more. Doubtless the proportion of Jews in these localities is greater than in other parts of the city; still there is no part in which Jews do not reside, or where the evidences of their regard for the Sabbath are wholly wanting.

The sight of these things suggested a reflection, which we will venture to put on paper, although it may not be much to the credit of our boasted Christianity. In conversation with professors of religion who are doing business in New York, we have frequently met with those who acknowledge the seventh day of the week to be the Sabbath, and deny all obligation to keep the first day, but who still keep their stores open on the seventh day and close them on the first day. When we urge upon them the inconsistency of such a course, they will perhaps acknowledge it, but still plead the necessities of the case—their families must be supported, and their business would suffer if they should shut up shop on the last and busiest day of the week. If they are referred to the precepts of the Gospel as inculcating self-denial, and requiring even the sacrifice of all things when necessary to obey the truth, they confess that it is so, and will often go so far as to acknowledge, that if they had religion enough, they would carry out these precepts by observing the Sabbath. But there is the trouble—they have not religion enough, as they confess in words, and prove by their practice. Now, when we thought of these things, and saw before us such evidences of the willingness of the Jews to make sacrifices for the sake of what they regard as the Sabbath, we involuntarily asked, Can it be, that these Jews, who are so often branded as infidels, have really more religion than their Christian neighbors? Can it be, that those who reject Christ are more ready to carry out his precepts than those who profess to receive him? Reluctant as we were to admit this conclusion, we did not see how, with the facts before us, to resist it. It is common for the Christians of this country to judge well or ill of those who profess Christianity in other countries, according to their willingness or unwillingness to make sacrifices for the sake of Christianity. What if the same rule of judgment should be applied in this case? We fear that some of those who profess a great deal of regard for what they call the Sabbath, would be found to lack that evidence of regard for it which is afforded by sacrifices on its account.

One word about the lack of knowledge in the zeal of the Jews for the Sabbath. The Sabbath was one of the first institutions given to man in Paradise. It was incorporated with the Ten Commandments, which are generally acknowledged to be moral in their nature, and perpetually binding. It occupies a prominent place throughout the history of Israel as recorded in the sacred volume—the richest blessings being connected with its faithful observance, and the severest curses being threatened in case they should neglect it. Such is the knowledge which the Jews have of the Sabbath. Is their zeal in observing it greater than such knowledge ought to inspire? We think not. If in any respect their zeal does not accord with their knowledge, it must be because they are not zealous enough—not because they are too zealous. But there is a zeal in respect to what is often falsely called the Sabbath, the accordance of which with knowledge we very much doubt. It is that zeal which prompts a certain class of men to assert the sabbatic character of the first day of the week, about which the sacred volume says not a word, and then to besiege the civil authorities for laws to compel all men—Christians, Mohammedans, Infidels, even the Jews and Sabbatarians, who may have kept the Sabbath of the Lord on the seventh day in all good conscience—to keep the first day by resting from labor. This is a zeal not simply without knowledge, but contrary to knowledge. In view of it, and without wishing to say one word to strengthen the Jew in his opposition to Christianity, we would suggest, that rebukes on the score of sabbatic zeal would probably find quite as good subjects among Christians as among Jews.

PROGRESS OF PERSECUTION IN PENNSYLVANIA.

Week before last we announced, that three persons, connected with the German Seventh-day Baptists at Snowhill, had been convicted of working on Sunday, and were expecting to go to jail therefor. We have since learned that they were taken to the county jail, imprisoned six days, and discharged. This was for gathering in grain on a Sunday during harvest, when it was suffering very much from the heavy rains. Had they been nominal observers of Sunday, they might possibly have been acquitted on the plea of necessity, as provided in the act of 1794. But they were connected with a Society which observes the Sabbath, and denies the claim of the first day to be the Sabbath; hence the law is enforced in all its rigor, and these three men have paid the penalty of its violation by suffering imprisonment six days.

Two of the persons alluded to above, are included in the number whom we have already mentioned as having been informed against for picking apples on Sunday. Judgment has been rendered against them, and they are expecting soon to be taken to jail again.

We are farther informed, that since the decision of the Supreme Court, the fire of persecution has broken out at Morrison's Cove in Bedford County. Several cases have been appealed to the County Court, where they remain undecided

Under such circumstances, our German friends are determined again to apply to the Legislature for relief, and have confident expectations of obtaining it. There is, however, some difference of opinion among them, as to the best form of petition—whether to ask for the abolition of the law under which they are persecuted, or to ask simply for protection on their own premises. Our opinion is, that they are doing more for the cause of truth about these days than they ever were before, and that they ought not, from a desire of speedy relief, to be induced to take up with a partial recognition of their rights. While doing so much to enlighten and arouse the public mind, they can very well afford to suffer some temporary inconvenience. In due time, and that not far distant, their rights will be fully acknowledged, and they honored for maintaining them. But of this more anon.

SHOULD CHRISTIANS BE POLITICIANS?

The above interrogation, considered in its true light, is worthy of the most careful consideration, especially in an era like the present. When the elements of truth, long smothered, are struggling for ventilation, and by their resistless expansibility upheaving the solid foundations of time-honored political institutions; when gray-haired monarchs haste from their tottering thrones to lonely exile; when princes, disrobed of royalty, beg at the peasant's door; and when despotism, both in the old and new world, from the top-tower of his triple-walled bastile, looks fearfully at the gathering hosts of freedom;—in times like these, the Christian may well ask, "What part have I to act in this grand drama?" The question is not, whether the Christian should be a demagogue, or a stupid devotee at the shrine of party; but, should he be a politician in the strict sense of the term. "Politics," says Webster, "is the science of government—that part of ethics which consists in the regulation and government of a nation or state, for the preservation of its safety, peace, and prosperity." The question, then, becomes, Is it the duty of Christians to establish and perpetuate the institution of civil government? The views which we wish Christians to examine are the following:—

God, in creation, designed the good of moral beings. This proposition needs no proof. That moral government is an indispensable means of securing this good, is evident from the fact that the nature of moral beings demands certain rules of action in order to secure their greatest good; and as rules of action imply moral government, therefore moral government is an indispensable means. Now, 1st. Whatever is indispensable to the securing of the end or design of creation, is a part of moral government. 2d. Civil governments are thus indispensable. Therefore civil governments are a part of moral governments. The minor proposition in this syllogism may need a little proof. Then we propose, 1st. That moral beings, possessing different degrees of information on the same subject, will be likely to disagree. 2d. Men do possess information in different degrees. Therefore there will always exist a demand for human adjudication to apply the moral law in the given case. Again, the Bible every where recognizes human government as a part of God's moral government. (See Romans 13: 1—7; 1 Peter 2: 13, 14, also the book of Daniel.) The fact cannot be denied, that the passages quoted represent human government as of God, forming a part of his scheme for the moral government of the universe. This point then being settled, we can proceed to an application. 1st. Whatever forms a part of God's moral government, all men are bound to aid in supporting. 2d. Human government forms such a part. Therefore all men are bound to aid in its support. In a government like ours, where it is the prerogative of every man to vote, as the agency through which he gives character to the legislation of the nation, he is morally bound to give it a moral character by voting for such men as shall legislate in accordance with the laws of God. He cannot escape the obligation, any more than he can the obligation to love God; for an obligation to love God implies an obligation to use all means to secure his glory. This we have shown to be a means. Therefore he is bound to make use of it. We conclude, then, that the Christian who lives on the daily blessings secured alone by human government, and refuses to engage in giving it character and support by his vote and otherwise, is not only an example of ingratitude, but of opposition to God and morality.

It is objected, that in the exercise of governmental powers, the law of love is subverted. We answer, that love is a universal principle, seeking the greatest good of the greatest number. Whenever the few shall destroy the good of the many, they make their rights to society a forfeiture, and it becomes the government to take that forfeiture at their hands. This is in obedience to the demands of love, and not opposed to them.

Again, it is objected, that "Christians are not to be diverted from the work of saving souls, by meddling with politics." To which we answer, 1st. Whatever constitutes an indispensable means of salvation, the Christian should labor to secure, and when thus employed is laboring for the "salvation of souls." 2d. Order in society, secured alone by civil government, is an indispensable means of salvation. Therefore the faithful Christian must be a politician.

We conclude, then, that in a popular government politics are a part of religion; and being a means of good to man, all men are as much bound to be politicians as to seek the good of man. When we cease to be politicians, we cease to seek the greatest good of man; and ceasing to seek the greatest good of man, we cease to be Christians. The conclusion, then, is inevitable, that no man can be a consistent Christian without being a politician. Now, if any one is disposed to find fault with this conclusion, let him be particularly careful to examine the reasoning by which we have arrived at it.

It is true, that Christians have much to do besides meddling with politics; and they have much to do too besides confounding the right of human government with the abuse of it by wicked men. How often do men excuse themselves on the ground of superior holiness—too dignified to stoop and "dabble in the dirty waters of politics." They will admit, at the same time, that the wicked need the restraint of law, and that the good of beings demands the administration of equitable laws, but they shrink with holy horror from the task, leaving the government in the hands of the wicked, vainly dreaming that they will enact laws for the suppression of vices which they daily practice; that infidels will protect religion, tyrants liberty, and the licentious virtue, and then, adding insult to injury, will pray for righteous rulers and just laws. It is too true, that the waters of politics are impure; yea, stained with the blood of injured innocence, flowing in gushing streams from the lacerated backs of three millions of God's poor, and made salt with the fast-falling tears of the ruined victims of legalized intemperance. But let us ask, How came these waters so? What has opened the veins of bleeding humanity, and who has filled the cup of bitterness, and held it to the trembling lips of the inebriate? Those ministers, deacons, and laymen, too holy to dabble in the dirty waters of politics, have done it. To permit a deed to be done, having means to prevent it, is equivalent to doing it. They have stood tamely by, while the poisoned dagger of political enactment has been drawn and plunged to the vitals of virtue and religion. They have abstracted political acts from the catalogue of moral obligation, and handed the government over to the blind guidance of perverted sensuality. Religion alone can purify these corrupted streams. Who shall apply it? Will the ungodly? Never. Then the Christian must. What a field for labor! Intemperance has robbed thousands of religious instruction, and dragged thousands more to hopeless misery. Slavery has shut the Bible and closed the gates of knowledge on starving millions. Such are the effects of polluted politics. The instrument appointed by Heaven to bless man, is made to curse him; and instead of rolling forward the wheels of salvation, opposes a barrier more formidable than the mental darkness which enshrouds the victim of infatuation as she throws her tender infant to the jaws of the crocodile of the Ganges. These waters must be purified, or religion must die. Already have the scaly monsters issued from these putrid lakes and stagnant pools, and wound their forms around the altars of God. The light of religious truth, in word and deed, must fall in scorching rays on these waters of political putrifaction, separate the pure from the impure elements, as the sun evaporates the crystal waters of the ocean, to fall again in refreshing showers, while the impurities, with all the reptiles that crawl therein, shall faint and die beneath the scorching ray. The Christian who fears to plunge in and drag the impurities from our political sea, will never wear a martyr's crown. The contagious disease will not be stayed, if the physician stands aloof. What would be thought of the physician who, in case of imminent danger, should refuse aid, and see a silly quack administer prussic acid for soda? Yet that man is not more strangely inconsistent than the Christian who absolves himself from politics. D. E. M.

PEACE CONVENTION IN BRUSSELS.

For some time past, our philanthropic countryman, Elihu Burritt, has been laboring in Europe to get up a Convention, which should take the incipient steps to abolish war among the nations of the earth. His plan, as set forth in a circular, was, to organize and inaugurate a simultaneous moral agitation in favor of a High Court of Nations, and a code of international laws, by which all cases of international controversy should be adjudicated; and to provide for the formation of committees, or the acquisition of correspondents, in different countries, through whom the public press, the platform, and the pulpit, might everywhere be enlisted in favor of a proposition so rational, humane, and Christian. The Convention was held at Brussels and was attended by about three hundred Delegates—Belgian, British, American, &c. The essays and discussions were mostly in the French language, and extended through two days. A good degree of harmony prevailed, and the propositions presented for consideration were adopted by nearly unanimous votes. Elihu Burritt, who was one of the Vice Presidents, is to write a history of the affair; until the appearance of which, our readers must content themselves with the following propositions, adopted after the reading of essays, and more or less speaking, upon each:—

1. The irrational, inequitable, inhuman, and unchristian arbitrament of War.

2. The expediency of recommending to the civilized and professedly Christian Governments of Europe and America, the adoption of an Arbitration Clause in all international Treaties, by which questions of dispute which may arise, and which might possibly issue in an appeal to the sword, shall be settled by mediation.

3. The propriety of convoking a Congress of Nations, the object of which shall be to form an international Code, in order, as far as possible, to settle on a satisfactory basis most questions, and generally to secure Peace.

4. The importance of recommending to the several Governments of Europe and America, mutual disarmament, the exchange of good offices, &c. &c., to promote the welfare of all.

GERRIT SMITH ON BAPTISM.

A report has been in circulation for some time past, that Gerrit Smith, of Peterboro, New York, has joined the Baptist denomination. A letter from him, which we find in a recent number of the Christian Contributor, says that the report is untrue; that he has for many years been opposed to all sects; that he believes "the Christians of a given locality, constitute in the eye of God, the one church of such locality; and that the Christians of such locality, instead of making various churches to suit their various tastes, are bound to aim to take the church in such locality just as God sees it, and tenders it to them; and to acknowledge, as members of it, all in such locality who appear to be Christians, however widely they may differ from each other in doctrine or practice." Mr. Smith states the following as the probable occasion of the report of his joining the Baptists:—

"In the spring of 1847, the 'Church of Peterboro' resolved to investigate the question of baptism. It is in the habit of investigating questions; and is, at the present time, seeking to learn the truth respecting the Sabbath. Its inquiries on the subject of baptism were not brought to a close until last July. As we all came to the conclusion, that baptism is a rite of the church of Christ, those of us (myself included) who believed that we had never been baptized, could no longer delay to be. That I should regard myself as unbaptized was, well nigh, unavoidable. Even in the judgment of Pedobaptists, I had never been baptized. It is true, that I had been sprinkled in my infancy; but neither of my parents were then Christians.

"When I came to be baptized, I preferred immersion—for I had, now, come to be established in the belief, to which I had always inclined, that nothing short of immersion answers the demands of the rite of baptism.

"Lest it might be inferred, from what I have said, that I believe in infant baptism, I will add, that I have ever entertained doubts of it, and do, now, confidently believe, that it is unauthorized. If there be a warrant for it in the Scriptures, I do not see it. To me circumcision and infant baptism appear to have no connection with each other. But for the supposed connection between them, there would, however, probably, be no one to defend infant baptism.

"I close with saying, that I do not claim to have made a learned investigation of the subject of baptism. Of such an investigation I am entirely incapable. I am not a scholar. I know very little of church history; quite too little of the Bible in my own tongue; and next to nothing of it in any other. So far, therefore, as learning is needful in this case, my opinions on the subject of baptism are valueless; and in no point of view are they entitled to influence the opinions of others.

Your friend and brother,
GERRIT SMITH."

Premium of a Library.—The American Tract Society offers a complete set of the volumes published by the Society, to the writer of the best article on each of the following topics, viz:

1. The best authentic narrative, suited to lead the impenitent to the cross.
2. The best article on the duty of individual Christian effort for the salvation of souls.
3. The best article on novel reading.
4. The best religious anecdote.

The articles are to be written in the course of the year 1849, and published in the American Messenger. The more condensed the article the better, and none will be accepted exceeding a column and a half in length. The articles are to be forwarded to the American Tract Society, post paid, and submitted to a committee on premiums, who will make the award.

Mr. Wade and his Labors.—The New York State Baptist Convention was held at Rochester last week. Among the interesting incidents of the Convention, was the introduction of Mr. and Mrs. Wade, Mrs. Brayton, and Mrs. Van Duzen, from the Karen Mission. Mr. Wade was absent twenty-six years. Perhaps there is not another instance in the records of missionary history, where the husband and wife returned together, after twenty-six years labor in a foreign land, with the prospect of returning and spending ten more years to preach the Gospel amid the Karen jungles. Mr. Bright, in welcoming back this missionary band, said of Mr. Wade:—

"He had experienced all the horrors of the Burman death prison, and had known what it was to escape from death when the axe of the executioner was uplifted to strike the fatal blow. He had been spared by the mercy of God, and lived to see many a Karen jungle bud and blossom like the rose. He had broken bread to a church of four hundred members in 'the City of Love,' and had buried in their waters one hundred dear converts, some of whom had gone to their rest in Heaven, and some still live. More than this, by his labors this people had been made ready to receive the word of the Lord. This brother had done more than to conquer a kingdom—he had reduced the language of that people to writing; and if the Karen is now able to read from the Bible the word of life, that 'God so loved the world that He gave his only-begotten Son to die, that all who believe in Him may have eternal life,' if he has the Scriptures to clasp to his heart as the dearest treasure, they owe it, under God, to this brother, and the encouragement of this Society."

The finances of the State Baptist Society were reported upon as follows:—

| | |
|---|---|
| Balance from last report, | $3,355 22 |
| Receipts since the last year, | 7,204 41 |
| Total, | $10,559 62 |
| Amount charged since Oct. 1847, | 6,275 94 |
| Balance, | $4,283 69 |

Congregational Methodists.—We learn from the Journal of Commerce, that the decision of Judge Edmonds, adverse to the Methodist Centenary Church in Brooklyn, and requiring them to receive the preacher appointed by the General Conference, induced a large portion of its members to relinquish the property and form another and an independent society with the pastor of their choice. Several other Methodist Episcopal Churches have also recently establishep or declared their independence; we believe two more in Brooklyn, one in New York, three in Philadelphia, and some in other parts of the country. A Convention of pastors and delegates from those in these three cities and their neighborhoods, met a short time ago in Philadelphia, and formed what they call the "Brooklyn Association of the pastors and delegates of the Congregational Methodist Church." Their first regular meeting will be held on the first Wednesday in December next, in Brooklyn.

Interesting Missionary Intelligence.—Recent intelligence from Ceylon, says the Journal of Commerce, received at the Missionary Rooms in Boston, states that in the progress of a revival there, seven native youths connected with the Missionary Seminary at Batticotta, had experienced, religion,—prospectively an important event, from their great influence. Also at the Sandwich Islands, an interesting revival had been in progress for some time. The King was among the hopeful converts.

Methodist Missions.—The Report of the Southern Methodist Episcopal Missionary Society states, that they now supply 334 missionaries: Among the Indians, 34; among the colored people, 130; in Texas, 64; among the destitute portions of the South, 97; Germany, 7; China, 2. Receipts, $62,613—which, divided among the 334 missionaries, gives an average of $187 and a fraction.

Sailing of Missionaries.—Fourteen missionaries sailed from Boston, week before last, for different stations in Asia; eleven of them were sent out by the American Board of Commissioners, and three by the Baptist Missionary Union. Last week the ship Cato was to sail from Boston to Calcutta, with a number of missionaries.

The Missionary Board of the Methodist Episcopal Church have taken measures for the formation of a new Conference on the Pacific Coast, as authorized by the General Conference. Two missionaries will be sent as early as next spring to California.

Mr. and Mrs. Wade, returned missionaries of the Baptist Missionary Union, are now residing with a sister of Mrs. Wade, in the vicinity of Eaton Village, Madison Co., N. Y., where they expect to spend the winter. They intend to return to Burmah as soon as health will permit.

Mrs. Stoddard, wife of Rev. Mr. Stoddard, who has for four or five years been one of the missionaries of the American Board to the Nestorians, died of cholera, in June last, at Trebizond. She was on her way home with her husband, who was returning on account of his health.

Mrs. Eliza C. Allen, wife of Rev. Ira M. Allen, well-known as editress of the Mother's Journal, died in this city on Sunday, Oct. 15.

We see it stated that nine divorces of man and wife, were ordered by the Superior Court of Connecticut, last week sitting, at Danbury.

FOREIGN NEWS.

Since our last, two steamers from Liverpool have arrived, the Britannia at New York, and the Niagara at Boston. We give below the principal items of news.

England.

The Chartist trials in London have been concluded. Conviction has been the uniform result. Dowling, the Irish confederate Cuffry, Laeur, Fay, and Mulling, were sentenced to transportation for life. Several of the less prominent conspirators pleaded guilty, and were subjected to fine and imprisonment. Against others, the Attorney-General abandoned the prosecution, contenting himself with binding them in their own recognizances to be forthcoming when called upon by the authorities.

Ireland.

The trial of Smith O'Brien was proceeding at Clonmel. Arrests continue to be made of those implicated in the late movements, or who furnished aid to the insurrectionists.

Mr. Smith O'Brien has undertaken to pay for competent legal assistance for all the poor men who are to be tried, leaving the choice of individuals to themselves. It is said that his own counsel have great hope of gaining a favorable verdict on the strength of some technicalities, if not on the merits of the case.

It is now ascertained that six of the insurrectionists who attacked the house of Rev. Mr. Hill were shot by the gallant little band who defended it; they have since died.

It is stated on good authority that the whole stock of money found on the persons of the leaders at Ballingarry amounted to £20 only!

France.

In France, much excitement and alarm continue to prevail. The Assembly have decided, by a considerable majority, after a very able discussion in which Lamartine took a prominent part, on having but one Legislative Chamber. The Committee of the Constitution have also decided by a vote of 10 to 4 that the President of the Republic shall be elected by universal suffrage, and not by the Assembly itself.

On Saturday a scene of confusion occurred in the Chambers, almost unparalleled in the history of that Assembly. One of the members having commented in severe terms upon some late Republican banquets, and condemned the apathy of the Government in relation thereto, the members of the Republican party were thrown into such a rage that they almost simultaneously rushed to the tribune, which they attempted to scale on all sides, but were prevented by the officers of the House. At length the President was obliged to put on his hat and suspend the sitting.

There has been something of a riot at Lyons, in which the Garde Mobile took an active part against the authorities.

M. Gent, who was lately elected Representative of the people at Avignon, has been shot in a duel by the Legitimist candidate.

It is said that there are 270,000 persons in Paris at the present moment receiving relief.

Another body, consisting of 677 insurgents, was sent off on the 24th to Havre.

Germany.

Germany is still in an unsettled state. The standard of revolt has been again raised in the Southern provinces, and again the rebels have been signally discomfited. The Regent of Germany has issued to the Governments of all the German States a circular manifesto, officially recounting the facts of the rising in Frankfort on the 18th ult., and its prompt suppression by the Government.

The attempt of Struve to proclaim a Republic at Baden has utterly failed. Gen. Hoffman came up with the insurgents near Staufen, completely routed them, and then passing by Crotzingen, advanced, through the Hexenthel, or Valley of the Witches, in two divisions, on Staufen, which he completely surrounded. After a somewhat obstinate resistance, the town was taken by storm; some houses were burned down, a great number of the defenders slain, and some hundreds of prisoners taken. Among the latter was Struve himself. He and 80 of his immediate followers were instantly tried by Court-Martial, condemned, and shot. [This report of Struve's execution is denied by some of the papers.]

Hungary.

The Pesther Zeitung of the 20th ult. contains a detailed account of a battle between the Hungarian and Croatian forces, which was fought on the 18th ult., in the vicinity of Szala Egerszegh. The Hungarians, under Count Terek, mustered 18,000 men; the division of the Ban's army, which attacked them, amounted to 20,000. The Croatians were completely routed, and lost 3,200 men, 17 pieces of artillery, and 13 standards. The loss of the Hungarians is quoted at 123 killed, 192 wounded.

Count Lamberg, who had been appointed by the Emperor of Austria Commander-in-Chief of his troops in Hungary and Croatia, was assassinated on the 29th ult. on the bridge of Pesth, by a student.

The Captives of the Pearl.—The three brave seamen, who acted the part of the good Samaritan to the poor slaves who had fallen into the hands of the thieves and robbers of Washington, have had their trial, as our readers are apprised, and their fate is decreed. English, after a long confinement, was set at liberty, the prosecuting attorney refusing to carry his case on, there not being a shadow of testimony against him. Drayton, the commander of the Pearl, was convicted by aid of perjured testimony, on several indictments, of the charge of stealing slaves. He now lies in jail under the sentence of imprisonment for twenty years. The remaining three hundred indictments are hanging over him, and the prosecuting attorney will neither order a discontinuance or go on with the trials. Sayres was convicted on his own confession, of aiding slaves to escape—the perjured witness against Drayton refusing to testify against him—and he was acquitted of the charge of larceny. On conviction of aiding slaves to escape, he has been sentenced to pay fines of $14,000, and to lie in jail until the fines are paid. [Emancipator.

Nearly the entire village of Waterloo, N. Y., was destroyed by fire on Sunday evening.

Fruits of Slavery.—A public meeting was held at the Tabernacle in this city, on Monday evening last, for the purpose of presenting the case of two Christian girls, held in slavery in Alexandria, Va., and about to be sent to the Southern market. We learn from one of the morning papers, that the father of these two girls, whose name is Paul Edmondson, is an old man, having a family of fourteen children. Five of the daughters have purchased their freedom, and the two in question, with four brothers, were on board the schooner Pearl, when she was retaken. One of these brothers has since become free, three are taken ken South, and the young girls, by the open confession of those who hold them, are destined for a fate even worse than slavery itself. The price demanded for them by these dealers in human flesh, is $2,250, and negotiations have been going on for some time with a view to prevent their being taken away before the sum could be raised. On the 12th inst. it was finally arranged, that they should remain, on condition that their friends would deposit $500, and agree to forfeit it, if the sum is not made up. This was done, and thus the matter rested. The $500 was guaranteed by the brothers-in-law of the girls, a large proportion of which will be absolutely forfeited, and these objects of Christian sympathy be taken away into hopeless bondage, unless the price of their redemption can be immediately made up and and remitted to Washington.

Curious Occurrence.—On Thursday, a short time previous to the hour appointed for the sailing of the steamship Columbus from Charleston, a box, marked "E. Mirshaw, Philadelphia," was brought down to the wharf and shipped, the freight being paid by the young man that accompanied it. The box was placed near the hatchway, on the top of the freight previously stowed away. In consequence of the storm that prevailed, the Columbus did not leave till Saturday morning. She arrived in the river on Tuesday, and when near New Castle the hatch was opened for the purpose of making preparations for discharging as soon as the wharf was reached. To the astonishment of the crew, they discovered in the hold a colored man, almost entirely exhausted from hunger and the want of water. On a farther search, they ascertained that he had been packed up in the box above alluded to, with a loaf of bread and a jug of water, which, but for the delay in the departure of the steamer, would have sufficed for the voyage. After his bread and water were exhausted, he burst off the lid of the box, and was enabled to crawl about among the freight, having first cut away the side of a bale of cotton to make a passage from the spot where the box had been stowed. He found a box containing a pound cake, sent by a newly-married couple to some friends in Philadelphia, and ate part of it, but his mouth became so parched from want of water, that he could not devour much. He gave his name as Moses, and stated that he belonged to Miss Mary Brown, a wealthy lady of Charleston. He has been placed in the jail at New Castle to await orders from his owner.

Havoc of Intemperance.—At a great temperance meeting held recently in Montreal, the Rev. Mr. Chiniquy is reported to have said that he had a list of fifteen Canadian families, formerly of the first standing, influence and opulence in Montreal, whose aggregate fortune a few years ago, was £200,000, and now they have vanished and disappeared—strong drink has destroyed them all: another list of 104 families, of various callings, whose aggregate fortune was £300,000, who have also disappeared from the same cause; and another list of 217 families, in the fourteen surrounding parishes, all were comparatively wealthy, and all now destroyed by whiskey, except remnants scattered about the State and elsewhere.

SUMMARY.

A Parliamentary report of exports from the United States to Great Britain for five years, from 1843 to 1847, shows an aggregate increase since 1843 of more than one hundred and fifty per cent. Among the articles enumerated are oil, staves, naval srores, beef, tallow, hides, pork, bacon, lard, cheese, wheat, corn, meal, rice, wool and hops. The increase of bacon, lard and cheese, is equal to one thousand per cent., of corn, more than fifteen million per cent., there having been none exported in 1843, and 15,526,525 bushels in 1847.

A five dollar bill, of the Fulton Bank, passed through the hands of the Journal of Commerce, on the back of which was written as follows:—"This is the last of three thousand dollars left me by my mother at her death, on the 27th day of August, 1840. Would to God she had never left it to me, and that I had been learned to work, to have earned my living, I would not now be what I am."

The Montreal papers chronicle the death of Susannah Laurent, at the advanced age of 105 years and five days. She was unmarried, and retained her faculties to the last. She died of no particular disease—nature seemed gradually to give way. She is represented to have been extremely fond of children, and was emphatically an "old maid."

Arrangements have been made by the various Railroad Companies between Albany and Buffalo, so that passengers will hereafter be taken from tide-water to the lakes in 17 1-2 to 18 hours, and after the first of November the fare through (from Albany to Buffalo) will be reduced to $9,75. Passengers may now leave New York in the evening, sleep on board one of the North River steamers the first night, and in a hotel at Buffalo the second.

At a trotting-match on Long Island last week, the celebrated horse Trustee, trotted twenty miles, in harness, in fifty-nine minutes and thirty-five seconds and a half—which is the greatest number of miles that has ever been trotted within one hour.

The residence of Mr. A. C. Van Epps, in the upper part of the city, was set on fire a few evenings since, and came near being destroyed. The fire commenced in a book-case, where the only possible origin must have been by a mouse nibbling some wax tapers deposited there.

The unfortunate steamer Goliath, it is now fully ascertained, caught fire and was blown up, and her remains have been driven ashore on the Canada side of Lake Huron, where they were discovered on the 20th ult. Eighteen lives are known to have been lost with her, as all on board perished. Capt. Cottrel had been married but three days when he left Detroit on the fatal voyage.

The steamship California, the first of the U. S. Pacific Mail Line, sailed from New York on Friday of week before last, to take her station in the Pacific Ocean, running from Panama to the Columbia river, and touching at all the ports on the coast of California and Oregon. Her first port will be Rio Janeiro, then around Cape Horn to Valparaiso, and the intermediate ports on the coast of Panama.

The Boston Journal of the 18th says: "Our mackerel fishermen had a grand haul last week in Massachusetts Bay. On Friday and Saturday, off Chatham, about 250 vessels were engaged in the business, and their labors were crowned with unprecedented success. About 25,000 barrels were taken on those days. One vessel caught 130 barrels for her share. This is a good winding up of the season.

The Springfield Republican states that three gentlemen of that town, Willis Phelps, James Barnes, (late Superintendent of the Western Railroad,) and William Mattoon, have taken the contract for constructing a Railroad in New York from Rome to Watertown. The amount of the contract is from half a million to eight hundred thousand dollars, and the work is to be immediately entered upon.

A mammoth tooth, weighing seven pounds and a quarter, has been found in a hill at Mt. Holly, Vt. It was dug up in making excavations for the Rutland and Burlington Railroad, It was found imbedded in coarse gravel, ten or fourteen feet below the surface. The gravel bed lay between two steep parallel ridges of the rock, forming what appears to have been, anciently, the bed of a river.

The total vote of Iowa at the recent State Election was 24,355. The Iowa Capital Reporter infers from this vote that the population of the State is about 230,000. The population of Wisconsin, in December last, was 213,575, and is now but little, if any, short of 225,000.

The Victoria, Texas, Advocate, of July 27th. apologises for a lack of matter in its columns, by saying that the senior editor was shot and badly wounded; the junior editor had the chills and fever; and there had been no mails there for two weeks.

In Albany, about one hundred buildings of a neat and substantial character are going up in the burnt district. The Journal says that the buildings fronting Broadway are of a neat appearance, and when the street is built up, being now several feet wider than before the fire, will command a good share of the business of the city.

The Grand Jury of New York have found a bill of indictment against Capt. Bertrand of the ship Alhambra, for murder, by causing one of his crew, Alfred Burgess, to be flogged in such a manner as to cause his death. The Grand Jury have also indicted Watson, the second mate, who flogged the deceased by the Captain's orders, for manslaughter.

HONOR TO ALL HANDICRAFTS.

BY C. SOUTHERNER.

Honor to him whose sinew'd arm
  Swings the ponderous sledge;
Honor to him whose sturdy hand
  Delves at the fruitless hedge:—
To ev'ry toiler who striveth
  To beautify the earth,
Be honor and fame far greater
  Than to men of kingly birth.

To toil—it is to fill complete
  The Lord of Life's command—
To crown with golden fruit and grain,
  The wilds of ev'ry land;
To rear the mansion and the cot,
  In city or in glen,
That joy in sweet content may meet
  Around the homes of men.

Who makes a blade of grass to grow
  Where there grew none before;
Is greater far than the demi-god
  Whose mantle drips with gore;
Then plant the spade in desert ground,
  And make its treasure spring,
To bless the hand and home of him
  Who's greater than a king!

WILLIAM TELL.

More than four hundred years ago, the country which goes by the name of Switzerland was under the Austrian Government, and the people were little better than slaves. They were made to pay heavy taxes, and to perform the most menial offices, while the Austrians lived upon the fruits of their labor, and governed them as with a rod of iron.

One of the Austrian Governors, by the name of Gesler, was a very great tyrant, and did all he could to break the spirit of the Swiss people, but it was of little use.

Gesler went so far in his tyranny as to command his hat or cap to be placed on a pole in the market place, and ordered every Swiss who passed it to bow to it. The poor Swiss people did not like it at all; but they were afraid to disobey the order, as imprisonment or death would be the consequence of their disobedience.

There was, however, one noble-minded man, who was afraid neither of imprisonment or death, who refused to bow to Gesler's cap. His name was William Tell. He not only refused to bow to the cap, but excited his countrymen to throw off the Austrian yoke.

He was soon seized and brought into the presence of the tyrant. William Tell was a famous bowman, and had his bows and arrows about his person when he was seized. Gesler, telling him he had forfeited his life, proposed that he should exhibit a specimen of his skill as an archer, promising him that if he could hit an apple at a certain distance he should go free.

Tell was glad to hear this, and began to have a better opinion of the governor than he deserved; but the cruel man called Tell's only son, a boy seven years old, forward, and placed the apple on his head, bidding his father fire at it.

When Tell saw this, he nearly fainted, and his hand trembled so much that he could hardly place the arrow in the string. There was, however, no alternative; he must attempt the feat or die; but that which unnerved his arm was the fear that his skill might fail him, and he might kill his son.

The child, seeing his father's distress, endeavored to console him.

'I am sure you will not hit ME, father,' said he. 'I have seen you strike a bird on the wing at a great distance, and I will stand quite still.'

The ground was now measured, and the boy was placed against the tree. It is impossible for you to understand what the unfortunate Tell felt as he prepared to shoot. Twice he leveled his arrow, but dropped it again. His eyes were so blinded by his emotion, that he could not see the apple.

The assembled spectators, of whom there were numbers, seemed to hold their breath. At length Tell summoned up all his courage. He dashed the tears from his eyes, and bent the bow. Away went the arrow, and piercing the apple, cut it in two, and imbedded itself in the tree.

The spectators shouted and applauded. Tell was taken to Gesler, who was about to set him free, when he observed another arrow sticking under his girdle.

'Ha!' said he, 'an arrow! Why that concealed weapon?'

'It was destined for YOU!' replied Tell, 'if I had killed my child!'

Upon this daring threat Tell was again seized by the tyrant's soldiers, and was hurried away to be put to death. But being a strong and resolute man, he made his escape, and fleeing away into the mountains, incited the people to throw off the tyrant's yoke. They accordingly took up arms, and made Tell their leader.

But he was again taken prisoner, and being put into a boat with Gesler and his men, for the purpose of rowing over one of the lakes, a storm arose, and the boat was driven ashore. Tell leaped out before any one else could land, and snatching a concealed arrow from his person, took aim at the tyrant, and shot him dead as he sat in the boat.

After this, Tell so roused the people, that they soon gained their freedom, and Switzerland is a free country to this day. Tell has never been forgotten, but the people always think of him with gratitude, and consider him as the deliverer of his country. [Merry's Museum.

THE RICH AND THE POOR.—Dr. Channing has very truly remarked, in one of his essays, that the difference between the rich and the poor, so far as real comfort and happiness are concerned, is by no means so great as people imagine. The former, with everything to enjoy, have too rarely the ability to enjoy anything; while the latter, by means of the very care and labor required to get the common necessaries of life, are kept in a state of mind that is really happiness, compared with the listlessness and ennui suffered by those who are cursed with nothing to do. It is a great mistake to suppose, that labor is a disgrace and evil. It is, on the contrary, a blessing, for only they whose minds or bodies are engaged in regular and useful employments, are happy. As for luxurious living, it does not bring health; nor do rich, fashionable garments, ensure peace of mind. It is the life well spent—the doing by each one, faithfully, the work which is set before him, that brings the happiness that all desire; and the poor may have it in as large measure as the rich.

A HEART-RENDING PICTURE.

We see by the New York papers, that a Dr. Ingraham, with his wife and children, the youngest only 15 months old, left Liverpool for this city, recently, in the packet-ship New York.

During the passage, Mrs. Ingraham had been taken with premature confinement, lost her babe, it having lived but two days, but she was recovering and doing well. One night a lady passenger screamed, with a fearful cry, "Oh! we are going to the bottom," at the same moment the spray was heard dashing over the deck. The passengers sprung in consternation from their berths. Mrs. Ingraham, sick as she was, rose in her bed, alarmed with the rest, but her husband came to her, told her not to be alarmed, that although there was a heavy blow, it was not a storm, and there was no danger. Mrs. Ingraham was on her way to New York, with her children, to visit a favorite sister, whom she had not seen for twenty years, and who was not aware of her coming. After the alarm, Mrs. I. lay down again in her berth, but soon rose up a maniac—reason had fled its throne. "Get me my gaiters," said she to those around her, "I am going to see my sister. I will soon see my dear sister now." The acknowledged medical skill of her husband, and the kindness of friends, could not avert the blow. In two or three days she died, her form was enshrouded and enclosed in the manner usual at sea, and amid the imposing solemnities of the burial service of the Church of England, committed to the deep. Up to this moment Dr. Ingraham had done all that man could do, but he now drooped. He was first observed by the Captain playing in the manner of a maniac, with a string—the Captain told him he had better go down in the cabin, and he would probably feel better. He did so, but soon returned to the quarter deck, without speaking to any one; the Captain told his children to go and speak to him, as it might arouse his attention. One of the little ones said to him, "Father, where is Ma?" "Where is your Ma?" replied he, "she is putting on her gaiters, and getting ready to see her sister; we will soon see her now." The truth flashed with a fearful force upon the Captain and all others around him—reason with him, too, had fallen. He took to his bed, was removed to the Hospital at Staten Island on the arrival of the vessel, and every attention paid to him, but without success. He breathed his last soon after. His three little girls were left at the Hospital, no one there knowing they had any relatives, and were about being sent to Ward's Island. A vessel arrived at Quarantine in which was a gentleman who had been desirous of taking passage in the New York, but had to wait for the next packet. On learning the melancholy fate of his friends he communicated the intelligence to the sister of Mrs. Ingraham, (a highly respectable lady, named Edwards,) to whom the news was sad indeed. Mr. Edwards, her husband, applied for the children, and found them well taken care of, but in the Hospital garb. They have again a home. This is one of similar scenes attending passenger life.

MISERIES OF LONDON.

The following is a description of a single lane called Church Lane, in the city of London, within the limits of St. Giles, as described by a member of a Committee appointed to examine its condition:

"The lane is three hundred feet long, and contains 32 houses. It is lighted by three gas-lights, and water is supplied three times a week, but no tanks or tubes were to be found. I will simply describe two or three houses that we visited, as a fair average of the whole. Many things are too disgusting to enter the columns of a newspaper, and therefore I shall only give some leading facts. The first house that the Committee visited contained 45 persons, only 6 rooms, and 12 beds!—windows broken—filth abundant. In the second there were 56 persons, and only 3 beds. In the third there were 61 persons, and 9 beds, averaging nearly seven to a bed. And those of all ages, sexes and conditions!"

This is as horrible a state of things as ever one could imagine to exist, and as it is a stern fact, there is no virtue in shutting one's eyes to it. A majority of the windows were broken, and the cold night wind could not fail to sweep in, and inflict colds and consumption upon its inmates. The occupations of this miserable class are of great variety—some are fruit dealers, some sweeps, some knife-grinders, some mendicants, some crossing-sweepers, some street-singers, and many thieves and prostitutes.

The Committee say in their report:—"In these wretched dwellings, all ages and both sexes, fathers and daughters, mothers and sons, grown up brothers and sisters, stranger adult males and females, and swarms of children—the sick, the dying, and the dead, are huddled together with a proximity and mutual pressure which brutes would resist; where it is physically impossible to observe the ordinary decencies of life, where all sense of propriety and self-respect must be lost." Such is the state of Church Lane! Would that it were alone in its notoriety! Alas! there are many others quite as bad. But how much these poverty-stricken beings are to blame for their state, is a solemn question to answer.

INDIAN OBSERVATION.

A little, shrewd, crooked, crabbed Indian, met one day a pioneer white man in his travel, and hastily asked him, "if he had seen a little, old, short man, carrying a short rifle, followed by a little dog with a short tail—who had stolen his venison."

The pioneer answered that he had seen no such thief; and in return asked the Indian if he had seen the man who stole the meat?

The Indian replied, "Me no see 'em or me shoot 'em."

Then the pioneer inquired "how he should know so well about the man, the gun, and dog?"

To which the Indian said, "Me know 'em white man by the tracks—turn toes out ver much—a short man, 'cause he pile up stones to stand on to reach the meat—old man, he takes ver short steps—know his gun was short by the mark on the bark where he stand him against the tree—know dog was little by small tracks—and know he got his tail cut off, by the print in the sand where he set down while the old man stole Indian's meat."

So much for close observation of the particulars.

DISADVANTAGES OF NEW JERSEY.

The following paragraph upon this subject is from a letter written by the editor of the National Era, while rusticating somewhere in the lower part of New Jersey:—

New Jersey labors under the disadvantage of having its two principal markets outside of its own borders. New York on the north, and Philadelphia on the west of the State, while furnishing ready markets for its products, prevent the growth of any metropolis within its limits, and consequently that development of State character, which depends so much upon metropolitan influences. New Jersey has earned little distinction among the States, in science, the arts, or politics—not from lack of native talent or energy, but in consequence of the absorption of her principal talent and enterprise by the adjoining cities of New York and Pennsylvania. Her mercantile enterprise, her political ambition, seek their rewards among the exciting competitions of these cities—her young men of character migrate so soon as they can choose their own path in life. All through the States you find emigrant Jerseymen, and everywhere they are marked by energy, steadiness, perseverance, and thrift. A majority of the pioneers of Cincinnati, emigrated from New Jersey. Nicholas Longworth, who has made Cincinnati the vineyard of the West, and is, we believe, the richest man in that city, is a native of this State, and was a poor mechanic when he left it. Judge Burnet, one of the pioneers, now among the wealthiest men of that city, formerly United States Senator from Ohio, is a Jerseyman. So is Dr. Daniel Drake, of the same city, who stands at the head of the Medical Profession in the West. I could name many others, but have no room. Every State ought to have a metropolis of sufficient consideration and dignity, to furnish a field, and secure rewards, for the highest talent and ambition of its children.

THE MEN OF THE OLDEN TIME.

They (Egyptian antiquities) rebuke us sufficiently in showing us that at that time men were living very much as we do now; without some knowledge that we have gained, but in possession of some arts that we have not. They confound us by their mute exhibitions of their iron tools and steel armor; their great range of manufactures, and their feasts and sports, so like our own. In their kitchens, they decant wine by a syphon, and strew their sweet cake with seeds, and pound their spices in a mortar. In the drawing-rooms, they lounge on chaises longues; and the ladies knit and net as we do, and darn better than we can. I saw at Dr. Abbott's a piece of mending left unfinished several thousand years ago, which any English woman might be satisfied with or proud of. In the nursery, the little girls had dolls—jointed dolls, with bunchy hair and large eyes, as our dolls have blue eyes and fair tresses. And the babes had, not the woolly bow-wow dogs which yelp in our nurseries, but little wooden crocodiles with snapping jaws. In the country we see the agriculturist taking stock; and in the towns, the population divided into castes, subject to laws, and living under a theocracy, long before the supposed time of the deluge. There is enough here to teach us some humility and patience about the true history of the world. [Miss Martineau's Eastern Life.

JEFFERSON'S TOMB.

The following is a copy of the inscription on the tomb of Thomas Jefferson, the third President of the United States:—

HERE LIES BURIED
THOMAS JEFFERSON,
Author of the Declaration of Independence, of the Statutes of Virginia for Religious Freedom,
and Father of the University of Virginia.

His ten good rules to be observed in practical life, are—

I. Never put off till to-morrow what you can do to-day.

II. Never trouble others for what you can do yourself.

III. Never spend your money before you have it.

IV. Never buy what you do not want, because it is cheap.

V. Pride costs us more than hunger, thirst, or cold.

VI. We never repent of having eaten too little.

VII. Nothing is troublesome that we do willingly.

VIII. When angry, count ten before you speak;—if very angry, one hundred.

IX. Take things always by the smoothest handle.

X. In all cases when you cannot do as well as you would, do the best you can.

NAMING OF CHILDREN IN PERSIA.—At the naming of children in Persia, the following ceremony is observed:—The third or fourth day after the child is born, the friends and relations of the mother assemble at her house, attended by music, and dancing girls hired for the occasion; after playing and dancing some time, a mullah or priest is introduced, who, taking the child in his arms, demands of the mother what name she chooses the infant should be called by; being told, he begins praying, and after a short time, applies his mouth close to the child's ear, and tells him distinctly three times, (calling him by name,) to remember and be obedient to his father or mother, to venerate his Koran and his prophet, to abstain from those things which are unlawful, and to practice those things which are good and virtuous. Having repeated the Mahomedan profession of faith, he then re-delivers the child to its mother; after which the company are entertained with sweetmeats and other refreshments, a part of which the females present always take care to carry away in their pockets, believing it to be the infallible means of their having offspring themselves.

EXPIRING IN SONG.—A singular incident, showing the effect of music upon a canary bird, occurred at Roxbury within the last few days. A lady of rare musical attainments was playing on the piano, when all at once her bird, who seemed to have been listening intently, burst forth into a strain of song, so loud, shrill, and powerful, as at once to arrest her attention. Nothing like it had been heard before. The little creature's breast seemed actually swelling and heaving with its efforts to give vent to the conceptions with which its tiny heart was beating. All at once, at the very full tide of its melody, he was silent. His mistress took him from the cage, and he turned over in her hand and died! On dissection, it was found that he had completely split his wind-pipe from top to bottom. [Boston Trans.

SINGULAR DISCOVERIES.—The workmen in some of the copper mines of Lake Superior, have recently ascertained that many of the veins of ore have been previously worked by some people centuries ago. Stone and metal wedges have been found in great abundance, with charred beams and sticks. In some excavations now filled up with rubbish, where the rocks have evidently been cut with chisels, large trees have grown, some of which are still standing, while others have perished with age, leaving huge stumps. In one instance a mass of half-melted copper was found, with the brands and ashes around it, as the last miner had left them. It is conjectured that these unknown workmen must have belonged to the race of the mound-builders, whose traces are scattered all over the western country.

ADVENTURES OF A LETTER.—The Stamford (Eng.) Mercury says—"Some time since, a letter containing bills of exchange amounting to £5000, was posted in London, addressed to a banking firm in Boston. The word "Lincolnshire," being omitted from the address, the letter was put into an American bag, and crossed the Atlantic to Boston in Massachusetts. No owner being found, brother Jonathan honestly returned the letter, and on Tuesday morning it reached its proper destination, Messrs. Gee & Co.'s, Boston, Lincolnshire, after twice traversing the Atlantic, and having caused a journey to London, and a long and anxious correspondence."

ANECDOTE OF O'CONNELL.—Walking through College Green, a countryman took off his hat and cheered him—such incidents, I need not say, were of constant occurrence. O'Connell said: "One day I was walking through London with Tom Campbell, the poet, and a negro took off his hat and begged to thank me for my efforts against negro slavery. Campbell's poetical fancy was smitten, and he exclaimed, with great fervor:—"I would rather receive such a tribute as that, than have all the crowned heads in Europe make bows to me."

VARIETY.

If you wish to enjoy life, avoid unpunctual people. They impede business and poison pleasure. Make it your own rule not only to be punctual, but a little beforehand. Such a habit secures a composure which is essential to happiness. For want of it, many people live in a constant fever, and put all about them in a fever too. To prevent the tediousness of waiting for others, carry with you some means of occupation; for example, books which can be read at snatches, and which afford ample materials for thinking.

Leigh Hunt once remarked that a Geranium at the window, sweetens the air, rejoices the eye, links you with nature and innocence, and is something to love. In our intercourse with mankind, we have ever found, too, that those who surround their dwellings with these beautiful creations, are invariably more amiable and gentle in their disposition and manners, and that a certain degree of refinement is always associated with a love of trees and flowers.

The Town Council of Plymouth, in England, have resolved on laying down glass-pipes for the supply of water to the town. The average duration of pipes made of cast iron is about ten years, it is said; while glass is not liable to corrosion or abrasion at all, and will thus, it is calculated, more than pay its original cost.

Four slavers have recently been captured on the African coast, all Brazilians, which were condemned and burned at Sierra Leone. One of the vessels, a brig, prize to H. M. brig Alert, had on board when captured 500 slaves. The schooner Water Witch had 472. The brig Sea Lark 561. A Spanish schooner, among the number, had not yet received her cargo.

'Does your arm pain you much, sir?' asked a young lady of a gentleman who had seated himself near her in a mixed assembly, and thrown his arm across the back of her chair and slightly touched her cheek. 'No, Miss, it does not; but why do you ask?' 'I noticed it was considerably out of place, sir,' replied she, 'that's all.' The arm was removed.

We saw a lad bearing a bright new hoe, on the handle of which was suspended a slate. "Noble representative of a Northern laborer!" we exclaimed. "March on, brave boy! keep thy grasp on both the hoe and the slate, and thy country will be grateful for the day that gave thee birth."

Lamartine, when accused of conspiring with the insurgents of May 15, replied from the tribune of the National Assembly, "Yes, I have conspired with those men—I have conspired with them as the lightning conductor conspires with the thunder-cloud!"

Nothing is insignificant which gives pleasure to our friends, because from this arises that bright summer-mild atmosphere in the house, which is called comfort. And without this, how cold, how miserable, is home anywhere.

In legislation, and indeed in our private conduct, there should be constant reference to great principles, if only from the exceeding difficulty of foreseeing the results in detail of any measure.

Perform a good deed—speak a kind word—bestow a pleasant smile—and you will receive the same in return. The happiness you bestow upon others is reflected back to your own bosom.

Hay, on the 31st ult., was bringing $22 a $25 per ton, at New Orleans. There had been no Northern arrivals for several weeks.

If you are about to leave a neighbor's house, don't stand stammering, and fumbling, saying, "Well, I guess it's time I should be going." When you are ready, go at once.

A silly fop, being in company, and wanting his servant, cried out, 'Where is my blockhead?' 'Upon your shoulders,' replied a lady.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

W. C. KENYON, A. M.,
IRA SAYLES, A. M., } Principals.

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULATIONS.

1. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.
2. Punctuality in attending all regular Academic exercises will be required.
3. The use of Tobacco, for chewing or smoking, will not be allowed either in or about the Academic buildings.
4. Playing at games of chance cannot be allowed.
5. Using profane language cannot be allowed.
6. The use of any kind of intoxicating drinks cannot be allowed, unless prescribed in case of sickness, by a regular physician.
7. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, cannot be permitted.
8. Gentlemen and ladies of the Institution will not be permitted to visit the rooms of the opposite sex, except in cases of imperious necessity, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.
9. Good order must be maintained at all times, and in all the rooms and halls of the Institution, and in all the intercourse of students with each other.
10. All students are required to retire regularly at the ringing of the bell designated for that purpose, as occasion may require; and to rise at the ringing of the morning bell, also designated.
11. Any room, occupied by students, will, at all times, be subject to the visitation of the Teachers of the Institution, who are required to see that the regulations are complied with.
12. Students will be required to keep their own rooms in good order, and to pay all unnecessary damages, either of rooms or of furniture furnished with the rooms.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

GOVERNMENT.

The Government of the students will be in the hands of the Principals, and will be strictly and steadily exercised, and at the same time, strictly parental. The object of our academic government being to secure the greatest possible amount of physical, intellectual, and moral good to the students themselves, regularity and order of exercises, and good and wholesome citizens to society. No unwarrantable means will be made use of to enforce the observance of the above regulations; yet our constant endeavor will be, to make the means resorted to as effective as human means may be.

Parents who place their children in this Institution, and all students who are sufficiently old to understand the necessity of order, cannot be too well assured that the foregoing regulations form the most essential part of the contract between them and us; and that whatever student wantonly violates them, and shows himself incorrigibly determined on pursuing his waywardness, will be expelled from the privileges of the Institution, and will not be permitted to re-enter it again, without special proof of reformation. Nor will an expelled student have any deduction made from full term charges.

Farther, parents are requested not to place money for expenses, in the hands of students who are not old enough to use money with discretion and economy. Either of the Principals, or the Book-keeper of the Institution, will act as fiscal guardian of such students without charge.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

EXPENSES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Board, per term, | from $14 50 to | $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | | 1 50 |
| Washing, | | 2 50 |
| Fuel, | spring and fall, 75 cents, winter, | 1 50 |
| Tuition, | from $3 50 to | 5 00 |
| Lights, | | 1 50 |
| Incidental Expenses, | | 25 |
| EXTRAS—Music on the Piano Forte, | | 10 00 |
| Oil Painting, | | 7 00 |
| Drawing, | | 2 00 |

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition (except the extras above mentioned) need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall, should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchanges and losses.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE SABBATH ENFORCED BY CHRIST.

From Begg's Treatise on the Sabbath.

SECTION IX.—The observance of the Sabbath enforced by the example and precepts of Christ.

Having considered the original institution of the Sabbath, and referred to its subsequent promulgation from Sinai, and its observance in after ages by Israel and Judah, we now come to the era of our Lord's incarnation. And, proceeding in the same order which we have hitherto observed, we shall endeavor to trace the inspired account of its sanctification by Him "who has set us an example that we should walk in his steps," and to ascertain whether He made any alteration or intimated any change as thereafter to take place in this blessed institution; "for God, who at sundry times and in diverse manners spake in times past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by His Son." (Heb. 1: 2.) In this part of our inquiry, we shall find that although there is in the New Testament no new injunction concerning the duty embodied in the fourth commandment, not only is the Sabbath left as it was, but our Saviour, by word and by deed, confirms and commends to us, His disciples, all that had been previously made known on the subject.

Now it is to be observed, that although we cannot suppose a change designed by God without His having given distinct intimation of His will in so important a matter, that yet, if no such change was designed, it is obvious there was no necessity for any new commandment concerning it. The divine sanction and authority and blessing had already been impressed upon the day of rest, as was fully acknowledged at the time of Christ's appearing; and therefore, if it still had the same sanction, all that we can expect of the Saviour in regard to it is, that in His practice its sanctity be observed, and that in His precepts this should not be impugned. And this, by a consideration of texts, we shall find abundantly to have been the case, and that the Son now, as the Father formerly, speaks of the seventh day only as "the Sabbath," and speaks of it as in its sanctity and blessing still unimpaired.

In the very commencement of His ministry, we are not only informed of Christ engaging in the ordinary Sabbath exercises of the synagogue, but we are farther told, that in this He was doing that to which he had previously been accustomed. Immediately after His temptation by the Devil, "Jesus returned in the power of the Spirit into Galilee; and there went out a fame of Him through all the region round about. And He taught in their synagogues, being glorified of all. And He came to Nazareth, where He had been brought up; and, as His custom was, He went into the synagogue on the Sabbath day, and stood up for to read." Luke 4: 14—16. Now although this is the first mention by any of the Evangelists of our Lord's observance of the Sabbath, it is important to remark, that while it occurs at the very outset of His ministry, it is not a new exercise in which He is thus found engaged, but that it is "as His custom was" previous to that time. He who, sanctified from the womb, ever truly loved and perfectly obeyed His Father's law, had never omitted to "remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy." Even previous to the commencement of His public ministry, it thus appears, "His custom was" to read in the synagogue.*

It is also to be observed, that as this is the first time Luke has been directed to refer to the seventh day, that if, at the time He wrote His gospel, many years afterwards, another day had been appointed instead of that which had hitherto without question been the Sabbath of the Lord, we cannot believe that He would not, on the earliest occasion of referring to it, have said something as to the fact of such a change. This record of our Lord's doings was written long after His resurrection, and if on account of that event the Sabbath had been transferred to the first day of the week, we might surely have expected that Luke, the writer of it, a disciple and Evangelist of Christ, and imbued with the Holy Spirit, would have embraced the very first opportunity of declaring so interesting and important a fact—an opportunity abundantly afforded by the mention of our Lord's own "custom" of observing what in that case would have been a different day. But nothing is here said of any such change having taken place between the time when our Lord did so go into the synagogue of Nazareth, reading and expounding the Scriptures on the Sabbath, and that later period at which Luke recorded the fact. The Evangelist indeed does what fully disproves the idea of such a change having at all taken place—for he still continues to call the seventh day "the Sabbath day," which it certainly would not have been, and, therefore, could not with truth have been so called, if the first day had been now substituted for it.

In like manner, we find, in another Evangelist, that immediately after Jesus had called Simon and Andrew and James and John to follow Him, "they went into Capernaum, and straightway on the Sabbath day He entered into the synagogue, and taught." Mark 1: 21. Observe the precision with which it is stated, "straightway on the Sabbath day." Nor was this only on a single occasion, but on more Sabbaths than one; and in the parallel text of Luke (4: 31,) it is correctly given in the plural, "and taught them on the Sabbath days"—as still "His custom," and as if His teaching, though not confined to the day of rest, was more especially upon it.

The next instance in our Lord's history, in which we have a reference to the Sabbath, is one in which He was blamed for permitting His disciples to do what the Pharisees considered a profanation of the holy day. "At that time, Jesus went on the Sabbath day through the corn, and His disciples were an hungered, and began to pluck the ears of corn and to eat. But when the Pharisees saw it, they said unto Him, Behold thy disciples do that which is not lawful to do upon the Sabbath day. But He said unto them, Have ye not read what David did, when he was an hungred, and they that were with him; how he entered into the House of God, and did eat the shew bread, which was not lawful for him to eat, neither for them which were with him, but only for the priests? Or have ye not read in the Law, how that on the Sabbath days the priests in the temple profane the Sabbath and are blameless? But I say unto you, that in this place is one greater than the temple. But if ye had known what this meaneth, I will have mercy and not sacrifice, ye would not have condemned the guiltless, for the Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath day." Matt. 12: 1—8.

It is a common thing to hear an objection urged from these concluding words against the continuing obligation of the Sabbath; it being taken for granted that, because Christ is Lord of the Sabbath, He was now using His authority wholly to abolish it—or that He has either given authority to His apostles to change it, or left men at liberty at a later period to do so. Now it is obvious, that we have nothing like this in the text itself. Our Saviour, who is Lord of the Sabbath day, in repelling the charge of profaning it, gives no countenance to this. He affirms himself to have been "guiltless" of profaning the Sabbath, and charges upon these Pharisees ignorance of the relation which mercy has always had to sacrifice. He does not urge any argument which is now applicable for the first time—or which is applicable because of any change which He has introduced—as would have been the case if the original appointment had been lapsing into a day to be observed in commemoration of His work of redemption.

Accompanied by His disciples, Jesus had been engaged in the work of the Lord, and the former had become hungry while they were so engaged. In these circumstances, the Saviour justifies the disciples in eating of the standing corn; which was permitted by the law (Deut. 23: 25;) but His defense is not that the Sabbath has ceased to hold its ground, or that a change of any kind has taken place. On the contrary, all His argument goes to prove that what His disciples at this time did, might have been done in any former age—that in similar circumstances they might have done so in the days of Moses or David or Solomon. The fact that the disciples "were an hungered," was a reason equally valid, He just asserts, for their plucking the ears of corn, as for David and those who were with him entering into the House of God, and eating of the shew bread, which, in ordinary circumstances, was lawful only for the priests to eat. The hallowed bread was given, by the priest, on the occasion alluded to, because "there was no bread there but the shew bread." 1 Sam. 21: 6. The divine destination of the shew bread for the priests remained thereafter the same as before; and so, in like manner, the sacred character of the Sabbath did not cease because the disciples, being an hungred, thus eat of the standing corn. So far then from His superseding the law of the Sabbath, our Lord fully acknowledges it—pleads no exemption from its obligation, which the law had not previously given to those in need, while engaged in the service of God.

But however ready men are vaguely to refer to this text as authorizing the change they have made, it will not in point of fact be pretended by any, that the authority of the Sabbath had THEN ceased, (for the cessation of its obligation is always placed at a later period,) while all will acknowledge that extremity made that lawful in the case of the disciples, which otherwise would have been sin to them.

The same remarks apply with equal force to the other illustration which our Lord uses on this occasion—namely, that work was done by the priests in the temple on the Sabbath, and yet they were blameless. There was much to do connected with the sacrifices and worship of God, which was of divine appointment, and which was fully sanctioned by these Pharisees, that on the principle urged by them in this instance they should have condemned. But if, on the contrary, they acknowledged that the laws of God relative to the temple worship were not inconsistent with the holy observance of the Sabbath, so, our Lord reasons, they were bound to extend the application of their principle to the case of His disciples, who when an hungered availed themselves of the liberty granted by their law to pluck the ears of their neighbors' standing corn, although it was the Sabbath day.

The principle most distinctly laid down by the Saviour is, that the sanctity of the Sabbath is not impaired by acts of necessity or mercy done upon it—but that the obligation of these duties is to be allowed to operate while contemplating the authority of a prohibition which would otherwise have force. And, just as no one did or could infer, because David in an emergency entered the holy place, and being an hungred ate of the shew bread, that therefore all regard to the sacredness of the place, or attention to the divine ordinance, from thence forth should cease; so neither should any presume that the sacredness of the Sabbath is destroyed by our Lord's vindication of the disciples' eating of the ears of corn on this occasion. Our Lord gives no countenance to any new idea on the subject—He offers no higher justification for His disciples, than what was universally and at all times extended to David and the priests—and, therefore, in the very nature of His defense, it is plainly implied, that all the obligations of the Sabbath still continued. He only intimates, that against the holy law of God, which makes extraordinary provision for the pressure of necessity, His disciples had in this act committed no breach—that God loveth mercy rather than sacrifice.*

In the parallel gospel it is added, "And He said unto them, The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath; therefore the Son of Man is Lord also of the Sabbath." Mark 2: 27, 28. And in this connection we are directed to the meaning of the latter clause, that He is Lord also of the Sabbath—it is not that He claimed and exercised a power to dispense with its obligations, as some have imagined; but that, having been made for man, where his real good requires, the ordinary sabbatic laws are not obligatory. Being the gift of God to man, it was never designed for his hurt, and He who knew the necessities and the motives of His disciples, could and did justify them in what they had done. We might also ask, whether the disciples, so often blamed for continuing unduly attached to all the requirements of their law, believed that their act was to overturn the fourth commandment? Did they pluck the ears of corn to prove that they knew the commandment to be no longer in force, or because they believed that it allowed what they did?

And here, again, we are called to notice that our Lord in this remark places the design of the Sabbath on broad and general ground, as designed not merely for the Jews—"the Sabbath was made for man"—it is the divine appointment for the good of the human race; for Gentiles, as well as for Jews. It still remained for all the sons of Adam as it had originally been given to him. It was "made for man," and therefore the Saviour refrained not from the exercise of mercy and benevolence upon it. As it is a day blessed of God, He would make it a day of blessing to a weary world, by giving food to the hungering soul, and health to the diseased bodies of the human race.†

* It remained for the writers of the Apocryphal Gospels of a later period to pretend that Jesus, in his younger years, profaned the Sabbath, amusing himself thereupon making fish pools and sparrows of clay from the bank of a stream, and even striking dead, according to one of these fabulous authors, (I. Infancy of JESUS) or according to another (II. Infancy) causing him to become withered all over, the Jewish boy who interrupted his sport, and reproved it as a sin.

* I find it quoted of Epiphanius (a writer AGAINST Heresies, and in Reply to a Heretic of the fourth century, who urged the continuance of the Sabbath) that he insisted "that the disciples' plucking the ears of corn upon the Sabbath day showed that the outward rest of the Sabbath was ended when Christ who is our great Sabbath was once come," Ironside on the Sabbath, p. 214. But by the same argument and on the same evidence he would convict "Christ who is our great Sabbath" of proving that the restriction of the shew bread to the priests was ended when David took of the shew bread and gave to them that were with him.

This man, so zealous against all heresy, found it however in matters the orthodoxy of which is not much questioned in the present day. It was an important matter with him and others (including the council of Nice) that Christians should stand at prayers always on the first day of the week, and during the fifty days between Easter and Whitsunday, which they were not required to do at other times. "Six days," says Epiphanius, "we pray upon our knees in token of our fall, but on the Lord's day we bow not the knee in token of the Resurrection, by which according to the grace of Christ we are freed from sin, and the power of death. Quest. and Resp. ad Orthod." Morer on the Lord's Day, p. 390.

† In the Gospel by Luke, according to our version this Sabbath is called "the second Sabbath after the first." (Luke 6: 1.) Much ingenuity has been exercised and various conjectures have been offered as to the import of this phrase; but the total want of it in the oldest known manuscript extant, (the Vatican MS., only recently made available to general students,) as well as in "the Cod. Vat. Urb. 2, the Cod. L., and some others," renders it exceedingly probable that it is altogether an interpolation. "The 'second after the first' of our common version is plainly a marginal irreption in an age long posterior to the evangelist; and has cost much lost labor of interpretation to learned annotators. It seems most probable, that the phrase was a late compendious mode adopted for expressing the 'first Sabbath of the second month,' as acutely suggested by Wetstein in his note; but the ancient and simple reading ('on a Sabbath day') is confirmed by 'on another Sabbath' following at ver. 6." Penn's Annotations to the Book of the New Covenant.

LOVE TO OUR ENEMIES.

When on the fragrant sandal tree
  The woodman's axe descends,
And she who bloomed so beauteously
  Beneath the keen stroke bends,
E'en on the edge that wrought her death,
  Dying, she breathes her sweetest breath,
As if betokening in her fall,
  Peace to her foes, and love to all.

RULES FOR THE REGULATION OF SOCIAL INTERCOURSE.

[Copied by request from the Young Lady's Guide.]

Never go into any company where the spirit and maxims of the world predominate. I know this will cut you off from a large portion of society, yet, I believe it to be a rule founded upon the word of God. If we would not be conformed to the world, we must not follow its maxims nor partake of its spirit. I know it is often said we should go into such society for the purpose of exerting a religious influence. But the practical result is directly the contrary. The spirit which prevails in such company is destructive of all religious feeling: it freezes up the warm affections of the Christian's heart. The consequence is, he is ashamed to acknowledge his Master, and avow his principle, where the prevailing current is against him. He therefore moves along with it, to the injury of his own soul, and the wounding of his Master's cause. His worldly companions see no difference between his conduct and their own; and conclude, either that all is right with themselves, or that he is a hypocrite. Large parties, as a general rule, are unfriendly to the health both of body and soul. The most profitable kind of social intercourse is the informal meeting of small circles, of which a sufficient number are pious to give a direction and tone to the conversation.

When in company, labor to give a profitable direction to conversation. If there are elder persons present, who introduce general discourse of a profitable character, let your words be few. It is generally better, in such cases, to learn in silence. When an opportunity offers, however, for you to say anything that will add interest to the conversation, do not fail to improve it. But let your ideas be well conceived, and your words well chosen. "A word fitly spoken is like apples of gold in pictures of silver." The interest of conversation does not depend so much upon the multitude of words, as upon the matter they contain, and their appropriateness to the subject. But, when no other person introduces profitable conversation, take it upon yourself. If you will study to be skillful in the matter, you may turn any conversation to good account. This was one of the peculiar beauties of our Savior's discourse. Whatever subject was introduced, he invariably drew from it some important lesson. If you are on the alert, you may always give a proper turn to conversation in this way. I do not say that conversation should always be exclusively religious. But it should be of a kind calculated to improve either the mind or the heart, and it should at all times partake of the savor of piety. "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt." No proper opportunity, however, should be lost, of making a direct religious impression. If the solemn realities of divine things were always present to our minds, as they ought to be, we would never be at a loss to speak of them in a becoming manner. When you meet with persons who are living without hope, lose no proper occasion to warn them of their danger, and show them the sinfulness of their lives, and the guilt of rejecting the Savior. But this should be done as privately as possible. Speaking to them abruptly, in the presence of company, often has a tendency to provoke opposition, and harden them in sin. However, this caution is not always necessary. If there is much tenderness of conscience, admonition will be well received, even in the presence of others. Great care should be taken, on both sides, that you neither injure them by your imprudence, nor neglect your duty to their souls through excessive carefulness. Study wisdom, skillfulness, discretion in all things.

Set your face against the discussion of the characters of those who are absent. This is a most pernicious practice, quite too prevalent at the present day. I would have you avoid, as much as possible, speaking even of the good qualities of those who are absent, for two reasons: 1. I see no good likely to result from it, therefore it must be an unprofitable method of spending the time. 2. It leads us to speak also of their faults, so as to give their real characters; and this is evil-speaking. Never allow yourself to say anything to the disadvantage of any person unless your duty to others may require it. This, however, will rarely happen; but it may sometimes be your duty to caution others against being ensnared by one whose character you know to be bad. The Scriptures condemn backbiting and evil-speaking in the most pointed terms. "Speak not evil one of another, brethren. He that speaketh evil of his brother, speaketh evil of the law." "Speak evil of no man." "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil-speaking, be put away from you." "Debates envying, wrath, strife, backbiting whisperings, swelling tumults." "Whisperers, backbiters, haters of God, despiteful." Here we see how the Lord regards this sin; for he has classed it with the exercise of the most abominable passions of the human heart. Yet how common it is for professors of religion to speak freely, and without reserve, of the characters of others; and even of their own brethren and sisters in the church. This is a great sin, and produces much evil in church and in society. It creates heart-burnings, jealousies, and strife; and furnishes employment for tale-bearers, that most despicable set of mischief-makers. But, this sin is often committed without saying anything directly against another. A sly insinuation is often productive of more mischief than direct evil-speaking. It leaves a vague but strong impression upon the mind of the hearer, against the character of the person spoken of; and often creates a prejudice which is never removed. This is most unjust and unfair, because it leaves the character of the injured person resting under suspicion, without his having an opportunity to remove it. This is probably what the apostle means by whisperers. Solomon, also, speaking of the haughty person and wicked man, says, "He that winketh with the eye causeth shame." How often do we see this winking and speaking by gestures and knowing looks when the characters of others are under discussion! Open and unreserved evil-speaking is unchristian; but this winking and speaking with the feet is mean and dishonorable. Whenever you perceive a disposition to make invidious remarks about others, refuse to join in the conversation, and manifest your decided disapprobation. "The north wind driveth away rain; so doth the angry countenance a back-biting tongue." Bear in mind the words of the apostle James: "If any man among you seemeth to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain." So you see the habitual indulgence of this sin will cut off the hope of the loudest professors.

Avoid speaking of yourself. When any person makes himself and his own affairs the principal topics of conversation, he shows himself to be supremely selfish, and ridiculously vain. It is also treating others with great disrespect; as though one's self were of more consequence than the whole company. Endeavor to keep yourself as much as possible out of view, and to direct the thoughts and conversation of the company away from personal affairs to intellectual, moral, and religious subjects. But, when any of your friends make known their difficulties to you, manifest an interest in their affairs, sympathize with them, and render them all the assistance in your power.

Never indulge a suspicious disposition. Many persons destroy their own peace, and gain the ill-will of others, by the exercise of this unhappy temper. You have no right to think others dislike you, until they have manifested their dislike. Accustom yourself to repose confidence in your associates. It is better to be sometimes deceived, than never to trust. And if you are always jealous of those around you, be sure you will soon alienate their affections. In your intercourse with others of your own age and sex, be willing always to advance at least half way, and with those whose habits are very retiring, you may even go farther. Many persons of sterling worth have so low an opinion of themselves, as to doubt whether even their own equals wish to form an acquaintance. "A man that has friends must show himself friendly." Always put the best construction upon the conduct of others. Do not attach more meaning to their language and conduct than they properly express. If at any time you really believe yourself slighted, take no notice of it. Yet, be careful never to intrude yourself into society where you have good reason to suppose your company is not desired.

Be cautious in the formation of intimate friendships. Christians should always regard one another as friends. Yet peculiar circumstances, together with congeniality of sentiment and feelings, may give rise to a personal attachment, much stronger than the common bond which unites all Christians. Of this, we have a most beautiful example in the case of David and Jonathan. This appears to be a perfect pattern of Christian friendship. They both doubtless loved other pious people. But there was existing between them a peculiar personal attachment. Their souls were "knit together." Friendships of that kind should not be numerous, and the objects of them should be well chosen. Long acquaintance is necessary that you may be able to repose unlimited confidence in the friend to whom you unbosom your whole heart. Form no such friendships hastily. Think what would have been the consequence, if David had been deceived in his friend. He would most certainly have lost his life.

Before going into company, visit your closet. Pray that the Lord would so direct your steps that you may do all things for his glory; that he would enable you to spend the time profitably to yourself and others; that he would keep you from evil-speaking, levity, and foolish jesting, and every impropriety; and that he would enable you to exert a religious influence over those with whom you may meet. Be assured, if you go out without observing this precaution, you will return with a wounded soul.

CHANGES IN THE ENGLISH LANGUAGE.

In the year 700 the Lord's Prayer began thus: "Uren fader thie arth in hœfnas, sie gekalgud thin noma to eyineth thin rich; sic thin walla suc is in hœfuas and in srtho." In the year 900, it began thus: "Thee ure fader the eart on heofenum si thin namagehalgod. Cum ohin ric. Si thin willa on corthen swa, swa on heofnum." In the year 1001, in the reign of Henry II., it was read thus, and sent over by Pope Adrian, an Englishman: "Uie fader in heaven rich, Thy name be hailed eber lich. Thou brings us thy michell lesse; Als hise in heavenly doe. That in yearth beene it also," &c. In the year 1002, in the reign of Henry III., it read thus: "Fader thou art in heaven blisse, Thine Heyle name it wurt the blisse. Cumen and mot thy kingdom. Thine holy will it be all don; In heaven and in earth also, So shall it be in full Ic tro," &c. In the reign of Henry VI., it began thus: "Owr fader thou art in heavens, halliewed be this name, the kingdom come to thee; be the will done in earth as heaven," &c. In 1537, it began thus: "O, our father which art in heaven! hallowed be thy name. Let thy kingdom come. Thy will be fulfilled, as well in earth as it is in heaven," &c. And at different periods, various translations by different individuals have been given, of a certain passage in the New Testament. In the year 1380, Wiclif gave the following: "But feith is the substance of things that ben to be hopied for, and an argument of things not aperynge, and in this feith eeld men han getum witnessing." In the year 1534, Tyndal gave it as his opinion, "Fayth is a confydence of things which are hoped fir, and a certaiyntie of thingeys which are not sene. For by it the elders were well reported of." In the same year we have Cranmer's opinion on the same text. "Fayth," says he, "is a sure confydence of thyngs which are not seen. For by it the elders obtayned a good reporte." In the year 1557, Genevan gives his opinion on the same text. "Faythe," says he, "is that which causeth those things to appeare indeed which are not seen. For by it our elders are well reported of." In the year 1582, Rhiems has the following exposition on the same text: "And fayth is the substance of things to be hoped for, the argument of things not appearing. For in this the old men obtained testimonie." And in the year 1664, when King James came to the throne of Great Britain, and by whose authority the Scriptures were translated into the English language, he gave his exposition on the same text. "Now faith," says he, "is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen. For by it the elders obtained a good report." [Juvenile Wesleyan.

A BIBLE LEFT IN A BARN.

When a committee of a Bible Association in the State of New York, were making exertions to supply every destitute family with a copy of the book of God, a distributor called at a house where he met with an angry repulse. The man of the house was full of "cursing and bitterness;" he would not suffer a bible to be left at his house. "If left anywhere," said he, "it shall be left at the barn." "Very well," the distributor meekly replied; "I do not know that I could select a better place for it: our blessed Savior once laid in a manger." He went quickly to the barn, and deposited the sacred treasure in a safe place, with much prayer that it might bless even him who would not allow it to remain in his house. The man, struck with the unexpected reply of the distributor, was led to think of his own rashness and guilt, and especially of the Savior's birth-place. After two or three days his distress became so great, that he went out to the barn in search of the rejected volume. He turned to the passage which records the circumstances connected with the birth of the Redeemer, and wept, and repented, and consecrated himself to God through faith in Christ. The once spurned book now found a place, not only in his house, but its truths were received in his heart, and controlled his life. [Albany Spectator.

MINUTES

OF THE NINTH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ## SOUTH-WESTERN SEVENTH-DAY BAP. ASSOCIATION.

The South-Western Association met at the Seventh-day Baptist meeting-house in Jackson, Shelby Co., Ohio, on the 12th day of the 10th month, 1848, at 10 o'clock, A. M. Eld. Joshua Hill preached the opening sermon, from Romans 8: 6.

After sermon, the preacher called upon the Association to organize, which was immediately done by the delegates electing Bro. Joshua Hill, Moderator of the meeting, Bro. Eli Forsythe, Clerk, and Bro. Benjamin Clement, Assistant Clerk. These officers having taken their places, the Association authorized the Moderator to appoint the standing committees for the session, and the following were appointed accordingly:

On the State of Religion.—Eld. Simeon Babcock, Maxson Babcock, John Forsythe.

On Preaching.—Abraham Vanhorn, Ezekiel P. Stout, Joel Babcock.

On Resolutions.—Eld. Samuel Davison, Job Vanhorn, Eli Forsythe.

The Letters from the Churches were called for and received. Visiting brethren were invited to a seat in the Association, and to take a part in its deliberations. After prayer by Bro. S. Davison, the Association adjourned to meet again at 2 1-2 o'clock, P. M.

Afternoon Session.—Assembled pursuant to adjournment. Prayer by Bro. S. Davison. The letters from the churches were then read, from which the following statistics were taken:

Lost Creek, Va.—Eld. Peter Davis, P.; Sam'l D. Davis, L.; Abel Bond, Levi H. Bond, William Kennedy, Deacons; Thomas B. Bond, Jacob Davis, Clerks. Added 1; Dismissed 0; Rejected 1; Deceased 0; total 71. Messenger —Abraham Vanhorn.

New Salem, Va.—It was reported that a letter and delegate were ordered from this church, but neither appeared. Total membership last year 68. It was reported by friends, that seven had been baptized.

Hughes' River, South Fork, Va.—No returns.

Hughes' River, North Fork, Va.—No returns.

Northampton, Ohio.—Eld. Simeon Babcock, P.; Leonard Lippencott, L.; Joshua G. Babcock, Deacon; A. D. S. Ayers, Clerk. Added 0; Deceased 0; Dismissed 1; total 35. Messengers—Eld. S. Babcock, Joshua G. Babcock, Ezekiel P. Stout.

Port Jefferson, Ohio.—Eld. Joshua Hill, P.; Eld. Lewis A. Davis, James Hill, Thomas Babcock, Benjamin Clement, L.; John Babcock, Deacon; Eli V. Ailes, James Hill, Clerks. Added 2; Dismissed 0; Excluded 2; Deceased 0; total 31. Messengers—Eld. J. Hill, Thomas Babcock, Benjamin Clement.

Sciota, Ohio.—No Pastor; Charles Clarke, Deacon; Alonzo D. Graham, Clerk. Added 0; Deceased 2; Dismissed 0; Excluded 2; total 20. Messengers—Richard Clarke, Reuben J. Davis.

Jackson, Ohio.—Eld. S. Babcock, P.; Maxson Babcock, Calvin Davis, L.; John Forsythe, Jacob D. Maxson, Deacons; Eli Forsythe, Clerk. Added 0; Deceased 1; Dismissed 3; Excluded 0; total 33. Messengers—Jacob D. Maxson, John Forsythe, Eli Forsythe, Maxson Babcock.

Stokes, Ohio.—Eld. Joshua Hill, P.; Job Vanhorn, Deacon; James Simpson, Clerk. Added 0; Dismissed 2; Deceased 0; Excluded 0; total 22. Messengers—Job Vanhorn, James Simpson.

Eld. Samuel Davison being present pursuant to an appointment from the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, the Association voted to receive him with a hearty welcome, and our earnest prayers for the success of the great and good enterprise in which he is engaged.

The Executive Committee on the Local Missions of the Association being called upon, reported as follows:—

The Executive Committee on the Local Missions of the Association respectfully report, That at the Anniversary held in 1846, the Association resolved to become a missionary body, for the purpose of uniting the efforts of our churches in advancing the Redeemer's cause in the world; and in pursuance of such purpose, appointed ourselves an Executive Committee, as also a collecting agent in each church, for the purpose of carrying out its designs. At the last Anniversary, (which was held at Lost Creek, Va.,) few of the brethren who took an active part in moving this measure were present, and the subject was not called up as part of the business of the Association; consequently but little or no progress was made therein. While your Committee are under the painful necessity of making this report, it is some relief to their minds to be able to report, that this object has not been entirely lost sight of. The General Agent, Eld. Joshua Hill, laid the matter before the several churches in the western part of Ohio, and the church agents for the collection of funds obtained, in money and subscriptions, between twenty and thirty dollars for this object, which is still available when actual operations shall call for it. Deeply as we regret the want of interest or fidelity on the part of agents, or churches, or both, in this matter, we hope that the beginning now made will this year be persevered in, and that renewed efforts will be attended with complete success, and efficient measures adopted and carried out, so as to establish one or more itinerant missionaries in the several districts of country occupied by this Association—a measure which we regard as urgently demanded by our necessities as a denomination at this time. Nor would we overlook the importance of cooperation with the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association in the several missions in which they are engaged. Individuals among us have contributed to their funds, and we hope yet to be more efficient fellow-laborers in the good work in which they are engaged.

Eli Forsythe, } Com.
Jacob Maxson, }

The Committee on appointments for preaching during this session, having made a satisfactory report, the same was adopted, and the appointments made and filled accordingly.

The minutes for the day having been read and approved, the Association adjourned to meet on the morrow morning at 10 o'clock. Prayer by Bro. B. Clement.

Sixth-day Morning, the Association met pursuant to adjournment. The meeting was opened with prayer by Bro. Leman Lippencott.

The reports of the several committees were now called for and read in succession.

Report on the State of Religion.

The Committee on the State of Religion respectfully report, That there have been in past years eleven churches recognized as members of this body, located in Pennsylvania, Virginia, Ohio, and Indiana. Seven of these churches were represented in this session by their delegates and letters. The Church in Woodbridgeton, Pa., and the Church in Madison, Jay Co., Ind., are believed to have become extinct by deaths and the removal of families to more western parts. From the other two churches, situated on Hughes' River, Va., no returns have been received. Of the churches at present represented, it is gratifying to be able to report, that they are for the most part enjoying peace and unity among themselves; and though no extensive revival has taken place among them during the past year, they have not been left without the visitations of divine mercy, but have had refreshing seasons of God's favor, and in some instances additions to their numbers by baptisms and conversions to the Sabbath. A good degree of constancy and stability attends the membership of the churches, notwithstanding there is great cause to lament a want of fervency in prayer and self-consecration to the cause of the Lord. Thus we would acknowledge the mercies of the Lord in our preservation, and his goodness in continuing the ministry among us so as for most of the churches to enjoy the regular ministration of the ordinances of divine appointment. The Church in Stokes is at this time encouraged to expect a reviving season, three persons having there offered themselves as candidates for baptism within a few days. The Church in Sciota, Pickaway Co., Ohio, is without a regular minister, and being situated at a considerable distance from all the others, has less of these opportunities. On the whole, we hope the Great Head of the Church will yet visit and build us up a people for his praise.

Simeon Babcock, }
John Forsythe, } Com.
Maxson Babcock. }

The report of the Committee on Resolutions having been received, was taken up, spoken to, and adopted, as follows:—

Resolved, That whereas, from the report of the Executive Committee on the Local Missions of this Association, it appears that but little has been done among us for this object, we now most seriously call upon all the members of our churches to coöperate, heart and hand with the Association to carry out their advice in this matter the ensuing year.

Resolved, That we renewedly recommend the Seventh day Baptist Missionary Association, and all its missions, to the support of all the members of our churches; believing that its objects and labors ought to be remembered in our prayers continually, and specially in a monthly concert of prayer on the night after the first Sabbath in each month, and that our prayers ought to be accompanied with contributions, according to our ability, for the same objects.

Resolved, That the American Sabbath Tract Society meets with our entire approbation; and we recommend to all our members to contribute to its funds; and procure its publications for distribution in our own borders.

The Sabbath Recorder was in a like manner recommended to the patronage of all our friends, "as a very instructive and useful Christian publication."

Resolved, That we believe the true spirit of the religion of our Lord Jesus Christ is universally benevolent towards the whole family of man; and when lived up to, its precepts and institutions are sufficient for all the purposes of purity, morality, and philanthropy. And whereas various Secret Societies in our country are seeking countenance and support from Christian people, we would seriously warn the members of our churches against all insiduous efforts to beguile them into these institutions, as we believe their real tendency to be antichristian, and dangerous to the true interests of society.

A Corresponding Letter, prepared by order of the Association, was read, and adopted, and ordered to be published with the minutes, as follows:—

The South-Western Seventh-day Baptist Association, to the several Associations of the same faith, greeting:—

Beloved Brethren,—We have been again, through the tender mercies of God, permitted to meet on an anniversary occasion, to transact business for the good of the Redeemer's cause. We rejoice in every testimony we receive of your attachment and love to the same glorious cause. And in regard to your enterprising spirit in foreign and home missions, together with other benevolent operations of the day, we would unite in a hearty coöperation. Our scattered and destitute situation calls upon us to pray fervently to God to send forth more faithful laborers into his vineyard.

We shall be happy to continue our correspondence with you, and welcome your messengers to all subsequent meetings.

Wm. F. Randolph, Com.

A committee was then appointed to report an Executive Missionary Committee, and a Collecting Agent in each church for the ensuing year.

The Minutes being read, the Association adjourned to meet on next first day at 9 o'clock, A. M. Prayer by Bro. Charles Clarke.

First-day.—Met according to appointment. Prayer by the Moderator.

The Committee on Nominations reported the following list, which was approved and ordered for the following year:—

Executive Missionary Committee.—Ezekiel P. Stout, Eli Forsythe, Job Vanhorn.

Church Agents for Collecting Funds.—Lost Creek, Abraham Vanhorn; New Salem, Lodowick Davis; Sciota, Richard Clarke; North Hampton, Joel Babcock; Jackson, John Forsythe; Port Jefferson, Thomas Babcock; Stokes, James Simpson; Hughes' River, Asa Bee.

Treasurer.—Eld. Simeon Babcock.

Cor. Sec.—Eld. Joshua Hill.

Eld. Simeon Babcock was appointed to preach the introductory sermon at the next anniversary, and Bro. Samuel Davis, of Lost Creek, his alternate.

It was then resolved, that the Executive Missionary Committee above appointed, be and are hereby instructed and authorized to employ an itinerant missionary to labor within the geographical boundaries occupied by this Association, so soon as the funds and subscriptions obtained by the church agents shall be known to be sufficient for that purpose; and that they report an account of the missionary operations of this Association to the Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, previous to the next anniversary of that body, as an independent auxiliary.

A committee was then appointed to revise the Minutes, and respectfully solicit their publication in full in the Sabbath Recorder; after which the Association adjourned, to meet with the Church at Lost Creek, Va., on the fifth day before the second Sabbath in the tenth month, 1849.

The following sums were received at this session of the Association:—

| For Foreign Missions. | | For Home Missions. | |
|---|---|---|---|
| J Babcock | $5 00 | C Clarke | $1 00 |
| C Clarke | 2 00 | Eld J Hill | 1 00 |
| Eld S Babcock | 1 00 | H Stout | 1 00 |
| C Davis | 1 50 | R Clarke | 41 |
| Lydia Davis | 25 | A Davis | 25 |
| A Davis | 25 | Col after sermon by S D on first day | 8 42 |

Sale of Sabbath Tracts $2 00.

NOTES BY ELD. DAVISON.

Jackson, Shelby Co, Ohio, }
20th of 10th mo., 1848. }

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Although the Minutes of the South-Western Association have been forwarded to you for publication, I have thought that a few observations by a visitor may perhaps be acceptable.

The Session was very well attended by brethren and delegates from the churches in Ohio; but only one delegate from the churches in Virginia reached the meeting; it was, therefore, more properly, an Ohio Association. There being but three ordained ministers of the denomination in Ohio; and one of them, Bro. Lewis A. Davis, having become incapacitated for the duties of his station, by bodily infirmity, and having on that account removed his residence to Independence, at the north-west part of this State; there were but two ordained ministers present, belonging to the Association. The session, however, was interesting, and the business transacted with vigor and much unanimity. The brethren in the ministry, and many of the members of the churches, are warm-hearted, zealous Christians; and I have felt my heart cementing with them in Christian regards, as I have witnessed their love to the truth of Jehovah and of Jesus, and learned the fidelity with which they bear testimony thereto, in all the region where they dwell. Although they have been hitherto embarrassed by the paucity of their numbers and restricted resources, I doubt not that with the aid of brethren of experience in our missionary labors, their associated efforts may yet tend greatly to their enlargement and prosperity. The effort projected two years ago, as mentioned in their Missionary Committee's report, has been inoperative solely for the want of such aid from some other part of the denomination. I am confident that it wants but the labors of some brother of experience and fidelity to carry it forward for a single season, and it would meet with the hearty support of all the living members of the churches. The Executive Committee on appointment for the present year, I believe, are disposed to do their duty, and are already taking measures to secure the labors of a brother from the eastern churches to itinerate within their boundaries for the ensuing season; and their movement is seconded by liberal promises on the part of their brethren around them. At the request of the Associational Committee on Preaching for the Session, I preached several times during its sitting; and on first-day morning, by special request, on the subject of the Sabbath. The meeting was numerously attended by first-day and seventh-day people, and so far as I could discover, the discourse was listened to and received with much attention and respect. I have long observed the force of local circumstances and long-continued habits over the movements and sentiments of many worthy communities, where they are in a measure isolated from others; and there was one thing which I thought strikingly illustrated it in this Association. I found upon inquiry, that they have never taken up a public collection in any session of the Association for missionary purposes! Individuals have contributed of their own free will at various opportunities to these objects, but no congregational collections at the close of public worship have as yet been had from the beginning of their Association. As there exists no organic anti-mission sentiment among them, I suppose that this was owing, in part, to their being so few, and like all settlers in a new country, in straitened circumstances as it respects cash; and in part, perhaps, to the want of an opportunity of direct coöperation with a missionary body. The ministry, too, which they have enjoyed, having been almost entirely gratuitously supplied by men who supported themselves and their own families, I found there was a sentiment growing up among them, that all ministers and missionaries ought to go out without purse and without scrip, believing that it should happen to them as it did to the disciples of Jesus when he sent them through the cities and towns of Judea—"they should lack nothing." In a free public discussion of this subject, I cited them to our Lord's reversal of these directions, (Luke 22: 35, 36,) and to the several apostolic instructions on this matter in the New Testament. The discussion brought out the brethren in the ministry in full vindication of their own course, as preaching the Gospel at their own charges of necessity and not of choice, and showed that their real sentiments were gospel-wise in this matter. I believe the discussion will do good; many of the brethren stand committed by pledges to support this truly gospel provision, "the laborer is worthy of his hire." Many brethren said that at first, in settling a new country, it was of necessity that they had the Gospel preached gratuitously, but that as their circumstances had now improved, their obligations were apparent in this matter. When I proposed a public collection to be taken up on first-day, there was some doubt as to how it would be received; but like good-hearted brethren they resolved to TRY IT, and the result was beyond every body's expectation. On the whole, I believe the session was truly propitious to the cause of the Lord among the churches of the South-Western Association.

Our Brethren in the Ministry here are worthy, self-denying men. They were all raised among their brethren in this region, and have none of the advantages of literary culture. I believe, however, that they all enjoy the love and respect of their brethren; and of this I believe they are truly worthy. They are ministers of whom the churches have no cause to be ashamed. I did not see Bro. Lewis A. Davis, but he is reported to have worn himself down by riding and practicing as a physician, and laboring beyond his strength as a preacher of the Gospel in a comparatively new country, and to have left his former field of labor because he knew not how to deny urgent applications, even when he knew his labors were wearing him down. There is only one ordained minister (Bro. Peter Davis) in the churches in Virginia, and he quite an aged man. There are several beloved brethren, both in Virginia and Ohio, who have been licensed by their respective churches to preach; but as they are all left to their own resources, and most of them without any official church appointment, they are able to do but little for the good of the cause, and the latter nothing more than if they never had been licensed. Such licenses have long appeared to me a name without a reality; and as every brother in Baptist churches has liberty to speak for God when and where he can, a license without an appointment, is a title without a reality—a measure without Bible authority, and destitute of sound wisdom. A careful examination of this subject many years ago led me to the unchanged conviction, that every church ought to have one or more ordained elders, whether they be public preachers or not, so that they may always have a man of years, experience, wisdom, and established reputation for piety, to preside over their meetings and other church affairs, and to administer the ordinances. Such would doubtless encourage the worthy gifts in the church; and when the churches wanted the approved gifts known to be among them for any specific labors, they should be ordained thereto. Such has long appeared to me to be the course the apostles pursued when they went through the churches they had gathered, ordaining elders in every city. Such I think would be greatly for the peace, order, and prosperity of modern churches.

The location of these Churches is not the most happy for the unity of their efforts in one Association. The churches in Ohio can very well unite their efforts among themselves, and the same may be done by the churches in Virginia. But the latter are two hundred and fifty miles from those in the western part of Ohio, so that it costs too much time and money ever to allow their union to be of any practical utility to the cause of Christ. Indeed it is a serious embarrassment, for the Association is now held alternately in Ohio and Virginia, and attended by a very small delegation from either State to the other, and they some times persons unacquainted with the views and measures of the delegating churches, or unable successfully to advocate them; so that the measures adopted by brethren in one State one year, are either frustrated or laid over by the brethren in the other State the next year; and all without any ill design on any part, but solely for want of acquaintance and practical co-operation with each others views. As things now stand, it appears to me in reality two Associations, each holding its meetings once in two years. Had each State an annual meeting, both would be quite as numerously attended, might have quite as numerous a delegation from the churches in the other State, and by so doing leave each other unembarrassed to carry out their own views and measures for Christian progress. With the kindest feelings to them all, and a hearty desire for their mutual prosperity, I submit these suggestions to their serious consideration.

The four western Ohio churches are within a circuit of forty miles, and hold regular quarterly meetings alternately with each other, which keeps up a happy acquaintance and fellowship. The Church in Sciota, Pickaway Co., Ohio, is from seventy to ninety miles distant from the others, consequently can have but little aid from them; and having no pastor, elder, or preacher, is greatly crippled in its efforts to maintain the worship and order of God's house. Surely he who left Titus in Crete that he should set in order the things that are wanting, and ordain an elder in every city, if he were now on earth, would appoint the same things for this church. Why should not we now do the same?

The Origin and Progress of these Churches may encourage the Missionary Society in their efforts to extend gospel labor to the new settlements of the still more western parts of our country. Most of the original constituents of the western Ohio churches were from the Virginia churches; as the original constituents of those were from the New Jersey churches. Bro. James Davis tells me, that when he was sixteen years of age, nearly the whole church which had resided upon the river Squan, Monmouth Co., N. J., of which he was one, emigrated in a body. The train consisted of fifteen wagons. Most of the people settled in the western parts of Virginia. He is now seventy-five years old; and was one of the first who bought land in these parts. Our brethren here, at least the heads of families, are most of them respectable land-holders. This town, and the adjoining on every side, is situated on what is called the Lewistown Reserve; the Indians left it about fifteen years ago; about thirteen years ago our brethren began to come into it; within that time these churches have been gathered, and some of their ministers have been raised up, partly by the labors of the missionaries sent by the eastern and northern churches, and partly by their own labors, in which Bro. Lewis A. Davis has borne a worthy and distinguished part. Eld. Joshua Hill, in particular, is one of the fruits of these labors; and now quite an efficient laborer himself. He is a man about my own age. Bro. S. Babcock is a much older man; but equally devoted to his Lord's work. Both these brethren are men of families, and possessed of a respectable landed property. In these churches there is quite a fair proportion of converts to the Sabbath. Bro. B. Clement, a licentiate in the Port Jefferson Church, came to them from the Methodist connection during the last year.

Their Lands lie between the Miami and Sandusky Railroad, and the Miami and Maumee Canal. This tract is part of that great level which stretches from the central parts of the State northward to the shores of Lake Erie. It is very heavy-timbered land; many of their oaks rise to the height of one hundred and twenty feet, and four feet diameter at their butts. The soil is very fertile; natural to grass, and producing large crops of grain; seventy-five and more bushels of corn to the acre is quite common. It is a black mould lying on a hard-pan bottom, which is composed of clay and gravel. Its chief defect is a want of living streams, most farmers having to draw water for their cattle during the dry season. Most of the early settlers have now from fifteen to forty acres of land under improvement, and have left their first log-cabins for good block-houses. When the country is cleared, there will be but little waste land. Being equally adapted to the plough and the pasture, it must ultimately become a rich, fertile country. In the town of Jackson, the Seventh-day Baptists have the strongest religious society; and with fidelity to the cause, and unity among themselves, have a fair prospect of maintaining their preponderance. They have a good church lot, on which is their burying-ground, and a square block meeting-house, twenty-eight feet by thirty-four. Numerous families rising up, and other settlers coming in; a fair proportion of useful gifts among them; with a godly walk, and a devoted ministry; the blessing of Jehovah upon them, they can hardly fail of becoming a strong people. May the Lord enable them to feel their responsibilities, and hasten his work among them.

CURIOUS INTERPRETATIONS OF SCRIPTURE.

Alfred Center, Oct. 20, 1848.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In the last Recorder, you give us an example of the manner in which Scripture is interpreted in order to find a warrant therein for abandoning the Sabbath of God's appointing, and keeping instead thereof the popular day christened "the Christian Sabbath." The illustration above alluded to was drawn from an exposition of Ezek. 43: 26, 27, by the Oberlin Evangelist. You express astonishment at the novelty (and, as I suppose, recklessness) of the Evangelist's interpretation. But, sir, if I understand the "signs of the times," such interpretations are only to be regarded as intimations of what is yet to come. And, by way of illustration, I would relate the following occurrence. For some time past, I have been engaged in a discussion of the Sabbath question with a Presbyterian clergyman, in the course of which he read an argument from some author which purported to be an exposition of a certain passage of Scripture which sustained his view of the question; in answer to which, I read from a celebrated first-day commentator, who gives an entirely different view of the passage! In reply to which, the reverend gentleman said, that "this comment was written before the question was agitated," and that "if it were to be written now, a very different view would be given." It seems that there is as much determination, on the part of many Christian ministers, to force the Scriptures to testify in behalf of the Sunday, as there was with the prophet Baalam to force his ass onward, that he might accomplish his covetous purpose!

N. V. HULL.

Receipts of the Baptist Missionary Union.—The Macedonian says that the receipts into the Treasury of the Union for the first half of the present financial year have been $31,924 95, showing a falling off from the receipts of the corresponding months last year, of $3,403 06. The expenditures meanwhile have exceeded those of corresponding months last year by more than $5,000, and must be in the same ratio throughout the year. Sixty thousand dollars must be paid into the Treasury within the remaining six months, to prevent an increase of debt, and to save the missions from pecuniary embarrassment.

The Gospel in Vienna.—Rev. Mr. Oncken, the Baptist pastor of Hamburg, has visited Vienna, and there preached to full and listening assemblies. "What," he exclaims, "has the Lord wrought, that I should have been privileged to preach the precious Gospel in the capital of Austria, from whence, only two years ago, a number of Christians were expelled, simply for having provided themselves with the Holy Scriptures!"

☞ We lay aside various editorials, and an article on the Sabbath from the Christian Contributor, in order to give this week all the matter on hand relative to the South-Western Association.

General Intelligence.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

Two steamships from England have arrived at New York since our last—the Europa and the United States—the former having made the passage in the remarkably short time of eleven days. We give below a summary of the news she brought.

Ireland.

Smith O'Brien has been convicted of high treason, and sentenced to be hung. The jury in the case of McManus have also pronounced a verdict of guilty. In both cases, the verdicts of the jury were accompanied with a strong recommendation to mercy. What will be the effect upon Government of these recommendations, remains to be seen. There is a good deal of uncertainty about it, and many think that life will not be sacrificed. The trial of the other State prisoners is proceeding,

England.

The cholera has made its appearance in London, and there had been between twenty and thirty cases at the last accounts. It has also appeared at Edinburg, where there were 25 cases, of which 20 proved fatal.

France.

It is decided that the President of the French Republic shall be elected as in the United States, by the whole body of the people, and not by the National Assembly, as recommended by General Cavaignac. This has been decided in the Assembly by the large majority of 602 to 211. Louis Napoleon is likely to be the first choice; his chances of election are increasing daily. General Cavaignac, it is said, has promised to remain in office until after the election, provided no unnecessary delay is intruded by speakers into the settlement of the Constitution. The Constitution will in all probability be voted by the end of October, and the election for President may be expected to take place about the 15th of November.

The French Colonists who have already been sent to Algeria, will make together a body of 12,000 men, chiefly of those who took part in the Revolution of June, who have been deported. They will be divided among the settlements of Algiers, Oran and Constantine.

Austria.

There has been a bloody insurrection at Vienna. It commenced on the 5th ult., in consequence of the publication of a proclamation from the Emperor against the Hungarians. The German Grenadiers were ordered to join the expedition against the Hungarians. The order was opposed by the National Guards, who broke up the railroad by which the Grenadiers were to have been conveyed. This led to several severe conflicts between them and the troops; the murder of Latour, the Minister of War; the storming of the arsenal; the flight of the Emperor and the Imperial Family, &c. When the Diet learned that the Emperor had fled, they invested themselves with both the deliberative and executive powers. At the time the latest post left, on the 7th, the City of Vienna was all in arms, and great excitement prevailed; but there seemed to be no disposition to perpetrate farther outrage. The Minister of Justice had been arrested and conducted to the University. The rest of the Ministers had concealed themselves, except Hobblhoff and Hornbosk. All the soldiers had left the town, and the fighting had ceased. 150 persons are said to have been killed, and 500 to 600 wounded.

Hungary.

There has been a hard battle between the Hungarians and the Croats, in which many were killed, and the field of battle was left in possession of the Hungarians, who have to deplore the loss of Ivanka, one of their leaders, who was made prisoner. The two Counts Zichy, brothers, were hanged by the Hungarians, who suspected them of treasonable intrigues.

The Cholera.

Authentic accounts state that the disease is still on the increase at Hamburg, Germany. From the 1st of September, when it broke out, to the 20th, there were 1,339 cases, of which 650 died, 302 recovered, and 387 were under treatment.

Up to the 30th ult. there have been 1,704 cases of cholera in Berlin, 1,012 of which terminated fatally, 302 reported as cured, and 390 still doubtful.

Accounts from Stockholm, 4th Oct., state that the cholera had appeared at Koningsburg, Trarisond, Pillau, and Lubeck, and that other harbors of Prussia Proper were suspected.

The ravages of the pestilence at Alleppo and Damascus, are stated to have been frightful, particularly at Damascus, where not fewer than 10,000 persons are supposed to have died within the twenty days preceding the 27th of Aug.

A Curious Will Case.—The Baltimore County Court has been occupied about two weeks in the trial of a will case which developed some curious facts. It was the will of old David Hutson, who died a short time since, and left a will, bequeathing about $30,000 to his boon companions, and cutting off his blood relations, or most of them, with one dollar each. The suit was brought to set aside the will, on the ground that the testator was not, at the time he will was drawn and signed, of sound disposing mind; that he was exposed to undue influences when it was signed; and that the influences and means to which he was exposed were fraudulent. It appeared in evidence, that Hutson had been constantly plied with liquor for some weeks previous to his death, and also that his companions had kept a constant watch and guard over him to avoid his coming in contact with his relatives. The case occupied ten days, and was finally disposed of by the jury unsetting the will, and directing the executors to refund all the rents collected.

WATER CELEBRATION IN BOSTON.

The good people of Boston had a grand celebration on the 25th ult., on the occasion of introducing into the city the waters of Lake Cochituate. The stores of the city were generally closed, and from morning to night the streets were thronged with the citizens of Boston and the adjacent towns, forming a larger concourse than was ever before gathered there. A procession was formed at 11 o'clock, which, after marching through various streets, brought up around the as yet empty Frog Pond in the Common. There a hymn written for the occasion was sung to the tune of Old Hundred; prayer was offered by Dr. Sharpe; a report was made by the Water Commissioners; the Mayor of the City announced that the waters of Lake Cochituate, which since the Creation had reposed in their native bed, were ready to be introduced into the city of Boston; and immediately thereupon the water began to gush up from the fountain, and continued to rise until it formed a magnificent column, at least seventy feet in height, flashing and foaming in the last crimson rays of the setting sun. After witnessing a variety of changes in the form of the jets from the fountain, the people gave nine hearty cheers, and dispersed. In the evening there was a great display of fireworks, and the public buildings in many parts of the city were illuminated. The celebration, as a whole, is said to have surpassed anything ever before witnessed in Boston.

In relation to the expense and capacity of the Water Works, the Boston Times gives the following information:—

The expense was originally calculated at $1,600,000. Drafts for the work have thus far exceeded three millions of dollars, and further expenses will doubtless be incurred.

Besides the aqueduct itself, the great features of this enterprize are the Beacon Hill Reservoir in Boston; the Reservoir on Dorchester Heights, South Boston; the great Reservoir and Gate House on Corey's Hill in Brookline, from which the water of the Lake is brought to the street mains and reservoir in Boston in two iron pipes, thirty-four inches in diameter, and extending nearly four miles, and which are capable of delivering daily three millions of gallons of water; the Charles River Bridge at Newton Lower Falls, which is built on three arches; the Pipe Chamber in the vicinity, and the Road Bridge, which is built on a single arch, and said by all to be a most splendid piece of masonry; the Waste Wier, four miles beyond the Lower Falls, where the acqueduct passes over a considerable stream; and finally the Gate House, a granite edifice at the Lake itself.

The Reservoir on Beacon Hill covers an area of 40,000 square feet and will hold 3,000,000 gallons of water. The level will be 6 1-2 feet above the level of the floor of the State House. This Reservoir, which will throw a jet of water to a great hight, is intended for a reserve fountain, in case of any accident to the great pipes. The Reservoir on Dorchester Hights contains an area of 70,000 feet, and is capable of delivering 7,000,000 of gallons per day. This is also intended for a reserved fountain and the two Reservoirs together will dispense 7,000,000 gallons of water a day. This quantity, it has well been said, will supply more than 16 gallons a day for five days to every man, woman, and child in the city.

The fall of the water from the Reservoir in Brookline is two feet to the mile, and the level of the Reservoir is consequently eight feet higher than that of the great Reservoir in Boston. This Reservoir covers thirty acres, and the water will be in some places 20 feet deep, and will average 15 feet deep, thereby constituting a perfect safe-guard for the city if any accident happens to the conduit above. And again, the great reserve fund of all—Lake Cochituate—covers a surface of 659 acres, and drains a surface of 11,400 acres, being in some places from 70 to 80 feet in depth.

Scientific Prophecy.—About nineteen years ago, Mr. Hait, of Wilton, Conn., then a remarkably good student in his collegiate course, was suddenly deprived of his reason and memory. In those circumstances, his father, Rev. Mr. Hait, sent him to Hartford; but finding no relief, he sent him to Dr. Chaplin, of Cambridge, Mass. The Dr. said there was no relief for him at that time, but at the age of thirty-six or seven, there would be a change; that the brain was too much expanded for the cranium, and there would at that age be a contraction, which would enable it to act healthfully. His anxious father and family saw their hopes peremptorily deferred for nineteen years. That time has recently expired, and to their great joy, the prophecy is fulfilled. The man began to inquire for his books, as if he had just laid them down, and resumed his mathematical studies where he left them. There was no trace on his mind of this long blank in his life, or of anything which occurred in it, and he did not know that he was almost forty years of age. The circumstance of greatest interest is, that whereas he went into this state of derangement in deep religious anxiety, he came out of it with a bright Christian hope, which had been obtained without the knowledge of his friends a short time before. New Use of Chloroform.—A gentleman was robbed in London, recently, of a watch and some five pounds in money, by a woman who suddenly threw her arms around him, as if to give him an affectionate embrace, as he was quietly walking along the streets in the evening. The gentleman was found lying almost insensible, by a policeman, and could recollect nothing after the loving embrace, except that the woman pressed a handkerchief to his nose. It was presumed that chloroform had been sprinkled on the handkerchief.

Emigrants for Texas.—A Dublin letter in the Morning Chronicle announces the approaching departure of an emigrating body of superior class for Texas, including "some persons in the rank of gentry," one gentleman who had been a member of Parliament, three Justices of the Peace, persons heretofore connected with mercantile and banking establishments, and a number of well-to-do farmers. A clergyman of the established Church will accompany the party, with the design to become their pastor in the new home to which they are going, where the lands intended to be occupied have already been purchased. This movement seems to attract some attention, as the beginning of a "break-up" among the gentry and middle classes.

SUMMARY.

Hon. Harrison Gray Otis died at his residence in Boston on the 28th ult. He was a descendant of John Otis, who came from England to this country, and settled in Hingham, Mass., in the year 1630; and a nephew of the celebrated James Otis of revolutionary memory, to whose eloquence and patriotism the cause of American Independence was so largely indebted. Otis was born Oct. 8, 1765, and was consequently in his 84th year, on this the closing day of his life. He gradnated at Harvard University in 1783.

The bark Carmelita, of Bangor, was abandoned at sea on the 29th of September in a sinking condition. She was capsized on the 23d, when nine passengers, three of them females, and one seaman, were washed away and drowned. The Captain, two mates, five seamen, and four passengers, succeeded in reaching the vesset, from which they were taken by a British bark.

An accident occurred at the new Gas Work in Albany on Friday last, by which one man was killed, and seven others badly injured. It arose from the falling down of a large iron plating, forming the covering of a large gasometor. In its descent it fell upon 30 or forty men, of whom only those referred to above suffered by the falling mass.

A child of Mr. Upham, who keeps a confectionary shop in Hallowell, was smothered to death on Friday morning. The child was left in the morning in a bed upon a turn-up bedstead, and forgetful of the fact, the father turned the bed up. In about half an hour the bed was taken down, and the child found dead. It was about a year old.

The following counterfeits are in circulation: 2s on the Mohawk Bank, Schenectady, good imitation of the old plate—vignette, an Indian in a canoe; register's hand badly written; the genuine notes of this plate are nearly all in—Commercial Bank, Lockport, 3 altered from ones—vignette, female sitting holding a large figure 1.

The Pioneers of Rochester and vicinity held a festival in that city on the 12th ult., at which a Committee was appointed to report a plan for the permanent organization of a Historical Society for Western New York. William Wood, Esq., of Canandaigua, is having prepared a gold medal for the next annual festival, to be worn by the eldest of the Pioneers; and at his death to be presented to the then eldest, and to take that direction as long as any of the Pioneers remain.

The income of the State of Vermont for the year ending Aug. 31, appears to have been short of the disbursements. The total income, including the balance in the Treasury from the previous year, was $94,076, while the disbursements were $95,417. The State made a loan of $5,000 with the Bank of Brattleboro' to supply the deficiency. The total State liabilities on the 1st September were $48,107, and its resources $48,584.

Hon. Dixon H. Lewis, U. S. Senator from Alabama, who had been suffering for some days from an affection of the kidneys, died at the National Hotel in this city, Oct. 25th, at five minutes past 12. He was in full possession of his reason to the last moment. He had served but one session of his six years for which he was elected, his term expiring on the 4th of March, 1853.

A great fire occurred at Alexandria, Red River, on the 18th ult. No less than six squares, all stores and back dwellings, with the Republican office, were destroyed. The loss was estimated at half a million dollars.

A company in Cincinnati are about to set up an ice factory. By a recent chemical discovery they can make the purest crystal ice in the warmest weather, and will furnish it at the low price of one dollar per ton.

Eli Wolfner and David Barnes were arrested at Pittsburg on Thursday last for passing counterfeit money of the following description: $3 Agricultural Bank of Herkimer, N. Y. Vignette, an Indian Queen in an ornamented circle.

There is how in operation at Oswego, fifteen flouring mills, having in the aggregate eighty run of stone, capable of turning out 8000 bbls. of flour, or grinding 32,000 bush. wheat per day.

The meeting at the Tabernacle last week, to raise money for the purchase of the Edmondson girls, resulted in obtaining $1,672, leaving $328 to be raised to make up the $2000.

The newspapers and public authorities of the State of Arkansas are making great efforts to direct the tide of emigration to that region. These seem to have been in a measure successful, for the Helena Shield remarks that within the last twelve months, the influx of population has been greater than any previous year.

The Governor of New Jersey has issued his proclamation appointing Thursday, the 23d of November, to be observed as a day of public thanksgiving and praise.

TO MY FATHER.

BY MRS. E. C. JUDSON.

A welcome for thy child, father,
A welcome give to-day;
Although she may not come to thee,
As when she went away;
Though never in her olden nest
Is she to fold her wing,
And live again the days when first
She learned to fly and sing.

Oh, happy were those days, father,
When gathering round thy knee,
Seven sons and daughters called thee sire;—
We come again but three;
The grave has claimed thy loveliest ones,
And sterner things than death
Have left a shadow on thy brow,
A sigh upon thy breath.

And one—one of the three, father,
Now comes to thee to claim
Thy blessing on another lot,
Upon another name.
Where tropic suns forever burn,
Far over land and wave,
The child whom thou hast loved would make
Her hearth-stone and her grave.

Thou'lt never wait again, father,
Thy daughter's coming tread;
She ne'er will see thy face on earth—
So count her with thy dead;
But in the land of life and love,
Not sorrowing as now,
She'll come to thee, and come, perchance,
With jewels on her brow.

Perchance—I do not know, father,
If any part be given
My erring hand, among the guides
Who point the way to heaven;
But it would be a joy untold
Some erring foot to stay—
Remember this, when gathered round,
Ye for the exile pray.

Let nothing here be changed father,
I would remember all,
Where every ray of sunshine rests,
And where the shadows fall.
And now I go: with faltering foot
I pass the threshhold o'er,
And gaze, through tears, on that dear roof,
My shelter nevermore.

A FEMALE LEDYARD IN PERSIA.

Correspondence of the New York Observer.

OROOMIAH, Persia, Aug. 3, 1848.

A few evenings ago a knock at the door of our mission premises was soon followed by the quick step of a native, who came to Dr. Wright with the statement that there stood in the street a woman, who knew no language, and was entirely unattended, except by a Koordish muleteer. A moment afterward another native came with the additional statement, "the lady is dressed in English clothes, and says, in your language, will you give me a little water?"

Dr. Wright, whose curiosity and astonishment could hardly be otherwise than highly excited by the announcement of a lady in European costume, speaking English, in the street at night, and unattended in this remote and barbarous land, where the appearance of a European man is a thing of very rare occurrence, soon had ocular proof of what his ears were so reluctant to admit—a bona fide European lady standing before him, having a letter to Mr. Stocking from an acquaintance of his at Mosul, which introduced us to Madame Pfeiffer, of Vienna, who had performed the circuit of the world, thus far, alone, and was now hastening toward her home.

Who, then, is Madame Pfeiffer? She is a German lady, fifty years old, of great intelligence and most perfect accomplishments, and to appearance thoroughly sane on every subject unless it be her style of traveling, which is at least somewhat peculiar.

Madame Pfeiffer, leaving her husband and her two sons, (one of them an officer of Government and the other an artist,) about two years ago started on her tour around the world. An aged gentleman of her acquaintance accompanied her for some time, but finding that she was obliged to protect him instead of his protecting her, she left him and proceeded alone.

From Europe Madame Pfeiffer went to Brazil, where she admired the brilliant flowers and the magnificent forests more than almost anything else that she has seen, and where she came very near being murdered by a black ruffian, who attempted to rob her. She still carries scars of the wounds then received, but states, with evident satisfaction, that she had cut off three of his fingers in self-defense, when several persons providentially came to her rescue.

She had intended to cross the continent, from Rio to the Pacific Ocean; but finding things in too disordered a state to admit of it, she took passage in a sailing vessel at Rio, in which she doubled Cape Horn and went to Chili; and after a short stay at Valparaiso, she took passage in another vessel for Tahiti, where she made an agreeable visit, among the mementos of which she has Queen Pomare's autograph.

From Tahiti our heroine traveler proceeded to China, where she visited several of the points most accessible to foreigners, mingling socially with the missionaries there, whom she mentions familiary by name, Dr. Bridgeman, Dr. Ball, Mr. Gutzlaff, &c., the autograph of the last named she has in Chinese. One of the strongest impressions which she seems to have brought from the "Celestial Empire," is the imminent insecurity of foreigners at Canton.

From China, Madame Pfeiffer went to Calcutta; and from that city traveled overland, across British India, to Bombay, passing through a great variety of incidents and adventures on the way, and holding much pleasant intercourse with Protestant missionaries, (though herself born and educated a Catholic,) at various stations and of different nations.

From Bombay Madame P. went in a steamer to Bussorah; thence in another steamer to Bagdad; and from Bagdad she traveled in company with a caravan up to Mosul, as a memento of which place she has a sculptured figure of the human head, taken from the ruins of ancient Nineveh. From Mosul she crossed the formidable Koordish mountains to Oroomiah, a caravan journey of twelve days, (but protracted in her case, by tedious delays, to twenty days,) in company with a Koordish muleteer, on a route of greater exposure, humanly speaking, than any other she has traveled, during her circuit of the world.

After a visit of one day with us, Madame P. hastened on toward Tabreez, intending to go up thence, through Georgia to Tiflis, and thence across the Caucasus, through European Russia, to Vienna, hoping to reach her home about the first of November.

The adventurous circumstances of Madame P., during many parts of her tour, invest it with the most romantic and thrilling interest. Think, for instance, in her passage across the wild Koordish mountains, of a savage Koord, pointing to the tassel of the Turkish fez (cap) she wore, to which he took a fancy, and demanding it of her by the significant gesture of drawing his hand across his throat—meaning, of course, "give me the tassel as you value your head;" and she in turn repelling the demand by gestures, unable to speak to him a word orally, in any language he could understand. Through many such adventures she made her way safely to Oroomiah, carrying about her person a large sum of money, (by accidental necessity rather than choice,) over the wild regions of Koordistan, in a manner which seems to us truly marvelous. Her practical motto is, "Never betray a fear;" and to her strict adherence to that, she expresses herself as greatly indebted for her success in traveling.

On the road Madame P. in these regions wears the large veil, concealing most of the person, which is commonly worn here by native females when they go abroad, and rides astride, as they also ride, but her other garments, (with the exception of the Turkish cap above named) are sufficiently European in appearance to distinguish her from the natives. Her language, on the way, in these lands, is wholly the language of signs, dictated by necessity, and which she seems often to have made very expressive. On the last day's ride, before reaching Oroomiah, for instance, the stage being two ordinary stages, and the muleteer at one time proposing to halt till the next day, she would rest her head upon her hand, as emblematical of sleep, and repeat Oroomiah; and when the muleteer, from regard to his tired horses, still insisted on halting, she added tears to her gestures; and the obstinate Koord's heart, according to his own statement, was then irresistibly subdued—so much so that he went promptly and cheerfully.

Her helplessness and dependence, on well known principles, did much, doubtless, at once to win for her kindness, among the bloody Koords, and ward off danger. Madame P. has, however, intrinsic elements of a good traveler. Though she had ridden on the day she reached Oroomiah, almost incessantly, from 1 o'clock A. M. till 8 o'clock P. M., at the wearisome rate of a caravan, over a very dry, hot, dusty region, a distance of nearly sixty miles, still on her arrival she seemed little tired—was buoyant and cheerful as a lark, (which is probably her habitual temperament) and was quite ready, the next day, (the only day she stopped with us,) to take a pleasure ride on Mt. Seir.

Madame P. occupies but a single horse on her journey; her small trunk being slung on one side of the animal, and her scanty bed on the other, and she riding between them. Her fare on the road, moreover, is extremely simple—consisting of little more than bread and milk—a regimen not more convenient to the traveler on the score of economy, than conducive, as she says, to her health, and certainly to her security. To those who may be curious in regard to the expenses of her tour round the world, I may repeat her statement, that she had expended, when here, just about one thousand dollars.

A passion for travel is the ruling motive that carries Madame P. so cheerfully and courageously through her manifold hardships and perils. She, however, has minor objects, makes large collections of insects and flowers. She is already an author of some celebrity, having published a work on Iceland, and another on Syria and the Holy Land, the fruits of her early travel; and the copious notes and observations which she is making, during her tour round the globe, will of course, in due time, be given to the world. "A small affair," she pertinently remarked, "would it have been for me to sail around the world, as many have done; it is my land journeys that render my tour a great undertaking, and invest it with interest.

Madame P. expressed her purpose, after visiting home and resting awhile, of taking North America in her next tour. Possibly this female Ledyard may meet with some in our native land, under whose eyes this notice may all; if so, we bespeak for her their kind offices, and pledge them, in return, a rare entertainment in making her acquaintance. Truly yours,

J. PERKINS.

MORAVIAN FUNERAL.

I once attended a funeral in a remote village of Moravians. It was in the depth of summer. Every little garden put forth beauty, and every tree was heavy with fresh, cool verdure.

It was a Sabbath afternoon, when a dead infant was brought into the church. The children of the small congregation wished to sit near it, and fixed their eyes upon its placid brow, as upon a fair piece of sculpture. The sermon of the clergyman was to them. It was a paternal address, humbling itself to their simplicity, yet lofty, through the deep, sonorous tones of their native German. Earnestly and tenderly they listened, as he told them how the baby went from its mother's arms to those of the compassionate Redeemer. When the worship closed, and the procession formed, the children, two and two, followed the mourners, leading each other by the hand, the little girls clothed in white.

The place of slumber for the dead was near the church, where they had heard of Jesus. It was a green, beautiful knoll, on which the sun, drawing toward the West, lingered with a smile of blessing. The turf had the richness of velvet, not a weed or a straw defaced it. Every swelling mound was planted with flowers, and a kind of aromatic thyme, thickly clustering, and almost shutting over the small, horizontal tombstones, which recorded only the name and date of the deceased. In such a spot, so sweet, so lowly, so secluded, the clay might willingly wait its reunion with the spirit.

Before the corpse, walked the young men of the village, bearing instruments of music. They paused at the gate of the place of burial. Then a strain from voice and flute rose, subdued and tremulous, like the strings of the wind-harp. It seemed as if a timid, yet prevailing suppliant, sought admission to the ancient city of the dead.

The gate unclosed. As they slowly wound around the gentle ascent, to the open grave, the pastor, with solemn intonation, repeated passages from the Book of God. Thrilling, beyond expression, amid the silence of the living, and the slumber of the dead, were the blessed words of our Savior, "I am the resurrection and the life."

He ceased, and all gathered round the brink of the pit. The little ones drew near, and looked downwards into its depths, sadly but without fear. Then came a burst of music, swelling higher and higher, till it seemed no longer of earth. Methought it was the welcome in heaven, to the innocent spirit, the joy of angels over a new immortal, that had never sinned. Wrapped, as it were, in that glorious melody, the little body was let down into its narrow cell. And all grief, even the parent's grief, was swallowed up in that high triumphant strain. Devotion was there, giving back what it loved, to the God of love, not with tears, but with music. Faith was there, standing among flowers, and restoring a bud to the Giver, that it might bloom in a garden which could never fade.

MANUFACTURE OF MARBLES.

Mr. Chambers, in a recent account of a summer tour in Germany, gives a description of marble making in Salzburg, an ancient town most romantically situated in a vale of the Salza, in Germany; after speaking of the machinery for sawing marble blocks for statues, columns, &c., carried by a stream which dashes from a very lofty Alpine height, he says:

At a little distance, and higher up the hill, within the recess of a most picturesque ravine, we were shown a novel and curious operation; this was the making of boy's marbles, and a more simple process can hardly be conceived. Small pieces of marble being put into a peculiar stone trough or dish, a top of the same material fitting into certain grooves, is made to whirl about by little streamlets led from the main torrent, and the marbles are soon found in a spherical form. There were about twenty of these little spluttering mills, one above another on the stream, so that the little scene was busy and amusing. At a glance we were let into the secret of cheap pebble grinding in Germany. No expense whatever had been incurred in constructing the mills; the apparatus was of the homeliest kind; the sluices on the impetuous streamlets were each nothing more than a turf; the raw material came out of the hill-side; and the superintendant of the works was a female, who probably considered herself well off at the remuneration of two pence per day. From this primitive manufactory, boys' marbles are sent in vast numbers all over the world.

THE DISCOVERY OF HERCULANEUM.

In noticing the wells of ancient Italy, we may refer to a circumstance, which, although trivial in itself, led to the most surprising discovery that has ever taken place on this globe, and one which, in the interest it has excited, is unexampled. In the early part of the eighteenth century, 1711, an Italian peasant, while digging a well near his cottage, found some fragments of colored marble. These attracting attention, led to farther excavation, when a statute of Hercules was disinterred, and shortly afterward a mutilated one of Cleopatra. These specimens of ancient art were found at a considerable depth below the surface, and in a place which subsequently proved to be a temple situated in the center of the ancient City of Herculaneum! This city was overwhelmed with ashes and lava, during an eruption of Vesuvius, A. D. 79, being the same in which the elder Pliny perished, who was suffocated with sulphurous vapors, like Lot's wife in a similar calamity. Herculaneum therefore had been buried 1630 years! and while every memorial of it was lost, and even the site unknown, it was thus suddenly, by a resurrection then unparalleled in the annals of the world, brought again to light; and streets, temples, houses, statues, paintings, jewelry, professional implements, kitchen utensils, and other articles connected with ancient domestic life, were to be seen arranged, as when their owners were actively moving among them. Even the skeletons of some of the inhabitants were found; one, near the threshold of his door, with a bag of money in his hand, and apparently in the act of escaping.

The light which this important discovery reflected upon numerous subjects connected with the ancients, has greatly eclipsed all previous sources of information; and as regards some of the arts of the Romans, the information thus obtained may be considered almost as full and satisfactory as if one of their mechanics had risen from the dead and described them.

Among the early discoveries made in this City of Hercules, (it having been founded by, or in honor of him, 1250, B. C.,) not the least interesting is one of its public wells; which, having been covered by an arch and surrounded by a curb, the ashes were excluded. This well was found in a high state of preservation—it still contains excellent water, and is in the same condition as when the last females retired from it, bearing vases of its water to their dwellings, and probably on the evening that preceded the calamity which drove them from it for ever.

ADDRESS TO THE COLORED PEOPLE.

Frederick Douglass, Chairman of a Committee appointed by a Convention of colored people at Cleveland, has published an Address to his race replete with sound sense, and well calculated to promote their welfare and happiness. The following is an extract from his Address:—

"Every blow of the sledge-hammer, wielded by a sable arm, is a powerful blow in support of our cause. Every colored mechanic, is by virtue of circumstances, an elevator of his race. Every house built by black men, is a strong tower against the allied hosts of prejudice. It is impossible for us to attach too much importance to this aspect of the subject. Trades are important. Wherever a man may be thrown by misfortune, if he has in his hands a useful trade, he is useful to his fellow-man, and will be esteemed accordingly; and of all men in the world who need trades, we are the most needy.

"Understand this, that independence is an essential condition of respectability. To be dependent, is to be degraded. Men may indeed pity us, but they cannot respect us. We do not mean that we can become entirely independent of all men; that would be absurd and impossible, in the social state. But we mean that we must become equally independent with other members of the community. That other members of the community shall be as dependent upon us as we upon them. That such is not now the case, is too plain to need an argument.

"Let us entreat you to turn your attention to agriculture. Go to farming. Be tillers of the soil. On this point we could say much, but the time and space will not permit. Our cities are overrun with menial laborers, while the country is eloquently pleading for the hand of industry to till her soil, and reap the reward of honest labor. We beg and entreat you to save your money—live economically—dispense with finery, and the gaities which have rendered us proverbial, and save your money. Not for the senseless purpose of being better off than your neighbor, but that you may be able to educate your children, and render your share to the common stock of prosperity and happiness around you. It is plain that the equality which we aim to accomplish, can only be achieved by us, when we can do for others just what others can do for us. We should, therefore, press into all the trades, professions, and callings, into which honorable white men press."

POST OFFICE IN OLDEN TIME.—Mr. Cist, in a letter from Washington City, published in his Advertiser, says:—

"I was shown by the chief clerk in the interior department of the Post Office, the first ledger opened by the United States, during the administration of Dr. Franklin, the first Postmaster General in the service. It is a blank book of some three or four quires, very little superior to an every-day blotter of the present age, but sufficed to hold all the post office accounts three or four years from the establishment of the office, June 19, 1775. I observe Dr. Franklin charges himself with one year's salary from that date—$1,000. It serves to give a forcible impression of the progress of this department since that; all the entries are made in his own writing, while at this time there are over one hundred and twenty persons employed in various capacities in this department."

THE SELF-LAMPLIGHTER.—What won't ingenuity accomplish? Here we have an invention by which lamps or candles may be lighted at any moment of time by a clock or a pull of a cord. If attached to an alarm-clock, a light may be produced at any hour. In cases where people wish to rise at a certain unusual time of night, all that is to be done is to set the clock and make the connection of the Lamplighter "all right," and then, when the hour comes round, you have a lamp already lighted at the same time. Certainly very convenient. When not desired to be connected with a clock, it can be attached to a cord, terminating in some place near the bed, like a bell-pull, so that it is only necessary to pull the cord to produce a light previous to rising. It is designed, also, to be so attached to the bell-handle of a front-door, that pulling the bell instantly makes a light to see by in the hall, or any other part of the house. The inventor is Mr. Alexander Bennett of New York.

VARIETY.

"In Germany every child is taught to use its voice while young. In their schools all join in singing as a regular exercise, as much as they attend to the study of geography; and in their churches the singing is not confined to a choir, who sit apart from the others, perhaps in one corner of the house, but there is a vast tide of incense going forth to God from every heart that can give utterance to this language from the soul! Children, sing! yes sing with your whole heart! When angry feelings rise, curb and check them, by singing sweet and cheerful songs."

The Vermont Mercury gives an account of a man by the name of Gage, foreman of the railroad in Cavendish, truly wonderful. While preparing a charge for blasting a rock, he had an iron bar, an inch and a quarter in diameter, and three feet seven inches in length, driven through his head, entering the cheek and passing out at the top of the head, through skull and brains, with a force that carried the bar some rods. And the patient not only still survives, but is on the mend. The wound in his head has healed, and he is likely to be out again without any injury but the loss of an eye.

A graduate of Cambridge gave another the lie, and a challenge followed. The mathematical tutor of this college, the late Mr. V——, heard of the dispute, and sent for the youth, who told him he must fight. "Why?" said the mathematician. "He gave me the lie." "Very well, let him prove it; if he proves it, you do lie; and if he does not prove it, he lies. Why should you shoot one another? Let him prove it."

The library of John Adams, the elder, bequeathed to the town of Quincy by the second President just before his death, is to be removed from the old family mansion to the Town Hall, under the direction of his grandson, C. F. Adams. This library is partly made up of French, German, and Italian works, and of itself is one of the most valuable in the country. As the gift of John Adams, it becomes doubly valuable to the town and people.

The following short sentence of advice, by William Penn, should be kept in mind by all young persons who are thinking of committing matrimony:—"Never marry but for love, and see that thou love what is lovely."

A quaint but witty old English writer, speaking of dull men who affect to be very grave, says:—"they do wisely to counterfeit a reservedness, and keep their chests always locked, not for fear anybody should steal treasures from thence, but lest some should look in and see there is nothing in them!"

The great vine at Hampton Court Palace though more than 120 years old, is now laden with more than 2000 bunches of grapes, estimated to weigh altogether nearly a ton.

There is now in bloom, in the garden of Drummond Castle, Perthshire, Scotland, a splendid American Aloe, with a stem thirty feet high, supporting 2800 flowers.

In Tariffville, Ct, on Friday, Mrs. John Fulton, being seized with a fit, fell across a water pail, and her neck resting on the edge of the pail, she was thus strangled to death.

Four thousand pauper boys and girls will this year be sent to Australia from Ireland, and ten thousand from England.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., }
IRA SAYLES, A. M., } Principals.

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULATIONS.

1. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2. Punctuality in attending all regular Academic exercises will be required.

3. The use of Tobacco, for chewing or smoking, will not be allowed either in or about the Academic buildings.

4. Playing at games of chance cannot be allowed.

5. Using profane language cannot be allowed.

6. The use of any kind of intoxicating drinks cannot be allowed, unless prescribed in case of sickness, by a regular physician.

7. Passing from room to room by students, during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, cannot be permitted.

8. Gentlemen and ladies of the Institution will not be permitted to visit the rooms of the opposite sex, except in cases of imperious necessity, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

9. Good order must be maintained at all times, and in all the rooms and halls of the Institution, and in all the intercourse of students with each other.

10. All students are required to retire regularly at the ringing of the bell designated for that purpose, as occasion may require; and to rise at the ringing of the morning bell, also designated.

11. Any room, occupied by students, will, at all times, be subject to the visitation of the Teachers of the Institution, who are required to see that the regulations are complied with.

12. Students will be required to keep their own rooms in good order, and to pay all unnecessary damages, either of rooms or of furniture furnished with the rooms.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

GOVERNMENT.

The Government of the students will be in the hands of the Principals, and will be strictly and steadily exercised, and at the same time, strictly parental. The object of our academic government being to secure the greatest possible amount of physical, intellectual, and moral good to the students themselves, regularity and order of exercises, and good and wholesome citizens to society. No unwarrantable means will be made use of to enforce the observance of the above regulations; yet our constant endeavor will be, to make the means resorted to as effective as human means may be.

Parents who place their children in this Institution, and all students who are sufficiently old to understand the necessity of order, cannot be too well assured that the foregoing regulations form the most essential part of the contract between them and us; and that whatever student wantonly violates them, and shows himself incorrigibly determined on pursuing his waywardness, will be expelled from the privileges of the Institution, and will not be permitted to re-enter it again, without special proof of reformation. Nor will an expelled student have any deduction made from full term charges.

Farther, parents are requested not to place money for expenses, in the hands of students who are not old enough to use money with discretion and economy. Either of the Principals, or the Book-keeper of the Institution, will act as fiscal guardian of such students without charge.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

EXPENSES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Board, per term, | from $14 50 to $18 | 00 |
| Room-rent, | | 1 50 |
| Washing, | | 2 50 |
| Fuel, | spring and fall, 75 cents, winter, | 1 50 |
| Tuition, | from $3 50 to | 5 00 |
| Lights, | | 1 50 |
| Incidental Expenses, | | 25 |
| EXTRAS—Music on the Piano Forte, | | 10 00 |
| Oil Painting, | | 7 00 |
| Drawing, | | 2 00 |

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition (except the extras above mentioned) need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall, should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchange and losses.

The Sabbath Recorder.

THE SABBATH ENFORCED BY CHRIST.

From Begg's Treatise on the Sabbath.

SECTION IX.—The observance of the Sabbath enforced by the example and precepts of Christ. [Continued.

Following up the history, we are immediately told, without the record of a single incident intervening, "It came to pass also on another Sabbath, that He entered into the synagogue and taught; and there was a man whose right hand was withered. And the Scribes and Pharisees watched Him, whether He would heal on the Sabbath day, that they might find accusation against Him; but He knew their thoughts, and said to the man which had the withered hand, Rise up and stand forth in the midst. And he arose and stood forth. Then said Jesus unto them, I will ask you one thing, Is it lawful on the Sabbath days to do good or to do evil?—to save life or to destroy it? And, looking round about upon them all, He said unto the man, Stretch forth thy hand. And he did so; and his hand was restored whole as the other. And they were filled with madness; and communed one with another what they might do to Jesus." Luke 6: 6—11. Mark 3: 1—6.

It is most instructive thus to read the nature of the Saviour's replies to the charges brought against Him by men who knew so little of the Lord's design in His gift of the weekly Sabbath—who imagined, that in their abstaining from their occupations on the sanctified day, they were giving something to God, instead of seeing it as His blessed gift to them. The Saviour, found regularly in the synagogue teaching on the Sabbath, a man appears before Him with a withered hand. Already stung by His vindication of the disciples on a principle which could not be gainsaid without casting reflection on David, their honored Prophet-king, and Abiather, the faithful High-priest of God, the Scribes and Pharisees now watched that they might find what they judged would be good ground of accusation. The Saviour, after one withering question—"Is it lawful on the Sabbath days to do good or to do evil? to save life or to destroy it?"—restored the man's hand whole as the other.

Now here again there is no question between Christ and the Scribes, nor between Him and the Pharisees, as to whether or not the Sabbath should be observed. The question is solely, Whether its sacredness is infringed by such acts of mercy to men. The healing in this case was the occasion of their being filled with madness, although it certainly was an action which must have commended itself as Sabbath work to the consciences of any but those whose sole object was "that they might find accusation against Him."

In the corresponding Gospel it is stated that "they asked Him, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath days? that they might accuse Him. And He said unto them, What man shall there be among you, that shall have one sheep, and if it fall into a pit on the Sabbath day, will he not lay hold on it and lift it out? How much then is a man better than a sheep? Wherefore it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days." Matt. 12: 10—12. In this we have an extended application of the principle He had already laid down upon the subject in regard to the case of David and his followers. But as the illustration is now taken from their own practice, the appeal to their consciences is even still more direct. The argument of the Lord is, If they could render assistance to their cattle in situations of helplessness and distress, without profanation of the hallowed day, His healing of the man in such circumstances of helplessness, could be no sin; and it is an argument which in no way interferes with the continued obligation of its sacred character. But when our Lord thus affirms, that "it is lawful to do well on the Sabbath days," it is plainly implied that it would still be sin to do works of a different nature. It was still lawful to heal on the Sabbath, as it had always been; but the works which were before unlawful, remained unlawful still. It is, and it always was, thus "lawful to do well on the Sabbath days."

The next text which I quote, applies to our present question only in this, that it continues to set before us the "custom" of Christ, that He taught in the synagogues on the Sabbath day. "And He went out from thence, and came unto His own country; and His disciples followed Him. And when the Sabbath day was come, He began to teach in the synagogue, and many hearing Him were astonished, saying, From whence hath this man these things? and what wisdom is this, which is given unto Him, that even such mighty works are wrought by His hands." Mark 6: 1, 2. "When the Sabbath day was come, He began to teach in the synagogue." Not only are we advancing in the history of the Saviour's life and ministry, without finding one single word said by Him to imply that the seventh day, appointed by God as the Sabbath, was now or soon to be disregarded; but we have seen that every statement He makes is calculated to fix more deeply upon the minds of His disciples, that while He would divest them of all false notions concerning it, that nevertheless it still remains the day hallowed of the Lord.

But, as I have already noticed at the outset, if the Sabbath, though it continued till the death and till the resurrection of Christ, was then changed—although Christ gave no intimation of any contemplated alteration—if the fact was, as we are accustomed to repeat, and to hear repeated, unceasingly from the cradle to the grave, that "from the resurrection of Christ till the end of the world the first day of the week is the Christian Sabbath," how comes it that all the Evangelists thus writing the history of their Lord's "custom" so long after His resurrection, never once introduce a single remark of explanation relative to such a change? How is it that, instead of telling that the first day of the week had now taken the place of the Sabbath which their master and they themselves His disciples thus then observed, they continue still at every page yet to call the seventh day "the Sabbath day?" It could not surely be, that such a change had taken place without their knowing it—still less could it be, that writing under the guidance of the Spirit of God, long after the supposed change, they should call that day "the Sabbath" which, if the practice of the Church now were correct, had given place unto another day—as it is asserted that before that time when the gospels were written it had.

The continual acts of mercy which our Lord performed on the Sabbath, (and of the number of those recorded it is remarkable how great the proportion is of Sabbath cures, although admitting of explanation from the circumstance of His Sabbath miracles being thus challenged,) bring out the envy and hypocrisy of those by whom He was accused for His benevolence. They also afford us examples of the true nature of Sabbath sanctification, and furnish abundant evidence that the idea of the Sabbath having then lost, or that it would at any future time lose, its authority and place as the day hallowed of the Lord, has no countenance from the actions of the Saviour or the language of His Evangelists.

Again, "He was teaching in one of the synagogues on the Sabbath; and behold there was a woman which had a spirit of infirmity eighteen years, and was bowed together, and could in no wise lift up herself. And when Jesus saw her, He called her to Him, and said unto her, Woman, thou art loosed from thine infirmity. And He laid His hands on her; and immediately she was made straight, and glorified God. And the ruler of the synagogue answered with indignation, because that Jesus had healed on the Sabbath day, and said unto the people, There are six days in which men ought to work; in them therefore come and be healed, and not on the Sabbath day." Luke 13: 11—14. The rulers of the Jews, finding that nothing was gained by direct charge against Him who had already, by the wisdom of His answers to their quibbles, so often foiled them in their attempts at catching Him, now try the power of their authority and influence with the people. Here a miracle was undeniably performed; and the very fact ought to have silenced the gainsayer; and at least, had this ruler of the synagogue been at all standing in the light of God, he would have looked with other feelings than those of indignation upon the cure of one who had so long been kept in such a helpless state. But he was ignorant that what the law of the merciful God forbids, is, the doing our own work and thinking our own thoughts on His hallowed day; and there was little entering either into sympathy with the affliction of his brethren, or of communion with the mind of God, when he could thus unfeelingly forbid any to come for healing to the Lord of the Sabbath on the Sabbath day; and the reproof he received was severe as it was just—"The Lord then answered him and said, Thou hypocrite, doth not each one of you on the Sabbath loose his ox or his ass from the stall, and lead him away to watering? and ought not this woman, being a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo, these eighteen years, be loosed from this bond on the Sabbath day? And when He had said these things, all His adversaries were ashamed; and all the people rejoiced for all the glorious things that were done by Him." Ver. 15—17.

The Saviour's answer commended itself to the hearts of all who were not merely seeking occasion to find fault; and the force of the reproof was felt even by those who were eager for His fall. But what is Christ's vindication? Is it that the Sabbath had ceased to be obligatory, and that men were now at liberty to do as they list with regard to it? No, the Saviour still rests His defense entirely upon the nature of the work He wrought—that it was wholly a work of righteousness, a work of mercy, He performed. While He reproves the deep hypocrisy of the ruler of the synagogue, in quoting the commandment which forbids men to work on the Sabbath, it is not by saying any thing derogatory of the commandment of God quoted against Him—it is not by saying that the authority of the commandment had expired, or was approaching a fall or a change. The appeal which He makes is to a principle at all times, previously as well as since, obligatory, the duty of ministering to the relief of the afflicted on the Sabbath as well as other days. And this He illustrates and enforces by a reference to what they themselves did in loosing their own cattle from the stall, and leading them to water on the hallowed day.

Although thus ashamed and silenced, their envy is not removed; and as another opportunity presents, in His speedy performance of another cure, this feeling is made apparent. For, in the very next chapter, we read that "it came to pass, as He went into the house of one of the chief Pharisees to eat bread on the Sabbath day, that they watched Him; and behold there was a certain man before Him which had the dropsy. And Jesus, answering, spake unto the lawyers and Pharisees, saying, Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath day? And they held their peace. And He took him and healed him, and let him go, and answered them, saying, Which of you shall have an ass or an ox fallen into a pit, and will not straightway pull him out on the Sabbath day? And they could not answer Him again to these things." Luke 14: 1—6.

While the Saviour anticipates and replies to that which they felt in their hearts, by showing that it is lawful to heal on the Sabbath day, still He throws no discredit on its continuance as God's ordinance. He is not intending to do so, and therefore appeals to themselves as to the legality of what He is about to do, and by their silence they tacitly admit its legality. In the healing of the man of dropsy, He was claiming no power to dispense with the authority under which the Sabbath was hallowed; He was only doing that which its sacredness permitted, and in that respect was but acting on the principle universally allowed and acted upon by themselves—for as it was acknowledged to be right to take the ox or the ass from the pit into which it might have fallen, so in like manner was it lawful to cure a man of the disease under which he labored; for authoritatively He declares, "It is lawful to heal on the Sabbath day."

This is not, however, the giving of a new law, but the recalling to remembrance and practically applying the authority of the law of God already acknowledged. It is an appeal to their consciences, a submitting to their own decision, upon the principles of that law which they professed to regard as the rule of their conduct, the rightness of His actings in the cause of suffering humanity. Nor was the appeal in vain, for "they held their peace." With all their desire to convict Him, as one setting at nought their conditions, they had a perfect consciousness that His sympathy for the sufferings of our race, and the relief He extended, were in no wise inconsistent with the righteousness and requirements of God's law, "and they could not answer Him again to these things."

TO-DAY AND TO-MORROW.

To-day, man lives in pleasure, wealth, and pride,
To-morrow, poor, of life itself denied.
To-day, lays plans for many years to come,
To-morrow, sinks into the silent tomb.
To-day, his food is dressed in dainty forms,
To-morrow, is a feast himself for worms.
To-day, he's clad in gaudy, rich array,
To-morrow, shrouded for a bed of clay.
To-day, he has delusive dreams of heaven,
To-morrow, cries, "Too late to be forgiven!"
To-day, he lives on hope as light as air,
To-morrow, dies in anguish and despair.

THE SABBATH QUESTION.

DEAR BR. GROSVENOR:—In the Contributor, Aug. 9, your correspondent, H. Hawes, concerning the observance of the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath, observes—"For one, I am prepared to say, that I have been taught by man to observe the first instead of the seventh. But whence is this? Who hath authorized thus to teach?" and again, "Perhaps you have (as I heretofore have) thought that it was immaterial what day, if a seventh part of onr time was kept." I shall take it for granted that your correspondent has no difficulty in relation to the moral and perpetual obligation to sanctify the Sabbath, as God originally commanded, but simply—"Who hath authorized us to neglect the keeping of that day which was embraced in the fourth commandment, when that command was given?" "What passage of Scripture can you cite to me, where I may find an order or permission, authorizing the change which has been made?" Waving, for the present, all remarks upon your correspondent's phraseology, I submit the following observations to his consideration.

1. That there is a similar reason for the appointment of the first, as there was for the seventh. The reason assigned for the appointment of the seventh was God's resting from the work of creation. Let your correspondent remember that Christ's kingdom was a new spiritual kingdom, and he will find that there was a most cogent and affecting reason for the appointment of the first day. It was the day when Christ arose from the dead. The Son of God rested from the stupendous work of human redemption—a greater work than the creation of all worlds. When God created the material world, with all its furniture and appendages, "He spake, and it was done; He commanded, and it stood fast." But before man could be restored to the image and favor of God, God must be manifest in the flesh—"a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief," poverty, disgrace, a life of pain, finished with the most shameful, tragical death. But he conquered, when he fell. He entered the lists with the "strong man armed," and wrested the keys of death and hell out of the hands of him who held fallen man in bondage. His victory was splendid, complete, glorious and eternal: he followed up one defeat after another, until he turned the empire of Satan into a shapeless ruin; assaulted his citadel; demolished his metropolis, and came marching back, "from Eden, with dyed garments from Bozrah;"—with all the insignia of an Almighty Conqueror: traveling in the greatness of his strength; speaking in righteousness; mighty to save. In view of this, well might the apostle say, (in a passage to which our attention shall be turned by and by,) "For he that is entered into His rest, hath ceased from his own work, as God did from His."

2. The Lord Jesus hath honored, distinguished, and sanctified, the first day of the week by putting his surname upon it. "I was in the spirit on the Lord's day." It is a pitiful quibble to object—"Every day is the Lord's." It might be said every meal we eat is the Lord's; yes, indeed, "The earth is the Lord's, and the fullness thereof." But every refreshment, every supper, is not "the Lord's Supper;" in the definite, peculiar sense, in which the communion of the Lord's Supper is. No doubt, this day is declared emphatically to be the Lord's day; because it was a certain determinate day; and it is spoken of in such a manner as shows it to have been perfectly understood, in distinction from all other days, as well known among Christians by that name. Besides, "as the first day of the week," being the day of our Lord's resurrection, and the day on which his disciples assembled together for his worship, and the observance of his institutions, affords an impressive reason for its being so designated in distinction from all other days. There seems to be no reason to doubt, that the first day of the week obtained the denomination of "Lord's day," by its own express appointment and authority; because none could have authority, independent of his direction, to put his name upon any day as a distinctive name; and the apostle's calling it "the Lord's day," by the inspiration of the Spirit, no doubt it was his pleasure that it should be so called: and by consequence, it was his will that this day should be used and observed as an "holy day" unto himself. As an ordinance, is called the "Lord's Supper," because it was appointed by him in memory of his death, so the "first day of the week" is called "the Lord's day," because appointed by him, in memory of his resurrection; and its being so appointed virtually sets aside the former day, so that no other day is to be observed as the Christian Sabbath.

3. The appointment of the first day of the week to be the Sabbath, may be learned from 1 Cor. xvi. 1, 2. "Now, concerning the collection for the saints, as I have given orders to the churches of Galatia, even so do ye. Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store, as God hath prospered him." The apostle having, by divine authority, given orders to the churches of Galatia and Corinth, and, by consequence, to the other churches among the Gentiles, for collection on "the first day of the week, as God had prospered" them on other days, this being Sabbath Day's work, I infer that he had also from the Lord given orders for the observance of the "first day of the week," as the Christian Sabbath.

4. We read, also, of "the disciples being assembled together on the first day of the week," and that "Jesus came among them;" and that eight days (the eighth day) after, they met him again, which was another first day.

Once more. Observe, it was the constant practice of the disciples of Christ to meet together to worship him and observe his institutions on the first day of the week: "And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread, Paul preached unto them." Paul had been with them at Traos seven days, and yet we read of no convocation, except on the first day of the week, the last of his visit. It was not on the Jewish Sabbath, the last day of the week, that the solemn assembly for worship was held, but on the first day; which, had it not been the Sabbath of divine appointment, and of obligation upon Christians, it would, obviously, have been most inconvenient for Paul to have spent in religious exercise until midnight, when the next morning he was to take his journey. "Pray ye that your flight be not on the Sabbath day." This flight was to be at the destruction of Jerusalem, (a future event,) when all (merely Jewish) ceremonies were abolished. Our Savior speaks of the Sabbath as still in force (i. e., as a day to be observed afterwards.) This, perhaps, might be sufficient in relation to the "authority" for the change of the time or day of keeping the Sabbath.

But let me request your correspondent to consider whether the change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week was not the subject of prediction and promise. In the fourth chapter of the epistle to the Hebrews, the writer appears to teach us that the seventh day Sabbath was typical of the "rest" promised in Canaan, as this again was typical of the rest which the soul obtains upon coming to Christ by faith,—"For we, who have believed, do enter into rest." And this, again, was typical of the rest in the Heavenly Canaan, the "rest which remaineth to the people of God." But there was to be a rest under the gospel dispensation, an earnest or foretaste of this last, involved, or comprehended in it. "For, if Jesus, (that is Joshua) had given them (the Israelites) rest, then would he not afterwards have spoken of another day." "This is the day which the Lord hath made." It is important to remark, that there are two different words both translated rest in the epistle to the Hebrews. Indeed, it is so in this fourth chapter. Nevertheless, as God obviously connected the actually possessing his rest with believing his word, so we see, "they could not enter in, because of their unbelief." Having provoked God by their unbelief and rebellion, their expectation, which they supposed was well founded, and sure, would perish, or be cut off—it would never be realized—they believed or presumed in vain. He swore in his "wrath that they should not enter into his rest." The rest into which they could not enter, was the rest in Canaan; and this is a solemn lesson to all not to presume upon what they may judge to be the absolute purposes or promises of God, while they are faithless and unholy. "Lest a promise being left us, of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it, falling after the example of unbelief." If Joshua had given them the true spiritual rest, then would he (God) not afterwards (by the mouth of David) have spoken of another day." Another day of rest, the first instead of the seventh—under the evangelical, instead of legal economy.

This, I think, is partly deducible from the change of terms, because it is not now the same Greek word that had been used, (pausis or katapausis,) but sabbatismos—literally, the keeping of a Sabbath. "There remaineth a rest (a Sabbatismos—Sabbath, to the people of God," in allusion to the rest, or Sabbath which remaineth, the first day of the week, a commemorative of the finished work of Christ, and his resurrection from the dead; and this, again, may be typical or emblematical of the eternal Sabbatismos, or keeping of a Sabbath, which remains for them in heaven.

ONESIMUS.

GILSUM, N. H., Aug. 14.

P. S. If the above remarks are not satisfactory to your correspondent, as furnishing satisfactory reasons and authority for the change of the Sabbath, will he have the goodness to inform us through the columns of the Contributor on what his dissatisfaction is predicated. What sort of order or permission, do we seek for? Is not the example of Christ, the apostles, and primitive Christians in accordance with their teaching on this subject.

PRAYER BETTER THAN LAW-SUITS.

When Samuel Harris, of Virginia, began to preach, his soul was so absorbed in the work, that he neglected to attend to the duties of this life. Finding upon a time, that it was absolutely necessary that he should provide more grain for his family than he had raised upon his own farm, he called upon a man who owed him a sum of money, and told him he would be glad to receive the money.

The man replied, "I have no money by me, and cannot oblige you."

Harris said, "I want the money to purchase wheat for my family; and as you have raised a good crop of wheat, I will take the article of you instead of money, at a current price."

The man answered, "I have other uses for my wheat, and cannot let you have it."

"How then," said Harris, "do you intend to pay me?"

"I never intend to pay you until you sue me," replied the debtor, "and therefore you may begin your suit as soon as you please."

Mr. Harris left him, meditating; said he to himself, "What shall I do? Must I leave preaching and attend to a vexatious law-suit? Perhaps a thousand souls may perish in the mean time for want of Jesus! No! I will not. Well, what will you do for yourself? Why, this will I do; I will sue him at the court of Heaven." Having resolved what he would do, he turned aside into a wood, and on his knees laid the matter before the Lord. Mr. Harris felt an evidence of divine favor; he felt, to use his own expressive language, that Jesus would become bondsman for the man, and see that he was paid if he went on preaching. Mr. Harris arose from prayer, resolved to hold the man no longer a debtor, since Jesus had assumed the payment. He therefore wrote a receipt in full of all accounts against the man, and dating it in the woods where he prayed, signed it with his own name. Going the next day by the man's house, on his way to meeting, he gave the receipt to a servant, directing him to give it to his master. On his return from meeting, the man hailed him, and demanded what he meant by the receipt he had sent him in the morning.

Mr. Harris replied, "I meant just as I wrote."

"But you know, sir," answered the debtor, "I have never paid you."

"True," said Mr. Harris, "and I know you said that you never would unless I sued you. But, sir, I sued you at the court of Heaven, and Jesus has entered bail for you, and has agreed to pay me; I have therefore given you a discharge!"

"But I insist upon it," said the man, "matters shall not be left so."

"I am well satisfied," answered Harris, "Jesus will not fail me. I leave you to settle the account with him at another day. Farewell." This operated so effectually on the man's conscience, that in a few days he discharged the debt.

NATURAL EFFECT OF INFIDELITY.—A manservant of Mallet's upon whose mind an appropriate impression was made by the blasphemous conversation which he continually heard as he waited at table, watched his opportunity, and absconded with a considerable quantity of valuable property belonging to his master. Being arrested he was urged by Mallet to confess his reason for his infamous behavior. "Sir," said he, "I have so often heard you and your friends talk of the impossibility of a future state, and that after death there was no reward for virtue, nor punishment for vice, that I was tempted to commit the robbery." "Well," replied Mallet, "but had you no fear of that death which the laws of your country inflict upon the crime?" "Sir," said the servant, looking sternly at his master, "what is that to you, if I had a mind to venture that? you and your wicked companions had removed the greater terror, why should I fear the less?"

AFFECTING INCIDENT.—When Dr. Hutton was Bishop of Durham (as we are told by his biographer,) and as he was traveling over Cam, betwixt Wensleydale and Ingleton, he suddenly dismounted, and, having delivered his horse to a servant, walked to a particular place at some distance from the highway, where he kneeled down and continued for some time in prayer. On his return, one of his attendants took the liberty of inquiring what was his master's motive for so singular an act; in answer to which, the Bishop informed him, that when he was a poor boy, without shoes or stockings, traversing this cold and bleak mountain on a frosty day, he remembered that he had disturbed a red cow, then lying on that identical place, in order to warm his feet and legs on the spot.

BEAUTIFUL SAYING OF A DYING MAN.—The late professor Caldwell, of Dickinson College, a short time before his death, addressed his wife as follows; "You will not, I am sure, lie down upon your bed and weep when I am gone. You will not mourn for me when God has been so good to me. And when you visit the spot where I lie, do not choose a sad and mournful time; do not go in the shade of the evening, or in the dark night. These are no times to visit the grave of a Christian; But go in the morning, in the bright sunshine, and when the birds are singing."

A HINT TO FANCIFUL EXPOSITORS OF SCRIPTURE.—Hooker, in his Ecclesiastical Polity, says: "I hold it for a most infallible rule, in expositions of sacred Scripture, that where a literal construction will stand, the farthest from the letter is commonly the worst. There is not a more dangerous and deluding art, which changeth the meaning of words, as alchemy doth, or would do, the substance of metals; maketh of anything what it listeth, and bringeth in the end all truth to nothing."

"THE SABBATH QUESTION."

We publish to-day an article on this subject from the Christian Contributor. Surely our readers do not need any help to discover, that it fails of meeting the questions at issue. Mr. Hawes wants information upon two points—1st. Who has authorized the neglect of keeping the seventh day? 2d. What passage of Scripture requires the keeping of the first day? To the first of these questions no answer is attempted; to the last, no answer is given in the shape of a passage of Scripture, although various suggestions are made as to the propriety of the practice. With this remark we might very justly dismiss the article, and we believe that candid readers would say we had fairly characterized it. But we are not disposed to be technical, and will therefore look a little at the "observations" which are presented for the consideration of Mr. Hawes, and those who like him are not satisfied with the popular notions in regard to the change of the Sabbath.

The first of these observations is, in substance, that the work of redemption is greater than the work of creation—that it was completed on the first day by the resurrection of Christ—and that, therefore, the first day ought to be kept as the Sabbath. There is one objection to this whole theory, which ought to convince every Baptist of the impropriety of advocating it, and that is, that there is nothing of the kind in the Bible, which is professedly regarded as a sufficient rule of faith and practice, But waving that consideration, there are still difficulties in the way. On the score of reason alone, who can safely assert, that the work of redemption is greater than the work of creation? Not they, surely, whose finite powers are incapable of comprehending either work in all its length and breadth, its height and depth. But even if we grant the superiority of the work of redemption, it does not follow that the first day should be observed. Some doubt whether the work of redemption was completed by the resurrection, and believe that our Saviour alluded to that when he said on the cross, "It is finished." Others are inclined to the opinion, that the work of redemption will not be completed until all the redeemed are brought home to glory—an opinion for which quite as much may be said as for that of redemption's being completed by the resurrection. These suggestions are sufficient to show upon what a sandy foundation rests the theory we are opposing. We wonder that any body—most of all, a Baptist—can be satisfied with it.

The other "observations" are of a piece with this. The notion that Jesus "honored, distinguished, and sanctified the first day of the week by putting his surname upon it," is a notion which finds no countenance with some of the ablest interpreters of Scripture, they supposing that by the term Lord's day, or lordly day, in Rev. 1: 10, reference is had, not to a period of twenty-four hours, but to the whole period of which the apostle had a vision. But even if the term meant an ordinary day, it would be much more natural, since the expression occurs but this once in the New Testament, to refer it to the seventh day of the week, which God had previously called his "holy day," and "the holy of the Lord"—phrases very similar to that in the passage under consideration.—Again, as to the collections "upon the first day of the week," there is no allusion to a public meeting in connection with them; on the contrary, the injunction was, "Let every one of you lay by him"—an act which required no public gathering, and would be quite as appropriate to a working-day as to a Sabbath-day.—Finally, as to the "constant practice of the disciples of Christ to meet together to worship Him and observe his institutions on the first day," it is sufficient to say, that there is but one meeting of this kind on record, and that took place in an evening at Troas. There is a difference of opinion among interpreters as to what evening this was; some supposing it was the evening after the seventh day, and that Paul started on his journey on first day morning; others, that it was the evening after the first day, and of course a part of the second day, according to their mode of reckoning. Whichever view be taken, it makes little for the first day. If it was the evening after the seventh day, then Paul commenced his journey on first-day morning; if the evening after the first day, then it was really upon the second day of the week. How this evening meeting, which continued till break of day, can consistently be urged as an example to be imitated, by those who never held such a meeting in all their lives, is more than we can tell. If they really attach so much importance to the apostle's example in this case, why do they not follow it by holding their meetings in the evening, and continuing them till break of day?

But we must close our remarks with one observation, and that is, What a difference between the argument by which the seventh day is sustained, and that which is here urged for the first day! God set apart the seventh day for the Sabbath, and rested upon it; he made its observance a part of the Ten Commandments, which are generally acknowledged to be perpetually binding; he connected blessings with its faithful observance, and curses with its neglect, throughout the history of his chosen people; the Son of God kept it during his mission to earth, as recorded by the Evangelists; his disciples held numerous meetings upon it, which are recorded in the Acts of the Apostles; and so strict were they in this respect, that Paul challenged the Jews to show wherein he had walked contrary to the customs of the fathers, and they answered him not a word. Such are the facts and arguments upon which rest the claims of the seventh day to be the Sabbath. Look at them by the side of those which Onesimus has presented for the first day, and then choose which day ye will observe.

SUNDAY LAWS—PROTECTION.

A question has been raised among the German Seventh-day Baptists of Pennsylvania as to the best form of petition to present to the Legislature of that State for relief from the burdens imposed by the Sunday law—whether to ask for the abolition of the law, or for an act excusing Sabbath-keepers from its penalty, or simply for an act to protect Sabbath-keepers on their own premises. In view of the vexatious prosecutions to which they have been subjected, we do not wonder that some of them are in favor of the latter form of petition, as the one most likely to meet with a prompt and favorable response. Still we think such a petition would not fully meet the case, and that its presentation at the present time would be impolitic. The Constitution of Pennsylvania guarantees religious freedom to all the citizens of the State, without distinction of sect. Among the statutes, however, there is one which forbids labor on Sunday, thus favoring the religious opinions and practices of a portion of the citizens, while annoying and injuring another portion, and operating as a ban upon their religious views. Believing the law to be unconstitutional, an appeal was taken to the Supreme Court of the State, and a decision obtained. But that decision was of such a character as not to satisfy either the Court itself or the people. One of the judges declared the law to be constitutional, because it required the observance of Sunday, not as a religious institution, but as a civil institution; while another judge, on the same bench, declared the law to be constitutional, because it required the observance of Sunday, not as a civil institution, but as a religious institution. Thus different members of the Court affirmed the constitutionality of the law on entirely different and conflicting grounds. Such a decision, as we have already said, does not satisfy the parties interested on either side. Its effect is to unsettle the whole question, and leave it where there is just as much need of another decision as there was of this. In such circumstances, we should be sorry to see our German brethren take a step which would appear to acknowledge the constitutionality of the Sunday law. To ask simply for protection on their own premises, would have this appearance, and would be construed by many as an abandonment of the ground which was originally assumed. On this account, we hope they will weigh the matter well before they decide upon the step.

The prospect of speedy relief from the operation of Sunday laws, is probably better in most cases with a petition simply for protection, than with a petition which asks for a full recognition of our constitutional rights. Indeed, there are no doubt many who would gladly buy off the Christian observers of the seventh day, by granting them the privilege of working on their own retired farms on the first day. But we object to being bought off in any such way. It is better to have our rights, even if we wait a long time, and put up with a good deal of inconvenience in contending for them, than to live always upon sufferance. We hold, that those who observe the seventh day are entitled to protection on that day from annoyance by civil prosecutions, jury duties, &c., as much as those who observe the first day are entitled to protection on that day. As to laws requiring the observance of the seventh day, we neither desire nor ask them; and we see no reason, either in the Scriptures or in the necessities of society, why any should be enacted to enforce the observance of the first day.

SABBATH SCHOOLS.

The following paragraph is from a letter of Thos. E. Babcock, requesting us to purchase a ten-dollar Sabbath School Library. We fully sympathize with his desire for a better state of things:—

"I feel a deep anxiety upon the subject of Sabbath Schools, and I think this enterprise has been and still is too much neglected amongst us as a denomination. So far as my acquaintance extends, there are many churches that hardly make an effort to sustain a school, and in many others the efforts are so temporary and unstable that but little progress is made; and, besides, such a state of things tends to produce a feeling of distaste and distrust for the whole subject. This is one of the greatest obstacles which I have met in trying to establish schools. The repeated failures that have taken place are pointed at as evidence that nothing can be done with a reasonable hope of success. But little is said upon the subject in our public gatherings, and nothing is published. I have long felt anxious to have some able pen lifted up, that might arouse our slumbering interests upon this subject."

New Meeting-House.—We learn by a letter from Eld. Wm. Green, that the Church in Hounsfield, Jefferson Co., N. Y., is building a new meeting-house, which will be completed and ready to dedicate about Christmas day.

ANTI-SLAVERY PETITION OF THE WOMEN.

The following petition was presented for consideration, at a meeting held in New York City, July 4, 1848, at which time a Committee of Ladies was appointed to take measures to secure for it an extensive circulation, and a list embracing the name of every woman who can be persuaded to offer a prayer for human freedom. This Committee has addressed letters to several members of Congress, soliciting the privilege of forwarding documents to their address, and their aid in presenting the petitions when collected. The following gentlemen have consented to take charge of such petitions: Hon. John P. Hale, Amos Tuck, M. C., J. C. Palfrey, M. C., J. R. Giddings. The Committee now request all who can do so to transcribe the following petition, obtain as many signatures as practicable in their respective localities, then enclose them in strong wrappers, and forward them to Washington, directed to either of the above gentlemen, immediately after the opening of the next Congress. By complying with this request, concert of action may be secured, and perhaps much good effected. Be that as it may, those who engage in this service "heartily as unto the Lord," may hear from His blessed voice, in the day of reckoning, "She hath done what she could."

PETITION.

To the Honorable the Senate of the United States and House of Representatives:

Your petitioners, Women of America, whose names are hereunto subscribed, constrained by the love of humanity, address you in behalf of the claim of a million and a half of their sex, who are afforded no legal protection for the heart's dearest ties, or woman's "sacred honor," but, with their husbands, sons and brothers, are the doomed victims of a system that dwarfs the intellect, degrades the morals, and debases the entire being.

Believing that they are solemnly bound to 'remember those that are in bonds, as bound with them,' and believing that in this age of light, while the great principles of Liberty are animating the nations, the Government of these United States, this 'Model Republic,' should use all its constitutional power to eradicate, within its own bounds, an evil which is repudiated by the civilized world as its direst curse, they are constrained respectfully and earnestly to pray your honorable body at once to devise such measures as may come legitimately within their province, both to prevent the farther extension of American Slavery, and to withdraw the protection and countenance hitherto afforded by our Government and flag to the American Slave Trade, and to suppress slavery effectually in those sections over which Congress has competent jurisdiction.

And your petitioners will ever pray.

REVIVAL IN THE 2D HOPKINTON CHURCH.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

As the cause of religion is deeply interesting to every Christian, I think it a duty we owe each other, occasionally to inform our brethren of the state of religion in our various societies. As we are all members one of another, if one member suffers or rejoices, it will excite a corresponding emotion in others.

While attending our Missionary and Tract Anniversaries, I trust that I caught a spark of the missionary spirit which characterized that truly delightful season; and I resolved to cherish the spark, and when returned, to fan it to a flame among the people of my charge. Long and dreary had been our night of sadness, and still a deeper gloom seemed settling down upon us. I felt that nothing short of the energy of the Holy Spirit could save the ship Zion from impending wreck. So cold, lifeless, and hopeless, appeared our situation, that after viewing it, like Nehemiah, I said nothing to any one of what was in my heart, and, without consulting any one, appointed a series of evening meetings. Feeling that our only hope was in God, to him alone I looked for aid. Believing prayer to be the key which unlocks the treasury of the gospel, its nature, design, and importance demanded our first attention; and for the first week that subject was amply discoursed upon. Soon the fire of heaven descended to consume the sacrifice, and broken and contrite hearts trembled at the altar. Deep confession of sin, and fervent and importunate prayer, gave evidence that Jesus of Nazareth was passing; and some, who were sitting by the way-side, hearing thereof, cried, "Jesus, thou son of David, have mercy on us." And Jesus had compassion on them, and forgave them their sins; and the baptismal waters now bear witness of their faith.

Such was the interest manifested, that our meetings continued for four successive weeks. Although the conversions from the world have not been as numerous as in some revivals, yet a great work has been done. There were but few professedly unconverted persons in our vicinity. Many seem to think, that the number of converts is the measure of a revival. This is not only a great error, but it is a dangerous one. It leads to the conclusion, that revivals are not much needed, where the field promises few or no converts, and thus churches relax their exertions, and fall into a state of indolence. But a church may enjoy a revival, although no conversions from the world take place. How many churches are drooping for want of a revival, but, because few if any non-professors reside among them, no effort, on the part of either minister or people, is supposed to be demanded. That such views have obtained, and do even now exist, is evident from the oft-repeated inquiry from abroad during our meetings, "Are there many who take the anxious seat, or request prayers; or are there many conversions?" But as to the result of our meeting, suffice it to say, that the spirit, power, and practice of social, family, and closet prayer, have been greatly increased. Brethren and sisters have opened their mouths in the prayer and conference room, whose voices were never heard there before. Family altars have been erected where none before existed, prayer-meetings have once more sprung up in various parts of the church. Nine persons have been baptized, and ten have united with the church, one of whom is above 60 years old. Nor is this all; the influence of our meeting is beginning to be felt around, and an increased interest in religion is springing up, indicative, I trust, that a great outpouring of the Holy Spirit is about to be realized in this vicinity. And many have solemnly covenanted to pray and not faint for a still greater spread of this work. The Lord hasten it in his time.

Two circumstances ought to be recorded as aiding much in this work. One is the Anniversaries. The refreshing season enjoyed there, in some degree prepared my own heart to enter into the work, and rolled a responsibilty upon me that I dared not throw off. O that all our ministers and churches could estimate the true loss and gain of attending or not attending our anniversary seasons. The other incident to which I refer, is the appointment of a number of brethren, at the last Quarterly Meeting of our Church, to visit each family composing said Quarterly Meeting, and report the state of religion at the next meeting. In this church we are reaping a good harvest from that effort.

I wish to express my indebtedness to Bro. C. M. Lewis, of Newport, who came to our help in the hour of need, and jointly labored with me.

S. S. G.

Hopkinton, R. I., Oct. 22, 1848.

Religious Financiering.—A place of worship is now nearly completed for Baptist Church in this city under the pastoral care of Rev. D. Bellamy, which shows what may be done in a religious way by good financiering. This church was desirous of having a chapel in a fashionable part of Broadway, and to secure it adopted the following plan. Lots 75 feet front and rear, by 130 deep, were purchased at between $20,000 and $30,000; large stores and dwellings, some four or six stories high, were erected in front, leaving a comfortable avenue to the chapel, which is built on the rear of the lots, and is sufficiently large for all practical purposes, and is beautifully lighted from above. The chapel also surmounts a magnificent lecture-room, or "Concert Hall," for which there is almost constant use in that neighborhood. This will of course pay a handsome revenue, which, with the rents for the stores and dwellings in front, pays all the incidental expenses of the church, the insurance on the property, the interest on the amount of the entire cost, and sinks the principal several hundred dollars annually.

Family Prayer.—At the meeting of the Eastern Association, in May last, the subject of Family Prayer was brought up by a resolution and elicited interesting remarks. A correspondent, referring to the good influences of that meeting, says: "A brother was present from some hundred miles distant, who, on returning home, established a family altar, and began to offer prayer in his own house. A minister called one morning, and found the family engaged in their devotions. Convicted of his own duty by their example, he said to his wife on reaching home, 'Bro. W. has begun to pray in his family, and so must I.' Immediately, for the first time, he erected an altar, and began to pray in his family."

Repentance and Restitution.—Among the contributions recently taken up in the Bowdoin street Church, Boston, to relieve the American Board from its debt, was found a half eagle of the old coinage, wrapped in a note, of which the following is a copy:—

"The enclosed is of the old coinage, and worth, I believe, $5 32. I know not where it came from. Some person left it at my door, enclosed in a letter-sheet, directed to myself. In the sheet was written—

"'Mr. ——, This is yours.'

"Probably it was once wrongfully taken from me—and if so, his repentance may furnish the means which will lead to the repentance of others. May God grant his blessing upon him who sent me the coin, and upon the use to which it is now offered. —— ——."

A New Society.—A new Society has been organized in the city of New York, called "The Baptist Itinerant Society." Its object is, to employ men of piety and talents not connected with the ministry, and ministers not filling the pastoral office, to conduct religious services on Sunday in destitute localities in the vicinity of New York. The plan involves but little expense in comparison with the amount of labor performed, and the Society will doubtless accomplish a great deal of good.

The Lewisburg University is the name of a literary institution which the Baptists of Pennsylvania are endeavoring to bring into existence. $81,000, of the $100,000 necessary for commencing operations, is already subscribed, and no doubt remains that the rest will be forthcoming. The Academical Department is already open. It is not proposed to expend over $50,000 on the buildings.

"Wreaths of Friendship" is the title of a neat duodecimo volume just published by Baker & Scribner, at No. 36 Park Row. It is edited by T. S. Arthur and F. C. Woodworth, and contains above forty pieces, each of a pleasing and instructive character, and nearly every one illustrated by an engraving. Though intended as a Gift Book for the Young, it will be sure to interest children of a larger growth. If you want a book for a holiday present, which will not only look well, but improve the taste and refine the heart of the reader, here you have it.

Religious Prospects of Europe.—An editorial in the London Christian Times, speaking of affairs on the continent of Europe, says there are many who look upon the present unexpected and extensive changes with sanguine hope, and there is not a little to encourage them. Civil and religious freedom, with some exceptions, seems, at least for the present, to be a gainer. The Jesuits, its sworn foes, with all the orders which show them any favor, are ignominiously driven from Roman Catholic States. Even Rome has dismissed them. Many convents are in the course of being suppressed. The temporal power of the papacy, with which, strange to say, the leading changes originated, is violently shaken. The question of a seperation of Church and State makes progress. Meanwhile, openings of usefulness are presenting themselves in unexpected quarters. We have reason to know, for instance, that in three short months from the commencement of the Italian Revolution, 1000 copies of the Scriptures were sold in parts of Italy, and that the demand is urgent and irrepressible. There has been nothing like this, of the same extent, in the same space of time, since the days of Salvonaroia.

Free Church Sites.—A deputation from the Free Church of Scotland are, at present, in England. Leeds, Liverpool, Manchester, and other places, have been visited. The landed proprietors of Scotland, it appears, refuse to sell land, at any price, when required for building chruches and chapels for the use of the Free Church. The Rev. Mr. Glass says, he has preached, standing up to the knees in snow, to 3,000 people, who remained for three hours together. In Scotland, the estates of the landed proprietors extend, in some cases, as far as from Leeds to Manchester, nearly all tenanted by members or adherents of the Free Church, yet these owners absolutely refuse to sell land to the Free Church for sites.

A Model Church.—A writer in the New York Observer gives the following gratifying account of the first Presbyterian Church in Aurora, Cayuga County, New York:—"It is a church of 110 members, giving a salary of $500, under the pastorship of Rev. H. W. Parker. It has this year purchased a bell at a cost of $400; painted the church thoroughly; bought an instrument for the choir at $50; given $200 for foreign missions; $75 to the Western Education Society; $100 to Home Missions; $75 to the American Protestant Society; $75 to the American Sunday School Union. Making in all about $2000 of expenditures.

Judaism in Utica, N. Y.—We learn from the New York Baptist Register, that the Jewish service is performed in Utica by a company of the children of Israel, regularly, on the Jewish Sabbath, in a hall in the second story of Mechanic's block, on Liberty street. "Their services sometimes seem to be continued from morning till night, almost without intermission. Christian congregations would be restless at half the length of them in their chapels. They have their hats on, and are covered with light woolen shawls."

SCRAPS OF RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

The Colporteurs in the service of the American Tract Society have recently held a convention for several days, at Lewisburg, Va. Ten were present from counties west of the Alleghanies, two from valley counties, and one from Eastern Virginia. They belonged to seven different denominations; several of them were ministers familiar with life in the mountains.

A college for the education of Christian youth, is about to be established in Calcutta, under the auspices of the Congregational Churches of England. The missionaries of the L. M. Society have nearly 800 pupils. One principal object is the education of a native ministry.

A new paper has made its appearance in London, under the name of the Christian Times, —brought out under the auspices of Sir Culling Eardly and John Henderson, Esq.,—designed to befriend all Christians, and to avoid sectarianism.

Amherst College has received a donation from Hon. David Sears, consisting of real estate in the city of Boston, estimated by the donor to be of the value of $12,000. This, with $10,000, formerly bestowed, is to constitute the "Sears's Foundation of Literature and Benevolence."

The Christian Sentinel of the 12th ult. states that Mr. E. Watson, of Portage—lately deceased—willed his entire estate, variously estimated at $25,000 to $40,000, to the Univeralist societies of Genesee Falls and Nunda.

Elder Dyer Woodworth, of Hornby, N. Y., has subscribed five hundred dollars to the Free-well Baptist Home and Foreign Mission Societies, to be paid in five annual payments, and to be equally divided between the two Societies.

The Baptist Board of Indian Missions, have appointed six new missionaries to labor among the Indians. This is a peculiarly important department of the great missionary field.

The American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, have among the different tribes of American Indians, twenty-seven stations, and one hundred and eleven missionaries and native assistants.

The Rev. Henry Funk, of Pennsylvania, had $120 stolen from his pocket whilst on his way to attend the Synod of the German Reformed Church, in session at Hagerstown.

Wisconsin, nine years ago, had but six churches, three ministers, and one house of worship. It now has about one hundred churches.

The National Education Society has selected and sent to the West, in the last eighteen months, one hundred and ten teachers.

Ohio, it is said, has more colleges in it than any other State in the Union, though she is only about fifty years old.

A third Jewish synagogue was recently consecrated at Cincinnati, with imposing and solemn rites.

Rev. Dr. Gillett died at Hallowel on the 19th inst., at about 80 years of age. He settled in Hallowel over 50 years ago, and has resided there ever since.

LATER FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamer Hibernia arrived at Boston on Friday last, bringing European news to Oct. 21, the substance of which we give below.

Ireland.

The State trials are dragging slowly along. O'Donoghue has been found guilty, and the trial of Meagher has commenced. The fate of O'Brien is yet uncertain, but the general opinion seems to be that he will not be executed.

England.

The alarm which was at first caused by the appearance of the cholera, has sensibly abated. The Registrar General of London has reported 30 additional cases only, up to October 14; but, on the other hand, the general health is better this year than in ordinary years, only 991 deaths having been recorded last week within the bills of mortality, against 1,154 upon an average of four years. There is only one case reported at Birmingham. At Manchester not a single case has yet occurred. Liverpool has so far escaped the pestilence. In the city of Edinburgh the ravages of the disease seem to have been rather more extensive than in any other place, while the Port of Leith has comparatively escaped. Its appearance here, and at the little fishing village of New Haven, establishes without a doubt the fact of its malignant presence in that quarter.

In Scotland the potato crop is still reported good, while that of Ireland is immensely short; the oat crop is, however, good, and the markets generally partake of the same want of spirit prevailing in England. In fact, speculation is at an end, and the large supplies which are flowing in from the Baltic and other ports, tend effectually to keep down prices.

France.

There has been a partial change in the administration of Gen. Cavaignac, but for the most part, things remain as they were. The Socialist Banquets continue to be held, at some of which strange and monstrous doctrines are promulgated.

There was a serious riot at Havre on the 20th ult., in consequence of a mob interfering to prevent English and other vessels loading potatoes and other articles of food, to remove them from that port. After the affray, fourteen soldiers, and double that number of the people, were carried to the hospital, wounded.

A Democratic banquet was held at Montpelier a few days since, at which the most execrable doctrines were promulgated. When concluded, the assistants paraded the streets in groups, singing the Carmagnole and Ca Ira, and shouting, "Down with the Aristocrats," "Vive Barbés," "Vive Raspail," "Vive Robespierre," "Vive L'Enfer"—[Live Hell!]

The Annual Printers' and Compositors' Dinner took place on the 15th, at the Barrier of Sevres. About 900 persons were present, and a place was kept vacant for Louis Blanc, who had attended these dinners on former occasions. Several representatives of the people, who had been connected with the printing business, as well as a number of delegates from all the trades, were present.

Abd-el-Kader has lost another of his children, a little girl, two years old, who died on the 15th ultimo.

Austria.

The stupendous events which are passing in the neighborhood of Vienna, and in the Austrian Empire, have kept all Europe in alarm and amazement during the week.

Last week we announced the breaking out of the insurrection at Vienna, the flight of the Emperor, and the ascendancy of the insurgent party on the 7th and 8th ult.

At this juncture Jellachich, at the head of a numerous army of Croatians, was advancing toward Buda Pesth with a view to suppress the insurrectionary proceedings in Hungary, when the intelligence of the Revolution of Vienna reached him. He instantly turned his columns in the direction of Vienna, and advanced with rapid strides toward the Capital.

Auersperg, the Emperor's General, who had previously taken up his military position at Belvidere, in the suburbs of Vienna, had kept the population in hourly alarm of a bombardment, and during the nights of the 10th, 11th, and 12th, the inhabitants of Vienna have undergone all the terrors of a momentarily expected siege by the two armies.

It seems that the Diet in the city had made many ineffectual attempts by threats to induce both Jellachich and Auersperg to retire and forbear from hostile proceedings. Both evaded direct answers, or refused to give any definite declarations of their intention. The position of Auersperg in a military point of view being untenable, unless he at once bombarded the city, has been unquestionably evacuated. Reports state that Jellachich has retired toward Neustadt.

It would seem that Prince Windischgratz, who lately distinguished himself by his decision at Prague, has proceeded toward Vienna, and is to command, under the orders of the Emperor, the combined armies of Jellachich and Auersperg.

It is very probable, that these armies have retired from the immediate neighborhood of the city, or at any rate, if they have decided not to bombard it, they may take the position to cut off the supplies, so as to reduce the inhabitants to starvation.

Reports say that the Diet have 100,000 men in arms to defend the Austrian Capital, but a vast number of these must be in favor of the Emperor, although every effort seems to be employed to exasperate and inflame the populace against the Court party.

On the other hand, there cannot be less than 100,000 regular troops encircling Vienna at this moment.

The United States Mail Steamship Washington arrived at New York on Sunday evening last, in fifteen days from Southampton. Her news was anticipated by the arrival of the Hibernia. Among her passengers we notice the name of Amalie Pfeiffer, said to be the female Ledyard, of whose Eastern travels we gave a sketch last week.

MAIL CONTRACT—NEW ROUTE TO CHINA.

A contract has been completed between the Postmaster General and Messrs. Howland & Aspinwall, merchants, of New York, for the conveyance of a monthly mail across the Isthmus, from Chagres to Panama, and thence by steamship to California and Oregon, on the Pacific.

The first mail under this contract will be made up in November, so as to be at Panama in time to meet Howland & Aspinwall's new steamship California, which left New York a few weeks ago (by the Cape Horn route) for the Pacific Ocean. From Panama the California proceeds to a port on the west coast of Mexico (probably Mazatlan,) thence to Monterey, the bay of San Francisco and Astoria, touching at the same points on her return to Panama, passing along the whole of the Mexican Pacific coast. This contract, it will be observed, completes the great Ocean mail line connecting New York and the other Atlantic cities of the United States with the Pacific Ocean, as far as Astoria.

The Post Office Department has now under consideration the extension of the line to China. It has yet to be practically demonstrated whether a line of good steamers running to Canton, (stopping at the Sandwich Islands, where coal of the first quality has been discovered,) and connecting with the United States Pacific Ocean Line, could anticipate the Overland Mail of the British Government.

An overland passage from England to China, occupying sixty days, now costs about one hundred and twelve pounds, or five hundred dollars. By the American route, passengers could be conveyed from London to China for $400. The trip from New York to Canton, with our improvements in steam navigation, and a better road over the Isthmus, may be made in thirty-five days. Allow fifteen days for travelers from England taking passage to New York, and the American route to China would be ten days shorter, even for British travelers, than the European and Asiatic route!

Effects of a Storm.—The Tallahasse Sentinel gives an account of a storm on the Florida coast on the 25th of September, by which the village of Tampa was nearly destroyed. Only four houses were left standing in the village; all the Government stores, &c., were a total loss. The water is said to have risen almost instantaneously. There was no recession, but wave piled on wave, and whole streets were swept of houses, as it were, in a moment. Few of the inhabitants were left with even a change of clothing. A very large iron safe belonging to Government, in the Commissary's storehouse, was swept for some distance, and found lodgment in what in dry times is the bed of a brook. A strong wooden house, by the mere force of the wind, was taken from its foundation, and carried several rods, and set down again unharmed. In some places the water must have risen forty feet above low-water mark. The spray was driven with such force as to impregnate ponds five miles in the interior. Even a running brook that distance inland, was brackish. Probably a more furious tornado never blew in this latitude, but fortunately its track was confined to a narrow scope.

◆

Manufacturing in Mexico.—We see it stated, that there is about being shipped from Norwich, Conn., the machinery entire, for two extensive Paper Mills, one to be located at the City of Mexico, and the other at Guadalaxara, built under the immediate superintendence of Christopher Irvin, Esq., at the well-known establishment of Smith, Winchester & Co., at Windham, Conn., and is probably the most substantial and well-finished lot of paper machinery ever built in the United States. It is to be accompanied by experienced workmen to set it up and put it in operation, and it is intended for the manufacture of writing paper. There is also to be forwarded at the same time, a lot of cotton machinery, built at Newton, Upper Falls, for the Guadalaxara Spinning and Weaving Company, amounting in all to about five hundred packages.

◆

Emancipation.—A mammoth petition is in circulation in Delaware, praying the Legislature to abolish slavery in that State. It is receiving the signature of nearly all the citizens of that glorious little State. The Blue Hen's Chicken says that, "from appearances, it will be one of the largest petitions ever offered to the Delaware Legislature." It will be recollected that an effort was made in the Legislature, a year ago, to abolish slavery, and it was very near being successful. This aroused the people to the consideration of the subject, and it will, doubtless, be accomplished.

Carrier pigeons are getting to be quite extensively used by speculators to convey intelligence from the English steamers in advance of the mails. The Boston Journal tells of one found by Mr. Nash, at Norwich, Conn., completely tired out, having a paper attached to it with the following inscription:—

STEAMER EUROPA, Oct. 1848.

I advise you to sell all grain you have, and countermand your orders. Tell G. to dispose of his cotton before the 25th. This carrier I smuggle—how good he will prove I do not know.

Directed to J. L., Wall st. Hastily, J. B.

The Plymouth Memorial tells of another carrier pigeon caught by Captain Allen. When about 3 miles ENE from Scituate Light, a pigeon was seen flying toward the schooner, and soon came on board, apparently very much fatigued. Tied to the legs of the pigeon was a paper, 72 inches in length, and four inches wide, containing the news by the steamer Cambria, which was then in sight, bound to Boston.

A lad about seven years of age, son of Mr. John Webster, Agent of the New England Cordage Company, fell into a vat of boiling hot water on Saturday afternoon, at the rope-walk on Northampton-st., Boston. The lad had been missing for some time, and his dreadful fate was not known until the dead body was discovered by some workmen who were emptying the vat.

Rev. Theodore Parker stated, in his sermon on Sunday, that there was a court in Boston which contained sixteen tenements, each of which contained several families; and that of the children born in this court, one-half were born blind, and the eyes of the other half were more or less defective!

SUMMARY.

The distinguished Western pioneer, Robert Stuart, for several years past a resident of Detroit, but more recently connected with the management of the Illinois and Michigan Canals, died at Chicago on the 28th ult. In his early life he was extensively engaged in the fur business, with John Jacob Astor, and occupies quite a prominent position in Washington Irving's "Astoria." He was a native of Scotland. His venerable uncle, David Stuart, also mentioned in Irving's book, resides at Sandwich, Canada West.

A post mortem examination of the body of John Hays, who died at the Philadelphia Hospital from the effects of a pistol wound, was made by the physicians of that institution. The ball was extracted near the lower extremity of the heart, a small portion of which was found to have been carried away in its passage. This was an almost unheard-of novelty in surgical experience, that the sufferer should have survived such an injury for more than two days.

Rev. W. H. Horson, of Chatham, Canada West, was recently found dead under the most shocking circumstances. He started to walk up the bank of Detroit river to see a friend, got bewildered in an extensive marsh, in which he wandered until he died. He was found lying upon his face, and from the appearance of his clothes, must have wandered many miles about the marsh.

On Thursday, Nov. 2, an extra railroad train from Lynn for Salem came in collision with the extra train from Salem for Marblehead Branch, about three quarters of a mile out of Salem, soon after 12 o'clock at night, killing 6 persons, and wounding ten or fifteen more. Those killed, and nearly all those injured, were on the Marblehead train, and belonged to that place.

The Portland Advertiser of Thursday morning says, that they learn by a passenger in the "State of Maine," that the City Mills in Bangor, owned by Gen. Veazie and Mr. John Fisk, were destroyed by fire on Thursday last. They cost about $65,000. The amount or insurance was not ascertained.

The last Fort Madison (Iowa) Statesman says that a company has purchased all the Mormon property in the hands of A. W. Barritt, the Mormon agent, at Nauvoo, including the walls of the Temple; and that arrangements have been made to rebuild it as soon as possible. The price paid was $12,000. The same paper also says that the citizens of Nauvoo are about to or have already arrested a person living in Nauvoo, who is supposed to be the identical individual who fired the Temple.

A distinguished Senator, says the Sun, has recently avowed that he, with an associate committee, has franked and sent in the mails one million five hundred thousand political documents since the last session of Congress. If the Post Office department can pay its own way, and yet spare enough to transmit these millions of political trash free, it is full time that the rate of postage be reduced again.

In the Circuit Court held at Newberg, N. Y., Gilbert W. Oliver recovered a verdict of $8000 against the New York and Erie Railroad Company, as compensation for severe injuries sustained by him four years ago, making him a cripple for life, by an accident to the train in which he was. The accident was caused by a defect in one of the wheels, which broke, and the cars were thrown into a gully.

A beautiful girl, about 18 years old, applied to one of the New York magistrates on Monday, for a warrant against a scoundrel to whom she was married on Saturday night; she having found out that he had two wives living, one in Philadelphia, the other in New York. A warrant was issued for the arrest of the scoundrel.

About thirty-five thousand men of the regular army are entitled to bounty lands. The volunteers who are entitled to these lands are about 55,000. 14,000,000 acres of land will be required to satisfy the claims in the Mexican war. This land at the Government price is worth eighteen million two hundred thousand dollars.

About 95 yards of flannel, says the Lowell Courier, were stolen from the tenter bars of the Faulkner Mills, in Billerica, by some daring rogue. The punishment for this offence, we believe, is imprisonment for life, by special statute—and formerly was death.

A petition to the President of the United States, dated the 25th of August last, has been forwarded from Guadaloupe, praying that an American vessel or vessels may be placed at the disposal of the white inhabitants of that Island, for the purpose of conveying them to the United States.

In Kentucky organizations have been made for emigrating to California, and a "California Emigration Society," is established. Farther North the same associations will be created to move into the new territory armed bands of slaveholders.

Snow fell at Tatmagouche, near Halifax, on the 15th, sufficiently deep for sleighing. Accounts from Pictou, and from Charlotte Town, Prince Edward's Island, mention that snow fell also at those places on the same day.

Two dollar bills altered to tens on the Exchange Bank, Salem, are in circulation. The letters "wo" are covered by the letters "EN." The ends of the genuine bills are cut off, and the ends of bills of another bank pasted on.

A Mr. Arnold, of Rochester, N. Y., has invented a machine for cutting screws, the cost of which is from $8 to $20. It is so constructed that the bolts cannot be thrown out of their proper centre, and a child may work the machine.

A bill exempting homesteads not exceeding $500 in value, from attachment, was ordered to a third reading in the Vermont Legislature, by a vote of 109 to 91.

A party of counterfeiters passed through Windsor, Vt., week before last, distributing counterfeit threes on the Agawam Bank, Springfield, twos of the Burlington, Vt., and ones of the Appleton Bank, Lowell.

A Mr. Van Wormer, a lawyer at St. Charles, Kane co., Illinois, was recently tarred and feathered, and then ordered to leave the village, by a gang who charged him with getting up useless law-suits.

A Mr. Thomas, said to be from the United States of America, is lecturing in England, and trying to show by calculations made from data obtained in Scripture, that the present dynasties, kingdoms, states, and empires of Europe will be overthrown in 1864.

The Quebec Mercury says that the emigration of the French Canadian population to the United States is largely on the increase. Many are selling out their property, and with the produce of the sale moving westward with their household chattels.

Pecan Nuts are obtained in great profusion in the forests of Western Texas. The crop this year is unusually large, and almost, if not fully, equal in value to the entire cotton crop of that State.

The Madrid correspondent of the New York Herald states that Mr. Saunders, American Minister there, in accordance with instructions from home, is endeavoring to negotiate with Spain for the purchase of Cuba.

Out of every hundred persons in England, forty cannot write their names. In Massachusetts, according to the last census, but one person in every two hundred is in this condition; and nearly all these are recent emigrants from Europe.

An exchange paper says that a deputation waited upon the Pacha of Egypt, and requested a mitigation of certain grievances. The Pacha hung the whole delegation.

A negro slave, belonging to Mr. Philip Stone, near Rockville, Md., chopped his hand off with an axe, fearing that his master was about to sell him.

The British Government has requested ours to remove the wreck of the Missouri from the bay at Gibralter. It lies in the way of vessels visiting that port.

The Baptist Chronicle, of New Orleans, states that measures have been taken for the formation of a Baptist Convention in Texas.

Mr. Bailey, poulterer, Mount street, London, states that one salesman in London pays annually for poultry £100,000, and that he himself paid £81,000 in the course of last year.

Mrs. Angelina Nickerson, widow of the late Mr. Simeon Nickerson, has been appointed by the Secretary of the Treasury keeper of the Chatham lights.

The Reading Railroad Company give constant employment to fifteen hundred men, at an annual expenditure of four hundred thousand dollars!

Three thousand six hundred and eighty eight licenses have been granted by the Mayor of New York the present year for the sale of liquors.

Colt, who killed Adams in New York, and committed suicide a few hours before the time fixed for his execution, is stated to be uow living in Paris.

About 8000 sheep have been slaughtered this Fall, at Cincinnati, for their tallow.

Proclamation,

By JOHN YOUNG, Governor of the State of New York.

The year which will soon be added to the Past has been to the people of this State eminently auspicious. Plenty has crowned our harvests—Labor has been justly rewarded, and everything around us evidences a healthy and enduring prosperity. War, with all its attendant evils, has passed away, and Peace, as honorable as welcome, has been restored. The means of education, and all the advantages of intellectual progression, have been enjoyed by us in an eminent degree; and the Future is full of hope and promise.

As a Christian people, we are admonished that these blessings are the gifts of a beneficent God, and while we thus rejoice in His bounty, we should not forget the homage due from grateful hearts:

I, therefore, respectfully recommend to the people of this State, to set apart THURSDAY, THE TWENTY-THIRD DAY OF NOVEMBER next, to be observed as a day of Public Thanksgiving to ALMIGHTY GOD; and that with such Thanksgiving be mingled Prayer to Him who holds in His hands the destinies of nations, for the continuance of those blessings which have been and still are so abundantly showered upon us.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the privy seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Witness my hand, at [L.S.] the City of Albany, this twenty-eighth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight. JOHN YOUNG.

By the Governor. HENRY V. COLT, Private Secretary.

DIED,

In Conneaut, Erie Co., Penn., Oct. 14th, 1848, Mr. ELIAS L. LANGWORTHY, aged 59 years. Consumption had for some four or five years been preying upon him, and during the last summer he suffered much severe pain, though he was not heard to utter the least murmur. When dying, he welcomed death, and died, we believe, in full assurance of a glorious immortality beyond the grave.

In Alfred, N. Y., Oct 26, Mr. JONATHAN PALMITER, in the 92d year of his age. He served some three years in the war of the Revolution.

In Hopkinton, R. I., an infant daughter of John and Harriet Crandall.

To those whom it concerns, and those only:—

Have you paid for the fifth volume of the Sabbath Recorder? If you have not, it is time that matter was attended to. The money was due when the volume commenced; and now that the volume is nearly half finished, it is difficult to frame a satisfactory excuse for delay. The times are hard, no doubt; but who ever heard of their being made easier by neglecting to pay the printer? Don't entertain such a notion for a moment; but pay the printer, and he will insure you easier times, in mind if not in pocket.

EASTERN ASSOCIATION—EXECUTIVE BOARD.

A semi-annual meeting of the Executive Board of the Eastern Association, will be held at Hopkinton City, R. I., on the fourth day of the week preceding the 3d Sabbath in November, [the 15th day of the month,] at 10 o'clock, A. M. S. S GRISWOLD, Cor. Sec.

HOPKINTON, R. I., Oct. 26, 1848.

TERMS AND VACATIONS.

The Academic Year for 1848-9, is divided into Three Terms of Fourteen Weeks each.

| | | | | |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| First, | commencing Wednesday, | Aug. 23, | ending | Nov. 29. |
| Second, | " | Dec. 13, | " | March 21. |
| Third, | " | April 4, | " | July 11. |

COURSE OF STUDY.

The classic course gives full facilities to Students for an advanced standing in College. The Ornamental and Scientific Departments are such as to meet the advancing demands of this educating age. Each member of the school will be required to write compositions, and read or speak select pieces, at stated intervals.

EXPENSES.

| | |
|---|---|
| TUITION, according to studies, | $3, $4, or $5 0 |
| EXTRAS—Drawing, | 1 00 |
| Painting, | $2 00 or 4 00 |
| Tuition on Piano, | 8 00 |
| Use of Piano, | 2 00 |
| Chemical Lectures, and Experiments, | 1 00 |
| Writing, including Stationery, | 50 |
| Study rooms, with stove, chairs, table, and bedstead, | 1 50 |
| Board in private families, per week, | $1 00 to 1 50 |

TEACHERS' CLASSES.

Classes will be formed at the opening of the First Term and middle of the Second Term, to continue seven weeks, with daily lectures and instructions in relation to the duties of those intending to teach, accompanied by a thorough review of the Common English branches. Tuition, $2 50.

AGRICULTURAL AND ANALYTIC CHEMISTRY.

Instructions in this Department, will be equal to any that can be obtained in the State, but will not be fully opened until about the first of January. A circular explaining more fully this Department, will be forwarded to any wishing it, by applying to the Principal, at DeRuyter; or Gurdon Evans, Analytic Labratory, Yale College, New Haven, Ct.

Text books furnished at the lowest prices.

PROSPECTUS OF THE
EDINBURGH QUARTERLY MAGAZINE
OF MOAAL AND INTELLECTUAL SCIENCE.
Volume I. for 1848—American edition.
GEORGE COMBE AND ROBERT COX, EDITORS.

THE many and earnest desires expressed by the lovers of Phrenology on this side of the Atlantic, and the hope of still further advancing this great cause, has induced us to publish an American edition of this profound and

SCIENTIFIC QUARTERLY.

Its character and merits need but little comment, further than that it emanates from some of the ablest minds in England and Scotland, and has been before the public more than twenty years.

GEORGE COMBE,

The distinguished phrenological writer, is its principal contributor and virtual conductor. This work embodies all the new discoveries, together with all of interest which appertains to Phrenological Science.

MAGNETISM

It also advocates, showing its adaptation to medical science, to the relief of human suffering, and to its other various and important applications.

It also urges, with great ability and pre-eminent success,

HUMAN RIGHTS,

Showing the bearings of this science of mind to legislation, moral and political government, as well as to individual self control and intellectual cultivation.

The first number will be embellished with a beautiful portrait of Mr. Combe, and subsequent numbers by those of other distinguished individuals. Each number will contain 96 pages, and will be issued quarterly on the following REDUCED TERMS, invariably in advance:

| | |
|---|---|
| Single copy, one year, | $2 00 |
| Three copies, " | 5 00 |

All subscribers will commence and close with the volume.

Please address FOWLER & WELLS,
No. 131 Nassau-street, New York.

☞ Editors who copy the above, and send papers to Fowler & Wells, New York, shall receive the work.

RELIGION.

BY WILLIAM LEGGETT.

Like snow that falls where waters glide,
  Earth's pleasures fade away;
They melt in Time's destroying tide,
  And cold are while they stay!
But joys that from Religion flow,
  Like stars that gild the night,
Amidst the darkest gloom of wo,
  Smile forth with sweetest light.

Religion's ray no clouds obscure,
  But o'er the Christian's soul
It sends its radiance, calm and pure,
  Though tempests round it roll;
His heart may break with sorrow's stroke,
  But to its latest thrill,
Like diamonds shining when they're broke,
  Religion lights it still!

PREVENTION AND TREATMENT OF THE CHOLERA.

The London correspondent of the National Era gives the following as the substance of the suggestions made by officers of the British Government who have investigated the best modes of preventing and treating the cholera. I embodies the opinions of very eminent men, after an extensive examination of the most competent witnesses:—

I Observe the following sanitary arrangements in your dwelling and its neighborhood:

1. It should be remembered that low and marshy grounds, and the neighborhood of bogs and standing pools, are just the places for the cholera to visit and remain in for a long time.

2. Avoid the neighborhood of uncovered drains, unless they are carefully and frequently cleaned.

3. Let every impurity, animal and vegetable, be quickly removed to a distance from your habitation, such as slaughter-houses, pig-styes, cess-pools, offensive privies, and all other domestic nuisances.

If you can effect the removal of such nuisances, exert yourself at once to do so, and if you cannot succeed, and you value your life, leave the neighborhood.

4. Let every room be daily thrown open for fresh air, and avail yourself of the hours of sunshine, if there be any, and noon, when the air is most likely to be dry.

5. Study great cleanliness in every part of the house, at the same time avoiding damp floors.

6. Let all the bedding and clothing be daily exposed, during winter, to the fire, and during summer, to the heat of the sun.

7. Let crowding of persons within houses and apartments be avoided.

8. Avoid sleeping in low and damp rooms.

9. During the time of danger and alarm from the presence of the cholera, let fires be kept up during the night in sleeping and adjoining apartments.

10. Do not place much reliance on what are termed "disinfectants," such as chlorine, chloride of zinc, nitrate of lead, &c.

It appears from the evidence taken by the Sanitary Commissioners, that these things, however useful in typhus, will not avail in cholera. They will serve to conceal bad odors, but will not touch the cause that produces them. To use them with confident hope of success, is like trying to cure a bad stomach by virtue of peppermint lozenges.

II. Attend to your personal health.

1. Cultivate a cheerful frame of mind, and go about your usual business with confident expectation that, if suitable means are used, you will, through the Divine goodness, be saved from the "pestilence that walketh in darkness." Remember that the cholera is not infectious. You cannot expect bodily health apart from a healthy frame of mind.

2. Let excessive fatigue, and exposure to damp and cold, especially during the night, be avoided.

3. Avoid cold drinks and acid liquors, especially under fatigue, or when the body is heated.

4. Avoid the use of cold acid fruits and vegetables.

5. Let ardent spirits be avoided, and fermented liquors used only in great moderation.

6. Let a poor diet, and the use of impure water in cooking and for drink, be avoided.

7. Let the wearing of wet and insufficient clothing be avoided. The feet particularly should be kept warm and dry.

8. To protect the stomach from cold, wear a broad belt of flannel, which should be frequently changed, next the skin and around the waist.

This has been found serviceable in checking the tendency to bowel complaint, so common during the prevalence of the cholera.

III. On the appearance of the first symptoms of cholera—

1. Recollect that these symptoms are looseness of the bowels, which may be accompanied with pain or entirely free from it. The looseness itself may vary from one to three, six, or more, additional evacuations daily, of the natural color and odor; but, at a more advanced stage, they become rice-colored, and without the natural odor. Fatal delay has often occurred from the notion that cholera must be attended with cramps.

2. Recollect that in the earliest stages of the disease it is often difficult to distinguish between the symptons of a common bowel attack and those of the cholera. No evil can result from too much attention to the former, while fatal consequences may ensue from the neglect of the latter.

3. On the first appearance of the symptoms described—i. e., as soon as you feel uneasiness in the bowels—apply for medical aid. Delay may be death.

4. Should there be unavoidable delay in obtaining medical aid, you should take the medicine directed in the two following prescriptions.

The anti-cholera pills.

Take 4 grains of calomel,
  1 grain of ipecacuanha powder,
  1 grain of extract of opium—
Make into two pills.

Keep them in the house ready for use, and to prevent mistakes, write on the box, "anti-cholera pills."

Do not give these pills to children; but give instead, in sugar and water, one drop of tincture of opium for each year of their age; under twelve years of age, give one grain of calomel; but if above that age, the quantity must be increased.

This is a very powerful medicine, and is recommended only because the disease does not admit of delay in the use of effective remedies. If these pills should be rejected by the stomach, you must repeat them until they are retained.

In two hours afterwards, take the medicine in the following prescription, which, from its adaptation to the cholera, may be termed

The anti-cholera powder.

| | |
|---|---|
| Take prepared chalk, | 1 ounce, |
| Aromatic confection, | 1 1-2 drachm, |
| Powder of gum Arabic, | 2 drachms— |

Take a tea-spoonful for a dose, in a wine-glass full of milk and water, to which add a tea-spoonful of compound tincture of rhubarb, and ten drops of laudanum. This dose should be repeated every time the bowels act.

In the case of children, the quantity should be reduced, and the laudanum omitted.

The patient should lie down in bed, and avoid exertion as much as possible.

Care should be taken to keep the feet warm, by a plentiful supply of warm flannels, and by bottles of hot water.

An embrocation of heated spirits of wine should be rubbed over the feet and legs, and large mustard poultices placed on the stomach and bowels.

There is no necessity to deny the use of cold water, for which there will be a violent thirst; indeed, some recoveries are said to have followed simply from drinking cold water.

Should the patient advance to the blue stage, the most powerful means must be employed; but, from their character, they can be safely used only by a properly qualified medical practitioner. The design of these directions is not to intrust the life of the sufferer to unskillful hands; and they are given in the firm conviction that, if carefully followed, they will assist to save great numbers from the advanced and more dangerous stages of the disease.

THE WAY TO REFORM.

I resided in Philadelphia, in the vicinity of a market. One evening, as I was quietly sitting with my family, I heard a loud rap at my front door. I immediately went to the door, and was surprised, on opening it, to find no one there, I shut the door, and turned to go to the parlor. I had hardly proceeded a yard, before rap, rap, went the door-knocker again. I hastily opened the door, but no one was to be seen. I concluded that some mischievous boy was disposed to have a little sport at my expense, but as I was not willing to be annoyed with mischief, I shut the door, and kept hold of it. Very soon the raps were repeated. I suddenly opened the door; but nobody was to be seen. The evening was dark, and as I stood in the door the raps were repeated for a few seconds. I stood in astonishment; but upon putting my hand upon the knocker, the mystery was unraveled. I found a string tied to it, and my little persecutor was standing behind one of the pillars of the market, with one end in his hand, operating upon my knocker at his pleasure. I closed the door, and went out a back way, passed down the street on a footway, till I got some distance below the lad, when I turned and came up behind him, and took hold of his arm. He was very much alarmed, and began to entreat me to let him go, when the following dialogue took place:

"Well, my lad, thou art amusing thyself at my expense. I want thee to go home with me."

"Oh, you are going to whip me, please let me go, and I will never do so again."

"I will not whip thee, but thou must go home with me."

After repeated assurances that I would not whip him, at length the poor fellow consented; but he had no faith in my promise not to whip him, and went in with the full expectation that he was to be punished. I seated him in the parlor, and took a seat by his side. He was a fine, bright looking little fellow, about thirteen or fourteen years of age.

I asked him if he went to school.

He replied that he did.

"Canst thou read?" I inquired.

"Yes."

"Well, let us read a few chapters in the Bible."

I opened the Bible, read a chapter, and then gave it to him; and I was much pleased to discover that he could read so well.

We spent about an hour in that manner, when I remarked that we had spent the evening very pleasantly together, but I now thought it was about time for him to go home.

"If thy father or mother inquires where thou hast been," I said, "tell them thou hast been spending the evening with Isaac Hopper; and when thou feelest an inclination to be a little mischievous, call upon me. I shall always be pleased to see thee."

He left my house rejoicing, and never troubled me afterward. [Youth's Cabinet.

CANADIAN METHOD OF HUNTING WILD BEES.

The Canadians adopt an ingenious plan for discovering the trees that are stored with honey. They collect a number of bees off the flowers in the forest, and confine them in a small box, at the bottom of which there is a piece of honeycomb, and on the lid a square glass large enough to admit the light into every part. When the bees seem satiated with honey, two or three are allowed to escape, and the direction in which they fly is attentively observed until they become lost in the distance. The bee hunter then proceeds toward the spot where they disappeared, and liberating one or two more of the little captives, he also marks their course. This process is repeated, until the other bees, instead of following the same direction as their predecessors, take the direct opposite course, by which the hunter is convinced that he has overshot the object of his pursuit; for it is a well-known fact, that if you take a bee from a flower situated any given distance south of the tree to which the bee belongs, and carry it in the closest confinement to an equal distance on the north side of the tree, he will, when liberated, fly in a circle for a moment, and then make his course direct to his sweet home, without deviating in the least to the right or to the left. The hunter is now very soon able to detect the tree which contains the honey, by placing on a heated brick a piece of honeycomb, the odor of which, when melting, is so strong and alluring, as to entice the whole colony to come down from their citadel. When the tree is cut down, [the quantity of honey found in its excavated trunk seldom fails to compensate the hunter very amply for his perseverance.

LAND WARRANTS.

Since the Mexican War closed, the Land Warrants given to soldiers have become quite an important article of traffick. As these warrants, which are now selling in New York at $100 current funds, are equal to $200 cash at any Land Office in the country, and will pay for 160 acres of any unentered public land, they are much sought after by emigrants. The following information in regard to them from Thompson's Reporter is valuable:—

Question.—Can the owner of the Warrant enter upon and become the owner of any tract of land belonging to the Government (and not previously settled) in any State or Territory?

Answer.—Yes; any land subject to private entry—that is, any that has been surveyed and offered at public sale, and not exceeding $1 25 per acre.

Question.—When the owner of the Warrant has chosen his tract, and goes to the Land Office to enter his claim, will he receive a deed or its equivalent—be it deed or patent?

Answer.—You designate your quarter section at the Land Office and deposit your Warrant in payment—some of the receivers will give you a memorandum of the transaction—others, we are informed, will give nothing. The Warrant is sent to the General Land Office at Washington, where a "patent" is made out and sent back to the District Land Office for the owner.

Question.—Must he enter his Land Warrant at the Land Office nearest to the land he wishes to locate?

Answer.—All lands, in any District, must be entered in the Office of that District, without any reference to its proximity to other Offices.

Question.—Must he locate and enter his Land Warrant within any certain time?

Answer.—No. Land Warrants of our last war with England are good now; and Mexican War Warrants will be good fifty years hence.

Question.—Is there any reason to fear delay or hindrance, at the Land Office, in getting the Warrants filed—by reason of suspicion that the same is a counterfeit?

Answer.—Not in the least, unless you really have counterfeits, in which case the Land Receiver will as promptly condemn them as we would counterfeit bank notes.

Question.—Could the holder of a Warrant buy out the claim of an actual settler, and then use his Warrant as payment for the land, which the settler had acquired a pre-emption right to buy?

Answer.—There are several ways to "whip the devil around the stump," and "pay for pre-emption rights," with Warrants. Instead of exposing the "tricks of the trade," we would recommend that some of the various land agents (who can always be found close to any Land Office) be employed on such occasions.

SELLING YOUNG WOMEN IN HUNGARY.

Every year, at the feast of St. Peter, which comes on in the latter days of June, the peasantry of this district, (Bihar) meet together at a certain place, for the purpose of a general fair. This fair has a very peculiar interest for the young men and the young maidens, for it is there that, whilst purchasing household utensils and family necessaries, they choose for themselves partners and conclude marriages. The parents bring their marriageable daughters, with each one her little dower acccompanying her, loaded up in a small cart. This dower is, of course, proportionate to the lowly condition of these mountaineers—some sheep, sometimes a few hogs, or even chickens. These girls are attired in their best, and what pieces of gold or silver they may possess, are strung upon a string and neatly attached to the braids of their hair.

Thus fitted out, every girl who desires to find a husband betakes herself to the fair. She quits the house of her father, perhaps for ever, and bids her mother adieu, quite ignorant of what roof is to shelter her, or what fate awaits her journey's end. As to her fortune, it is in the little cart that attends her. The object of her journey is never mistaken, nobody wonders at it, nor is there occasion for a public officer to make a record of the deed. On the other hand, the youths who wish to procure themselves wives, hasten to the fair in the very best skin garments their chest contains. These savage looking chaps, who would be quite enough to make our young ladies run and hide themselves, proceed with a good deal of interest and zest, to inspect the fair mountain lasses that are brought thither by their fathers and their uncles, casting many side glances and wistful looks towards the captivating merchandize. He gives his fancy a free rein, and when he finds one that seems to claim his preference, he at once addresses the parents, asks what they have given her, and asks what price they have set upon the "lot" so exposed for sale—at the same time stating his own property and standing. If the parents ask too much, these gallant "boys" make their own offer, which, if it does not suit the other to agree to, the fond lover passes to some one else.

We may suppose that the proud young man always keeps a "top eye" open to the correspondence of lovliness upon the one hand, and the size of the dower on the other. At last he finds one for whom he is willing to give the price, and a loud clapping of hands together announces to the bystanders that the bargain is complete. What a heavy blow this must be for some lazy rival who has not decided quick enough, who is halting and considering whether she will suit him, and whether she is as lovely and accomplished in household matters as is some of the others. However, the deed is done, and the bargain is completed, and forthwith the young girl (poor thing!) proceeds also to clasp the hands of her future husband. What a moment of interest and anxiety to her! The destiny of her life is sealed by this rude clasp of the hand. In this act she has said, "Yes, I will be yours for life, and I consent to partake of your joys and your troubles, to follow you through weal and through woe!"

The families of the betrothed pair then surround them, offering their congratulations, and at once, without delay, the priest, who is on the ground for the occasion, pronounces the nuptual benediction. The young woman presses the parting hand of that family who have reared her, but of which she is no longer a part—mounts the cart of her new husband, whom but a few hours before she never so much as knew, and escorted by her dower, is conducted to the house thenceforward to be her home.

The Hungarian Government has long tried, but in vain, to suppress these fairs for young girls. Positive orders have been given that they should no longer take place, but such is the force of long-established custom, united to the necessities of this pastoral race, that all such orders have been disregarded. The fair still continues, and every year such cavalcades as we have described may be seen descending into the plains of Kalinasa, there to barter off these precious jewels of the household tree as though they were senseless beeves or mere produce of the soil.

GREEN TEA AND BLACK TEA.

There are two or three opinions in the United States about green tea, which are great mistakes. One is, that the Chinese themselves do not use green tea; this is a mistake. But they do n't use such green tea as is used in England and America. They most commonly pick out the fine and dried parts, and separate them, calling one gun-powder, and another hyson, and another hyson skin.

The second mistake is, that the green tea is made by roasting it on copper plates; which turns it green, and gives it its sharp astringent qualities. All the tea made about Zeetung (a good many thousand pounds) is fried in iron pans.

But if the Chinese do not make green tea on copper pans, they do what is a great deal worse. They mix Prussian blue with what is sold to foreigners, which gives it the greenish blue color it so often has, and something of its astringent qualities. Prussian blue is poison; and the only reason why green tea does those who use it at home so little harm is, that it requires but a small quantity to color a large amount of the tea. But still, small as the quantity is, it does harm; and the people not accustomed to the use of green tea, can hardly sleep after drinking it. You may always tell whether there is Prussian blue in the tea, by drawing off the infusion, and placing it in a white cup. If the infusion is perfectly clear, and of a slightly saffron green color, it is all right; but if it has a dirty appearance, as if there was coloring matter suspended in it, then there is some of the Prussian blue or something else there.

The Chinese put the Prussian blue and such stuffs in the tea, as foreigners have taken a notion that green tea is not green tea unless it is very green. People in England and America do n't like green tea, such as the Chinese use, and won't buy it. Well, the Chinese are very accommodating people, and they laugh in their big sleeves, and say, "Since foreigners want very green tea, we'll give it to them, but they must pay us a little more for making it so green." Little green tea goes to the United States, that has not more or less Prussian blue, or some other drug, added to give it a high color.

Napoleon's Mother Dead in Paris.—We condense the following narrative from La Democratic Pacifique:—Madame Ametiger was an old suttler to the Imperial Guard. She labored in her vocation at most of Napoleon's great battles, frequently showing great interpidity, and once had the good fortune even to save Bernadotte's life. When that able General was elevated to Swedish royalty, Ametiger repaired to Stockholm and received many testimonies of his esteem. She returned to Paris and after the fall of the Empire she was reduced to great poverty, laboring as a chiffoniere (a sort of street rag-picker) but was still so fond of fighting her battles over again, with many a tale of the Emperor, that she acquired the name of "Napoleon's mother." She took the greatest interest in the election of Prince Louis Napoleon, canvassing for votes, and when she was assured of his triumphant election, she was seized with such a transport of joy that apoplexy resulted and she fell dead. Her age was seventy-nine.

Method of Welding Iron, Steel, and Sheet-Iron.—The "Polytechnic Review" has the following account of a new mode of welding metals, which may possess interest for some readers: Melt borax in an earthen vessel, adding to it one-tenth of sal-ammoniac; when these ingredients are properly fused and mixed, pour them out upon an iron plate and let them cool. There is thus obtained a glassy matter, to which is to be added an equal quantity of quicklime. The iron or steel which are to be soldered are first heated to redness; then this compound, first reduced to powder, is laid upon them—the composition melts and runs like sealing-wax; the pieces are then placed in the fire, taking care to heat them at a temperature far below that usually employed in welding; they are then withdrawn and hammered, and the surfaces will be found to be thus perfectly united. The discoverer of this says it never fails, and may also be applied to welding sheet-iron tubes, &c.

The Mecklenberg Jeffersonian says: "Like one of those wondrous rocking stones reared by the Druids, which the finger of a child might vibrate to its centre, yet the might of an army could not move from its place, our constitution is so nicely poised and balanced, that it seems to sway with every breath of opionion, yet so firmly rooted in the hearts and affections of the people, that the wildest storms of treason and fanaticism break over it in vain.

The Indian advocate says that the Juvenile Sewing Society of the 1st Baptist Church, of Louisville, Ky., composed of ten or twelve little girls, paid to their Treasurer a few days since, sixty dollars; it being but a part of the proceeds of their industry for the last six months. They intend to double this amount before the year closes.

La Verite mentions that in several country places, and even in the environs of Paris, are many peasants who to this day believe that the Emperor Napoleon is still living and would accompany his nephew to France!

Dr. Holmes, editor of the Maine Farmer, states that by washing pencil marks over with a solution of gun-cotton in ether, they can be fixed so firmly that India Rubber will not erase them.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., } Principals.
IRA SAYLES, A. M., }

Asisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULATIONS.

1. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.

2. Punctuality in attending all regular Academic exercises will be required.

3. The use of Tobacco, for chewing or smoking, will not be allowed either in or about the Academic buildings.

4. Playing at games of chance cannot be allowed.

5. Using profane language cannot be allowed.

6. The use of any kind of intoxicating drinks cannot be allowed, unless prescribed in case of sickness, by a regular physician.

7. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, cannot be permitted.

8. Gentlemen and ladies of the Institution will not be permitted to visit the rooms of the opposite sex, except in cases of imperious necessity, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.

9. Good order must be maintained at all times, and in all the rooms and halls of the Institution, and in all the intercourse of students with each other.

10. All students are required to retire regularly at the ringing of the bell designated for that purpose, as occasion may require; and to rise at the ringing of the morning bell, also designated.

11. Any room, occupied by students, will, at all times, be subject to the visitation of the Teachers of the Institution, who are required to see that the regulations are complied with.

12. Students will be required to keep their own rooms in good order, and to pay all unnecessary damages, either of rooms or of furniture furnished with the rooms.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

GOVERNMENT.

The Government of the students will be in the hands of the Principals, and will be strictly and steadily exercised, and at the same time, strictly parental. The object of our academic government being to secure the greatest possible amount of physical, intellectual, and moral good to the students themselves, regularity and order of exercises, and good and wholesome citizens to society. No unwarrantable means will be made use of to enforce the observance of the above regulations; yet our constant endeavor will be, to make the means resorted to as effective as human means may be.

Parents who place their children in this Institution, and all students who are sufficiently old to understand the necessity of order, cannot be too well assured that the foregoing regulations form the most essential part of the contract between them and us; and that whatever student wantonly violates them, and shows himself incorrigibly determined on pursuing his waywardness, will be expelled from the privileges of the Institution, and will not be permitted to re-enter it again, without special proof of reformation. Nor will an expelled student have any deduction made from full term charges.

Farther, parents are requested not to place money for expenses, in the hands of students who are not old enough to use money with discretion and economy. Either of the Principals, or the Book-keeper of the Institution, will act as fiscal guardian of such students without charge.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

EXPENSES.

| | |
|---|---|
| Board, per term, | from $14 50 to $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | 1 50 |
| Washing, | 2 50 |
| Fuel, spring and fall, 75 cents, winter, | 1 50 |
| Tuition, | from $3 50 to 5 00 |
| Lights, | 1 50 |

THE SABBATH ENFORCED BY CHRIST.

From Begg's Treatise on the Sabbath.

SECTION IX.—The observance of the Sabbath enforced by the example and precepts of Christ. [Concluded.

There remains only one other expression in which our Lord himself refers to the Sabbath, to which I would now allude. It occurs in His prophetic annunciation of the desolations upon Israel, and the events connected with His glorious return. "But pray ye that your flight be not in winter, neither on the Sabbath day." Matt. 24 : 20. I have in a former work, (my Letters on the Saviour's Return,) in seeking to elucidate this important prophetic chapter, stated reasons for conceiving that there may be here an allusion to the great tribulation which ushers in the sabbatism at the coming of the Lord. In doing so, I have been considered to have mistaken the meaning of the words—and possibly it is so. But if our Lord be here speaking of the events connected with the destruction of Jerusalem by Titus, and the fate of Jewish Christians, as is generally believed, these words will then be an additional evidence of the continuance of the seventh day as the Sabbath, long after the supposed change at the resurrection of Christ. If such a change as is asserted was contemplated by our Lord, would He thus continue to speak just as before of the Sabbath, and predict its continuance as such forty years after His resurrection and ascension, when Jerusalem was beseiged? Would He have thus taught them to pray that their flight should not be upon the Sabbath, if it had long before lost its place as the Lord's Sabbath? Or would He still, without remark, call that day the Sabbath, if, as the church maintains, it had previously given its place unto another day? Or, if we should suppose that the first day of the week was then to have the place of the seventh, is it consistent with the integrity of our Lord's character, to believe that He would thus speak of it as the Sabbath, without one word of explanation?—that although He used words which immediately suggested to them what they had always known as the Sabbath, and which His own example and instructions had all tended to confirm, are we to suppose that He would have thus spoken in a way which must have deceived them, if He was Himself looking forward to a time when the word "Sabbath" would be applicable only to another day? Would He speak thus of prayer in regard to the Sabbath, when yet He meant a day which they knew not by the name or under the character of the Sabbath?—and all this without a word of explanation by Him—nay, what would have been still more remarkable, without a word of explanation by the Evangelist, who long afterwards put this His discourse upon record. And if the Lord here speaks prospectively of the same Sabbath which He himself observed, as having place forty years after His ascension to heaven, what becomes of the alledged change at His resurrection? Or are we to suppose that at a still later period men were to be authorized to make the substitution which has since been effected? No such authority is recorded in the New Testament—no provision is made for it. None even of the men of that age stand up making claim to such authority, or to exercise it. The change is the work of a later age.

One other lesson we are taught through the example of Christ, and the history of that example as thus recorded by the Evangelists. It is sometimes urged by objectors, and I doubt not is sometimes felt as a difficulty by honest inquirers, that through the lapse of ages since the creation of the world, the knowledge as to which day of the week really is the seventh which God has blessed, may have been entirely lost. Looking back upon the generations of unfaithful as well as of faithful men, there is felt an insecurity as to whether some circumstance may not have occurred, accidentally or intentionally, so altering the world's chronology as that the day which we call the first may not actually be the second, or that which we call the seventh may not rather be the sixth.

Attention to our Lord's history is fitted to remove such doubts, and tends to establish the correctness of our present computation. We have seen, that God at first sanctified the seventh day, the day on which He rested from creation work. We have also seen, that two thousand years after, and when we might have had apprehension whether the oppression and idolatry of Egypt had not effaced from the minds of the people of Israel, the knowledge of the precise day which God had blessed, that by the mouth of Moses, in the wilderness, in very express terms, the Omniscient testified to all, "To-morrow IS the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord." This day the Jews while in Babylon, and both before and since that period, continued to keep in memory, (never having been charged with changing it,) till the time of our Lord's appearance amongst men;—and He then certified, and His Evangelists have left witness unto us, that it really was "the Sabbath," which the Jews recognized as such, however mistaken their notions concerning its duties;—the apostles afterwards, as recorded in the Acts, also identified the day which the Jews still observed, as well as the disciples, as the true Sabbath;—and from that time to this, we have the accordant testimony of all, as to which is the seventh day and which the first. The Jew and the Gentile, though in direct hostility, have always agreed as to the order of the days of the week. No diversity of opinion exists on this point between the Jews and the Christian Church, although the former acknowledge the seventh day as the Sabbath of the Lord, and the latter have substituted the first in its stead.

We have thus then gone minutely over the events and detailed instructions in the history of the life of Christ, which tend to the illustration of this question; and we have seen, that neither did He Himself put away the Sabbath of divine appointment, nor have any of the Evangelists informed us of His instructions to any other to do so, either at or after His decease, or resurrection, or ascension. "As a Son, He was faithful to Him that appointed Him." He continually did the will of God; and, at the close of His life of faith, could say to His disciples, "I have kept my Father's commandments;" and, "all things that I have heard of my Father, I have made known unto you." John 15 : 10, 15. Even to His enemies, with all their quick-sightedness to discover occasions of blame, He could thus appeal, "Which of you convinceth me of sin?" They had watched for His halting in regard to this very matter. Every miraculous cure He performed upon the Sabbath was viewed with the jaundiced eye of envy; yet they never once blame Him for disrespect to the Sabbath of their observance, otherwise than by His works of mercy done upon it. When directly appealed to, they could not do so. They could not say, either that He encouraged its profanation now, or predicted a time when its sanctions should be disregarded of the Lord, or allowed to be discontinued by His disciples. Not a single word escapes His lips, or falls from the pen of any one of His Evangelists, of a change being anticipated, either when the events they relate had occurred, or when their history at a later period was recorded.

The Gospels were all written after our Lord's crucifixion—some of them long after His resurrection and ascension to heaven—yet in none of them is there the slightest hint of a change already effected, or in future meditated. As in regard to other matters, we find sometimes in one, sometimes in another, greater enlargement or more numerous details—so that what may be wanting in one is supplied by another—but in vain do we search them all for any authority of the Redeemer for neglect of that commandment which says, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God." The Gospel according to John, believed to have been the latest written, and supplementary to the other three, giving more full information on some important points, is by many supposed to have been composed 35 years after the ascension of the Redeemer; by others, it is placed even other 30 years later than this. Yet it records nothing of a changed or a changing Sabbath. And Luke states, as the very purpose for which he wrote, "that thou mightest know the certainty of those things wherein thou hast been instructed;" of this he says he "had perfect understanding," (Luke 1 : 3, 4,) but neither does he inform us of any modification of the fourth commandment, any more than of the first.

We have, then, seen the doings, and heard the instructions, of Him who spake as never man spake—who came to reveal the mind of the Father unto us—and who is set forth as our great example, that we should walk in His steps. We have heard His commendation of the Sabbaths as no bondage under which the Jews had once been placed, and from which they might now rejoice that they were altogether set free. In His knowledge, it has been a day of blessing from the beginning, and for all, for "the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath." Let us beware, therefore, of doing anything that would tend to deprive ourselves or others of what our God has so bountifully bestowed.

Nor is this all. We have also the Saviour's direct precept bearing on the subject. Hear Him exclaim in the most solemn manner, reinculcating Old Testament instruction with all the authority of His love, "Think not that I am come to destroy the law or the prophets; I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill. For verily I say unto you, till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all shall be fulfilled. Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, THE SAME SHALL BE CALLED GREAT in the kingdom of heaven." Matt. 5 : 17—19. Read this especially in connection with the verse immediately going before, "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Ver. 16. The light by which we are called to glorify our God, is that of willing and filial obedience to His commandments, even the least. "Whosoever, therefore, shall break one of these least commandments," contained in His holy Law, sustaineth loss, as he is found thus unfaithful to his Father and his God. "For verily I say unto you," is the exclamation of Him who fully knew and appreciated all its righteousness, and all His Father's love therein to men, "till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law till all be fulfilled." God's commandments are pure, and the obligations of His Law are universal. Those who know and feel this, are called to manifest its truth to others; but O where is the light of His church in this respect, shining before men, teaching them to glorify our Father who is in heaven, by respect to His authority and obedience to His commandments. Hear the Saviour set forth, without any exception, what is implied in the whole ten commandments: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind; this is the first and great commandment; and the second is like unto it, Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Matt. 22 : 37—40. And while we give praise to the Lord, for having, through the lips of His well-beloved Son, set forth the true design of the Sabbath; and while we admire the benevolence which characterizes its blessed enactments, as you follow Him from synagogue to synagogue, let the beneficence of God find its true and proper place in your heart, by yielding yourself unto the faithful observance of the day which He has thus doubly sanctified for us.

SERENITY IN DANGER.

In rounding Cape Horn, a few months ago, a vessel, whose passengers and crew amounted to fifty persons, was brought into circumstances of extreme peril. An irresistible gale, which had been blowing for some days, was driving them towards the shore, and at eight o'clock in the evening, the Captain's computations assuring him that about three in the morning the ship would strike, and all aboard descend into the watery grave, he thought it right to inform the passengers of their danger. His own heart was heavy too; he had beloved relatives in England, of whom he thought with emotion, while all on board was silence, and the wind continued to blow with unabated fury. "Never shall I forget the scene," he writes, "when at night Mrs. A——, one of the cabin passengers, kissed her children before they were put to bed, then turning to me, with tears in her eyes, said, 'Captain, shall I ever kiss those dear children again?'" He had no words of encouragement to offer! The prospect of speedy death for all on board seemed certain; but the language of the Psalmist occurred to his mind—"Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for thou art with me; thy rod and thy staff they comfort me." Entering his cabin, he sat down and wrote as follows:—

Shall I fear when I am dying?
  Shall I shrink from death's cold tide?
Hark! an angel voice replying,
  Jesus Christ is at thy side.
    Evil from thy path shall flee,
    He is here to comfort thee.

In my heart his love I'll cherish,
  Sinking in the swelling sea;
Father, shall thy children perish,
  Who have put their trust in thee?
    No; thy Son has cross'd the flood,
    And will bring them home to God.

Still my hope, my strength shall rally,
  When I yield my farewell breath;
Through the gloom of that dim valley,
  Darkened by the shade of death,
    Nothing shall my heart then fear,
    Christ, my Lord, is ever near.

At about 11 o'clock, however, the gale broke; the wind shifted, and now the exertion made to avoid the shore was successful, and gratitude succeeded to fear. "Next morning," says the Captain, "when I saw the lines I had written the night before, I was led to shed tears over them; I found the Lord had indeed been with me, and had answered my prayers."

ON TRACTS.

It is my conviction, that more will have to be done through the press, than by any other means. Lecturing and preaching are great things, but they are not alone great. They can do something which the press cannot do; but the press can do much which they cannot do. Tracts can go everywhere. Tracts never blush. Tracts know no fear. Tracts never stammer. Tracts never stick fast. Tracts never tire. Tracts never die. Tracts can be multiplied without end by the press. Tracts can travel at little expense. They want nothing to eat. They require no lodgings. They run up and down like the angels of God, blessing all, giving to all, and asking no gift in return.

You can print tracts of all sizes, on all subjects, in all places, and at all hours. And they can talk to one as well as a multitude, and to a multitude as well as one. They require no public room to tell their story in. They can tell it in the kitchen or in the shop, the parlor or the closet, in the railway carriage or in the omnibus, on the broad high-way or in the foot-path through the field; and they dread no noisy or tumultuous interruption.

They take no notice of scoffs, or jeers, or taunts; of noisy folly, or malignant rage. They bear all things, suffer all things, and take harm for nothing. They can talk even when the noise is so great as to drown all other voices; and they stop when they are bid, or at least when they are done.

No one can betray them into hasty or random expressions. And they will wait men's time and suit themselves to men's occasions and convenience. They will break off at any point, and begin at any moment where they broke off. And though they will not always answer questions, they will tell their story twice or thrice, or four times over, if you wish them. And they can be made to speak on every subject, and on every subject they may be made to speak wisely and well.

They can, in short, be made vehicles of all truth, the teachers and reformers of all classes, the regenerators and benefactors of all lands.

JEFFERSON'S HOUSE, DEATH, GRAVE, &c.

On the summit that commands this enchanting view, the mansion was built by Jefferson when he had wealth to lavish on his cultivated tastes. The house was one hundred feet long, and of peculiar form and proportion. You enter a wide and lofty hall, that was once adorned with works of art which he had selected with a master's skill, in the high places of the earth; then you pass on to the spacious dining-room, with polished inlaid floor; then to his library, and study, and parlor. Ascend this flight of stairs, not wide enough for more than one to walk up at a time, and you find the chamber where he died on the 4th of July, 1826. The bed was in a recess, the end of which contained two cross pieces, and on this was thrown the mattress on which he laid himself to die. It was the gloomiest place—that dead room—that I was ever in; there was the strangest gathering of thoughts, crowded upon each other, and each claiming to be the true emotion for the hour and spot. I thought of liberty and revolutions—of human greatness and glory—of philosophy, and of religion, and infidelity, and death, and hereafter,—of he soul of a mighty man struggling with the fetters, and rushing away with them into the darkness of an untried future, to the presence of the Infinite, in whom the wisdom of man and angels is but a drop that falls in the ocean—before whom the soul of the unholy shrinks away, and finds the rags of human glory and the fig-leaves of philosophy to be no covering when the eye of the Holy One searches the spirit. Such thoughts as these pressed me as I stood in the chamber whence the soul of Jefferson had fled to judgment.

The mansion, now owned by Capt. Levy, is falling into decay; it was sold, and all his furniture, Jefferson having died insolvent, and almost the only relic left of a man whose name is identified with his country's history, as a devoted patriot and distinguished President, is a bust of Voltaire, which stands here a tutelar divinity of this deserted, dilapidated house.

As you ascend the mountain, you pass an enclosure, without a gate, that contains the grave of Jefferson; and a more neglected, wretched burial-place, you will seek in vain. If Campbell's last man had been buried there, he could not have been less cared for.

The wife of Jefferson, torn from him by death, ten years after their early marriage, lies here.

A granite obelisk, battered much by pilgrims, but without name or epitaph, is doubtless the monument of Jefferson. It was here placed by his executors, and the panel on which was to be inscribed the epitaph he wrote for himself, has never been inserted in the stone. I was told it was lying, with the iron gates destined for the enclosure, on the banks of the river where they were landed, and that no man has troubled himself to see that they reached their destination.

THE SAILOR MISSIONARIES.

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform."

In the South Pacific Ocean, lat. 13, is a beautiful cluster of islands called the Navigator's. they were first discovered by Bougainville, eighty years ago, and were so called from the circumstance that the inhabitants had a great number of canoes, and showed an admirable skill in their management. They are surrounded by coral reefs, and seem to have been of volcanic origin. The people are numerous, well built, and active. Their villages, sloping up the hill-sides, or half buried in the shady vallies, present a beautiful picture as seen from the sea. Pigs, poultry, bread-fruit, bananas, and oranges, abound.

About the year 1828, a reckless sailor, preferring a chance among the savage natives, to the hard usage he received on board a British whale-ship, ran away, and found a home on one of these islands. The natives finding him capable of teaching them many things useful, treated him with marked respect and kindness. The old chief gave him one of his daughters for a wife. In a year or two after, two native missionaries, educated by the "Martyr Missionary," Williams, arrived there from the island of Rarotonga. Through their instrumentality, the sailor became a changed, praying man, and immediately joined them in their various labors for the temporal and spiritual welfare of the people; and subsequently took charge of this missionary station.

Three years ago, another young sailor deserted from a British whale-ship, and as good providence directed, fell into the hands of this Sailor Missionary. Being the son of a minister of the Church of England, he had received instruction in the things of God in his earlier years, but no lesson every went to his heart till the Holy Spirit sent home the teachings of his brother sailor in this distant island of the sea. Seven years he had wandered a prodigal from his father's house, and native land; and now for the first time was constrained to cry—"God be merciful to me a sinner." He also became a "new creature," and joined his brother sailor, and brother in Christ, in the missionary work. The natives built him a large and convenient house, in which he has taught school. The mission is located in a village of eight hundred inhabitants. A good meeting-house has been built, and a church organized, with eighty members at the present time. Every family in the village observes morning and evening worship. In November last he left in an American whale-ship, to visit once more the home and friends of his youth. The other day he arrived in New York; and having spent a short time at the Sailor's Home, on the 31st of August he sailed as a cabin passenger in the fine ship Lebanon for Liverpool. In the Spring he purposes to return to his adopted home in the South Seas, where he hopes to spend his days as a missionary in the service of his Divine Master. These two sailors are the only white persons on the island. "Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first to bring thy sons from far." [Sailor's Mag.

ANECDOTE OF RICHARD ROTHWELL.

This excellent person was in his youth noted for his audacity, intrepidity, and great bodily strength, by means of which, in robbing fish-ponds, deer-parks, and other exploits, he became the terror of his neighborhood. After his conversion, so much of his old character remained, as to stimulate him to extraordinary zeal and boldness in his ministerial duties. From the peculiar style of his preaching, he was denominated the Rough Hewer. When the excellent Lady Darcy appointed him to the living of Bernard Castle, in the county of Durham, she expressed her fears about the risks he incurred amongst a race of men almost diabolical, in point of ferocity and depravity. 'Madam, he replied, 'if I thought I should not meet the devil there, I would not go. He and I have long been at odds in other places, and I hope we shall not agree there.' He did in fact encounter in this situation, singular obstacles and dangers, but his labors eventually were so extensively useful, that he, as well as Bernard Gilpin, obtained the designation of 'The apostle of the north.'

WILL THERE BE FLOWERS IN HEAVEN?

"Where is that radiant shore?
Shall we not seek it and weep no more?"

I sat alone in my school room. The little busy beings who sat about me all day had taken their dinner baskets upon their arms, and trudged off over the hills, in the paths which led to their several homes.

My desk was strewed with withered wild flowers. Some were the offerings of infantile hands, while others had been brought in by the botanical class for analysis. In the recitation of that class, I had dwelt for a longer time that night than I was wont, upon the beauty of the vegetable world, and the goodness and wisdom of its Creator. I spread before them the beautifully tinted corolla of the field-lilly, and showed them its thread-like stamens crowned with golden anthers, and its curious pistils. From another wild flower, I drew the delicate and nicely notched calyx, and explained to them its various uses, and asked if man with all his boasted powers, had ever planned or executed anything one half so lovely.

I turned over the pages of God's holy Word, and read a description of the riches of Solomon, "who yet," I continued, "in all his glory, was not arrayed like one of these." If it is out of our power to make anything as beautiful as the flowers we crush under our feet at every step, should we not be humble?"

A breathless interest pervaded the little group.

"Are there flowers in heaven?" inquired Frances, a bright little girl near me.

"All is beautiful there," I replied, "and if flowers can add anything to the beauty of the golden courts, we shall surely find them there."

"Oh!" said she, "I hope the angels will wear wreaths of them; I am sure I shall love better to look upon them, and to hear them sing."

These were among her last words, as I parted from her that evening. The next day Frances was not in the accustomed seat. I inquired for her, and they told me she was not well. I never saw her again. A few days after, her coffin passed my window, covered with a black pall, and followed by a train of mourners. I watched them, until they disappeared in the circuitous road which led to the village grave yard, and then turned away with a sigh, and said, "Yes, Frances, there are flowers in heaven, for you are there."

A SMALL MATTER TURNED TO A GOOD ACCOUNT.

When Dr. Rice was engaged in making collections for the Theological Seminary in Virginia, on one occasion, when he had presented his cause, an old lady came to him, making an apology, hoping he would not be offended by what she offered him, and pleading her poverty as the reason for not making a more valuable donation. She then showed him a hank of yarn, which she said was all she had to give, and if he could make any thing out of it, she begged him to accept it.

He of course received it with kindness and politeness, and the next time he presented the cause he was advocating, he related to the audience the circumstance that had occurred, and then held up the gift which he had received. The hearers were very much moved by what they heard and saw, and one gentleman immediately cries out, "I'll give you fifty dollars for it." Receiving it, he sells it to a third for the same price, and so on with perhaps all the wealthy men of the congregation. Finally the Doctor himself again gets possession of the treasure, takes it with him to the next place he visits, and repeats the same story with similar results. The hank of yarn proved to be one of the largest gifts he received. [N. O. Presb.

THE PRAYERLESS MOTHER.

"My dear Julia," said a pious old lady to her little niece, as the child came to her room to bid her good morning, "have you thanked God for your sweet sleep last night?" "No, aunty, I forgot it." "I am sorry," said the aunt. "Do you know that all good people love to pray?" "No, aunty, my mother is good, and I never saw her pray." "But," said the aunt, "you are not in her room all the morning, and I think your mother prays to God when you are not there." "Aunty, I have slept in my mother's room, and stayed there every moment until breakfast, and I know my mother never prays."

Little do parents think how closely and constantly they are observed by their children, and how truly their children estimate their character. How little do they realize the influence they are always exerting on their children, for good or evil, for time and eternity. Let not your child say, "My parents never pray."

READING ABOUT MISSIONS.

Mr. Whitehead took a deep interest in the Wesleyan missions. Monthly he purchased the Notices, and read them with tears and many prayers, and always contributed likewise according to his means. About a year before he died, he called on the Superintendent of the Circuit, and, after a flood of tears, said, "I and my wife sat up most of the night reading the Missionary Notices, and we are distressed to find that the Committee cannot do all the good they wish, for want of funds. The missionaries in the West Indies are dying with excessive labor, and the people are left as sheep without a shepherd. What can be done? My wife and I have resolved to give half a sovereign extra." Laying down the money, he begged it might be sent to the Committee, saying, "The missionaries must not die." This was at a time when they were subsisting on an annuity of ten shillings per week. Thus, "in a great trial of affliction, the abundance of their joy and their deep poverty abounded to the riches of their liberality." [Rev. J. Wesh.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 16, 1848.

THE PROPOSED PUBLISHING ESTABLISHMENT.

One of the most important questions brought before the Eastern Association, at its meeting in May last, related to the condition and prospects of our denominational publications. It was then stated, that the Sabbath Recorder had been published nearly four years, under the direction of a few brethren associated together for that specific and sole purpose, and that there was a desire on the part of many others to have its proprietorship extended, so that it might become in fact the property of the denomination, and form the nucleus of a denominational publishing establishment. After a free interchange of views upon the subject, and an assurance from the brethren associated that they were quite willing to make any arrangement which would be likely better to promote the general interests, the Association passed the following resolution:—

Whereas, our experience for years past in the publishing department, has convinced us that in order to meet the growing wants of the denomination, we need a more ample and permanent publishing organization than we have ever had; therefore—

Resolved, That we invite the several sister Associations each to appoint three delegates to meet with the same number appointed by this Association, at New Market, N. J., on the 5th day of September next, to mature a plan for a Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Establishment.

Lucius Crandall and Geo. B. Utter were appointed a Committee to lay the subject of the above resolution before the other Associations, in order to secure the appointment by them of delegates to meet those appointed by the Eastern Association. They accordingly laid it before the Central and Western Associations, both of which bodies appointed the specified number of delegates. The Committee were prevented from laying the matter before the South-Western and Wisconsin Associations, by the lateness of the meeting of the former, and a mistake as to the time of meeting of the latter.

In compliance with their appointments, the following brethren met at New Market, N. J., on the 5th day of September, to consider the best means of promoting and giving permanency to our publishing interests, viz: Lucius Crandall, David Dunn, and T. B. Stillman, of the Eastern Association; Eli S. Bailey, Wm. B. Maxson, and James Bailey, of the Central Association; and N. V. Hull and John A. Langworthy, of the Western Association, (Leman Andrus, the third from the Western Association, being unable to attend.) These delegates formed themselves into a Convention, by appointing Eli S. Bailey, Moderator, and James Bailey, Secretary. The first question which came up was in regard to the necessity of a new organization. The subject was freely discussed, and a resolution was at length unanimously passed, that such an organization is needed, and that it is expedient for the Convention to prepare a Constitution for it. There was some difficulty in deciding what form of organization would best suit the genius of the denomination, and at the same time answer the requirements of the general law passed by the State of New York for the incorporation of benevolent societies, under which it is proposed to act. It was finally agreed, that no form would answer all purposes so well as a regular Society, and accordingly the following Constitution was prepared, and received the hearty sanction of all the delegates:—

ART. 1.—This Society shall be known by the name of "The Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society."

ART. 2.—The object of this Society shall be to print and publish such periodicals, books, &c., as shall meet the wants of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination, and promote the cause of Christ generally.

ART. 3.—Each contributor of five dollars may become a Member of the Society, and each contributor of twenty-five dollars may become an Honorary Director, with the privilege of participating in the deliberations of the Board of Managers.

ART. 4.—The Society shall hold an Annual Meeting, at which it shall elect a President, a Vice President, a Corresponding Secretary, a Recording Secretary, and a Treasurer, who, together with four others elected for the purpose, shall constitute a Board of Managers to conduct the business of the Society, having power to make their own by-laws, and to fill any vacancies that may occur in their body.

ART. 5.—The Board of Managers shall meet quarterly for the transaction of business, at such time and place as shall have been appointed at a previous meeting. The Recording Secretary shall call extra meetings of the Board, whenever any three members of the Board shall request him to do so.

ART. 6.—The minutes of each meeting of the Board shall be signed by the Chairman and the Recording Secretary.

ART. 7.—The first Annual Meeting of the Society shall be held in the City of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, 1849, (25th day of the month;) and subsequent Annual Meetings may be held at such times and places as the Society shall direct. At these meetings the Board of Managers shall present a Report of their transactions, together with the Treasurer's account.

ART. 8.—Should there at any time, on the presentation of the Annual Report of the Board of Managers, be a surplus on hand, over and above what may, in the judgment of the Board, be required to meet the wants of the establishment, the Society shall divide such surplus in equal sums among the following benevolent objects, viz: Missions, the circulation of religious Tracts, the education of candidates for the ministry, and the support of indigent superannuated ministers or their widows and orphans. Should the Society for any reason ever be dissolved, its property, if any, shall be divided in the same manner as above provided in case of surplus.

ART. 9.—This Constitution may be altered at any Annual Meeting of the Society, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

A Publishing Establishment under the direction of such a Society as this Constitution proposes, will have many advantages over any other arrangement on which our publishing has ever been done. This arrangement will secure a capital upon which to do business from the sums paid for memberships, thus protecting our publishing interests from the embarrassments to which they have heretofore been subject. It will give permanency to those interests, by placing them under the direction of a Society, instead of irresponsible individuals. It will be more likely to secure general coöperation than if the business was all done by a few persons for their own advantage. It will give to brethren in every part of the denomination a voice in the election of men to carry on our publishing operations. It will secure to benevolent objects the profits of the business, when it becomes sufficiently extensive to yield profits, instead of their flowing into the pockets of individuals. It will, in short, place our publications upon such a footing that every friend of the cause will see it to be for his interest to increase their circulation, and to oppose any movement which would be likely to operate against them. Who, that has the means, would hesitate to pay the price of membership for the sake of securing such advantages? We hope no one. Next week we shall commence publishing the names of members, and we expect to have more or less new names to publish each week until the time fixed for the election of officers. The money will not be needed, of course, until after the meeting of the Society in May next; but it is important that a large list of members should be made up previous to that time, and the sooner the better. Send in your names.

AN OLD WITNESS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

This year will complete THREE CENTURIES since the old folio Bible I now have before me was printed. Three hundred years! How many of those who have read this book have profitably learned its precepts? It is an old witness against many generations of those who "would none of its reproofs," but have passed on to eternity and the judgment unprepared.

It is a witness still; and when I read its sacred lines, I feel as it were the solemn admonition, "All flesh is as grass." The frail paper endures, but the printer, the binder, and the readers, have alike perished from off the earth. The worm, that hath destroyed the treasures of kings and princes, hath spared this. Time, which hath buried nations and thrones in oblivion—which hath discovered and peopled new continents, since this very book was printed—hath not mowed down its living form, nor shorn it of one of its leaves. It is all here. By what providence hath it escaped the fires and floods that have swept over city and country within three hundred years? What city hath not been burned, what house not destroyed, since this volume was published? Yet it lives!

A brief description will perhaps gratify your readers. It is printed in black letter. Following an illuminated calendar of four pages, is this table:—

¶ These thinges ensuying are joyned with thys present volume of the Byble:

¶ A Kalendar with an Almanack.

¶ A description and successe of the kynges of Juda and Jerusalem, declaring when & under what kinges every prophet lyved, and what notable thinges happened in their tymes.

¶ An exhortation to the study of the holy Scriptures, gathered out of the Bible.

¶ The summe and content of all the holy scripture, both of the Olde and New Testament.

¶ A table for to fynde many of the chiefe & principall matters conteyned in the Byble.

¶ The names of all the bokes of the Byble, with the content of the chapters.

¶ A brief rehersall, declaryng how longe the worlde hath endured from the creacion of Adam unto this presente yeare of our Lord, MDXLIX.

¶ And also prologues to the v bokes of Moyses, and before the prophete Jonas, and to every of the foure Evangelistes, and before every Epistle of the New Testamente, and after every chapter of the booke are there added many playne annotacions and exposicions of such places as vnto the simple unlearned seame harde to understand.

The articles noted in the first six paragraphs of this table, with the prologue to the first book, occupy thirty-four pages. Then follows the book of Genesis. The initial letter of each chapter is embelished, similar to some of the present day, and occasionally an illustration is thrown in; such, for instance, as Adam and Eve with the serpent coiled on the body of a tree between them—Cain killing Abel—the Ark, &c. The Address to the King (Edward VI.) is signed Edmunde Becke. The prologues are by Wm. Tindale, and would make an interesting volume if collected by themselves. The division of chapters is about the same as in our translation; but there is no division into verses. The notes are often very interesting, and are appended at the end of every chapter. I will transcribe the notes to the second chapter of Genesis, and the first paragraph, answering to the three first verses, as follows:

EXTRACTS.

Thus was heaven and erth fynyshed, with all their apparel;[a] and in the seventh day God ended hys worke whiche he had made, & rested in the seventh day from all his workes which he had made. And god blessed the seventh daye & sanctified it, for in it he rested from all his workes which he had created & made.[b]

(a.) Note.

Thys apparel is the sunne, the mone, with other planetes, and starres, for the heaven he speaketh of here is that we call the skye or welken.

(b.) Note.

In this place, to blesse and to sanctifie, is the same that is commanded in the xx. of Exod., as appeareth by that which followeth, For in it he rested, &c. Whate was ment by this rest in the seventh day, the spirite of god sheweth to all them that desyre the spiritual rest of the Lord, even the fynall ende and rest of all thynges, to ensue immediately after the end of syx thousand yeres after the creation of the worlde. So that, yf it were possyble for men to have the just numbre of the yeres of the world from Adam to Chryst, they might certenly assygne the laste daye. But because that daye must come sudenly, GOD hath not suffered the true computation and accompt to be had, no, not to hys well beloved Apostles would Chryst shewe anye certentie of that day otherwise than by signes.

THE SENSE VARIED BY PUNCTUATION.

Acts 19.—It fortuned, whyle Apollo was at Corinthus, that Paule passed throwe ye utter costes, and came to Ephesus, & found certayne disciples, and sayd unto them: Have ye receyved the holy ghoste sence ye believed? And they sayd unto hym: No, we have not heard whether there be anye holy Ghost or no. And he said unto them: Wherewyth were ye then baptized? And they said, With John's baptisme. Then sayed Paule: John verelye baptized with the baptism of repentance, saying unto the people that they should beleve on hym whych should come after him: that is, on Christe Jesus. When they hearde that, they were baptised in the name of the Lorde Jesus, and Paul layed his handes upon them, and the holy ghoste came on them, and they spake with tonges and prophecied, & all the men were about xii.

Matt. 28: 1.—The saboth daye at eveñ, which dauneth the morrowe after y$^{e}$ saboth &c.

Mark 16: 2.—And very early in the morning the next day after the saboth day, they came to the sepulchre. Verse 9—When Jesus was rysen the morowe after the saboth day, he appeared fyrst to Marye Magdalene.

Luke 24.—On the morowe after the saboth, early in the morning.

John 20.—The morowe after the saboth daye came Mary Magdalen. Verse 19—The same day at night, which was the morowe after the saboth day.

Acts 20: 7.—And on the morowe after the saboth day, y$^{e}$ disciples came together for to breake bread, and Paul preached unto them.

1 Cor. 16.—Of the gatheringe for the sainctes, as I have ordained in the congregations of Galatia, even so do ye; upon some Sonday, let every one of you put asyde at home, and laye up, what-sover he thinketh meate, &c.

EXTRACTS FROM MR. CARPENTER'S JOURNAL.

The following extracts from a journal kept by Mr. Carpenter, are taken from a letter dated Shanghai, April 14, 1848:—

March 7.—Visited the tribute-grain storehouses, also the temple of Confucius. The tribute-grain is rice. Large quantities are brought here, and afterwards sent to Pekin. The store-houses consist of long simple one-story buildings, which, together with the open areas connected with them, occupy a space of an acre or more. The grain is brought in and carried out in coarse sacks, each containing about fifty catties, (a catty is about 12 ounces of our weight.) The temple of Confucius, with its courts, covers a space of 1 1-2 to 2 acres. The principal temples on the ground are two, diverse from each other. One of them contains a room fifty-five feet square, and about twenty-five high. We saw the blood of the animals offered in sacrifice last night. The flesh is laid on a strong frame, about a foot and a half high, and some light materials burnt on the floor by the side of it. The animals offered are one ox, one sheep, and one hog. The offering is made twice a year. The first on the second day of the second Chinese month, the other on the eighth month. The flesh of the ox is divided among the mandarin worshipers, 5 to 10 catties each; that of the other animals is divided among the other worshipers, one catty each. In one long building were arranged a large number of tablets, containing, as I suppose, the names of eminent worshipers of Confucius. In one of the front courts is a semi-circular pool of stagnant water, with a stone bridge over it. The whole affair appears ancient, but in good repair. Before it shall rot down, may it echo with the praises of one greater than Confucius.

11th.—Visited Dr. Medhurst, Dr. Lockhart, and Rev. Mr. Muirhead, who had just escaped the jaws of death. They had visited Ching-poo, about 30 miles from Shanghai, as the two first-mentioned had frequently done before; and having finished their work, they had started for home. When about two miles from the town, they were overtaken and overpowered by a band of robbers, who beat and bruised them considerably. The ruffians are said to be, not the inhabitants of Ching-poo, but boatmen, who, by an act of the Government, had been thrown out of employment. They had been for a long time employed in conveying from this place to Pekin, the tribute-grain, by the inland route. But this year, in consequence of the shallowness of these waters, the grain is taken by sea. Thus, it is said, fifteen thousand men are turned out of business, and they belong to the province next north of this. The missionaries were rescued by the authorities, and escorted to their boat, which lay about five miles from town.

14th.—The British Consul has informed the Taouti of this place, that unless the late offenders shall be brought to justice within forty-eight hours, he would stop the duty on British ships and not allow the grain-junks to proceed from this to Pekin. A bold step.

24th.—The Taouti having failed to bring the robbers to justice, a ship of war has been dispatched to Nankin to convey letters to the Viceroy of this province. Six hundred grain junks, loaded with rice, are waiting for permission to proceed to Pekin, and no obstacle but a little English ten-gun brig lying in the river. At this season of the year the quantity of shipping at this port, I should think, is quite equal to that of New York. The foreign vessels here amount to from three or four to a dozen on an average.

28th.—The following notice of Foo-Chow, and of the effects of foreign trade, is from the "China Mail," Jan. 27:—"The Mautchoo General at this port died of a broken heart. Though affected by the climate, his sickness was principally produced by pining over a deficit in the receipts of the custom-house, of which he was superintendant. He expressed his grief, stating that since the opening of the port to foreigners, the receipts of Chinese importations have become much less. As he was responsible for the making up of a specified sum, his mind became so overwhelmed with the consequences, that he finally sunk under the apprehension of proving a defaulter."

Learned to-day that some ten or a dozen of the villains who attacked the missionaries have been apprehended and condemned to wear the collar one month; and that the grain junks will proceed to-morrow.

To-day Mrs. C. and I accepted an invitation to dine with the family of our teacher. I have requested Mrs. C. to give a description of this visit, and some others, which I will send you.

31st.—Went with Bishop Boone to see their school establishment, which is partly built, beyond the north end of the town, and three miles from us. The main building is 112 feet by 30, two stories, with a verandah the whole length, calculated for one man and his family and three single ladies; the family to have four rooms, two of them 20 feet square, and each single lady teacher two rooms. There are two wings, 60 feet by 30, to accommodate the school, and for a chapel. The wings also are two stories; all in a substantial form. The expense to be $4,000; three acres of land $1,100. Bishop Boone thinks a building in America as good as theirs would cost $15,000.

April 4th.—To-day has been occupied by very many in visiting and worshiping at the tombs. It is astonishing to see to what an extent this is carried. The smoke of ghost-money and of burning incense, in thousands of colums ascending to heaven, is a faithful index of the reverence for ancestors which everywhere prevails.

A new Taouti has lately come into office here, and he is said to be a man of southern principles, i. e. a Canton man.

HOME MISSIONS.—There are very few churches in the West which have not been organized by the efforts of missionaries. During the first twenty years of the American Home Mission Society's labors in Western New York, the number of churches was increased from 190 to 400, and the cost, says the Puritan, has been some $50,000 less than the returns to the cause of benevolence; while still nobler results are seen in the improved state of Society, and the salvation of thousands. The Society, the last year, had under its patronage more than a thousand ministers, who labored chiefly in the Western and South Western States. The Parish of a Missionary often extends over a circuit of 20, 40, and even 60 miles. In this wide field, he not only preaches the gospel, but establishes Sabbath and Common Schools, and performs a great amount of labor in laying the foundations of intelligent Christian society.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH IN ENGLAND.—The Presbyterian Church in England embraces seven large Presbyteries, including seventy-six able and devoted ministers, and seventy-eight flourishing churches. They have Sabbath-schools in all their churches, and Parochial schools in nearly all. They have established a Theological College, as they term it, and a monthly magazine, called the English Presbyterian Messenger. The schemes of the church consist of Foreign and Jewish Missions, Home Missions, College Committee and School Committee. All these schemes are under the control of the church. They have one missionary in China and one in Corfu. They also co-operate with the great benevolent institutions of the country, and particularly with the Jewish Missionary Society of Scotland.

"ETHIOPIA STRETCHING OUT HER HANDS UNTO GOD."—Gov. Russworm, of the Maryland Colony in Liberia, stated recently at Baltimore, that so anxious were the natives for missionaries, Sabbath and public day teachers, that several Kings and Princes had sent to the colony repeatedly for, as they call them, "God-man and book-man," to come among them and teach their people, that they might become "white men same like you." One of these Kings has so far manifested his requests to be sincere, that he has built, at his own expense, a large and comfortable church and school-house, and is anxiously awaiting the arrival of the long-looked-for "Merica man."

BAPTIST MINISTERS IN THE UNITED STATES.—At the recent meeting of the Pennsylvania Baptist Convention, the Rev. T. F. Caldicot delivered an interesting address, in which he showed the claims of the world for a more numerous and enlightened ministry. He stated, that in the United States alone, while there are more than 10,000 Baptist churches, the number of ministers does not exceed 6,000, leaving 4,000 churches without needed help, and this want is daily increasing. For new churches alone 500 ministers are needed per annum.

THE FULTON HOTEL.—This house, recently opened by Johnson & Rogers, at 144 Fulton st., is conducted on a plan which has long been popular in Europe, and is destined to be popular in this country. The visiter selects a room according to his fancy or his purse, takes his meals at such hours as suit his convenience, and enjoys all the advantages of a first-rate hotel, while he is free from many of the inconveniences which attend the hotels conducted on the usual plan. Everything about the establishment is new, neat, and attractive, and we have no hesitation in commending it to the patronage of those who desire a quiet stopping-place in the business part of New York.

PROTESTANTISM IN FRANCE.—A good deal has been said of late about the progress of Protestantism in France; but we fear that what is there called Protestantism, is not altogether what the term imports in this country. The Baptist Missionary, Dr. Devan, who has been in France for nine months past, says that there are probably 1,500,000 nominal Protestants in France, of whom 80,000 are in Paris. But their Protestantism is in many cases an indifference to Popery, rather than a real attachment to the opposite views. They are ministered to by upwards of seven hundred Protestant pastors, of whom four hundred and upwards are Rationalists, denying the divinity of Christ and the personality of the Holy Spirit. "And yet in the bosom of the National Church may be found preachers, both evangelical and rational, laboring in the same fields, preaching alternately from the same pulpits, fraternizing at the same communion, and wearing the same livery of servitude to the government."

SUNDAY CONTRACTS NULL AND VOID.—Several weeks ago we chronicled the decision of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts, Chief Justice Shaw presiding, that a contract made on Sunday, not being a work of necessity or mercy, was in contravention of the "Lord's Day Act," and consequently null and void. This decision seems not to meet with universal approval. One editor very pertinently inquires why a government which can annul all the contracts made on the first day of the week, cannot annul those made on the other six days, if it pleases. Another editor has the following remarks, which may be worth thinking about:—

"Judge Shaw knows more of the law than we do, and is possibly right in his decision; but we doubt it. If one contract made on the Sabbath is illegal, is not another? If it be illegal to contract with a neighbor to do a certain business job, may it not also be illegal to do a job on the Lord's Day which was contracted for on another day? If so, the business of the parson and sexton would be very precarious, if, in the Judge's view, their works were not those of necessity and mercy. It is not necessary that a couple should be married on the Sabbath; a contract is made between the man and woman which is illegal, and therefore null and void. Might not a successful plea be made on this ground by a bigamist? If he had been married to his first woman on the Sabbath, might not his counsel contend that she was therefore not his lawful wife? How could Judge Shaw consistently decide otherwise than in his favor, after such a decision as he has made in the case of Potter and Greeley? Nonsense! a man's word is as good on Sunday as on any other day, if he be an honest man; and his contracts made on that day as binding as any made at any other time. We should doubt the power of a legislative body, by any bigoted law they could make, to render such contracts null and void."

UNION OF OLD SCHOOL PRESBYTERIANS.

For a few years past, says the Christian Secretary, an effort has been on foot for the closer union of several of the Presbyterian bodies in this country. The effort had advanced so far, that in 1847 the Old School General Assembly passed a resolution inviting a meeting of delegates of the several bodies to meet a delegation of its own at New York, for the purpose of taking measures for the completion of the object. A meeting was held at the Presbyterian Mission Room, a few weeks since, consisting of delegates from the Old School General Assembly, the General Synod of the Dutch Reformed Church, the Associate Reformed Church, the Associate Presbyterian Church, and the Reformed Presbyterian Church. It was expected that the German Reformed Church would also have been represented, but for some reason it was not.

There was, as might have been expected, some diversity of opinion in the discussions. The Old School Presbyterians expected to effect some visible incorporation of these various bodies into one; others supposed the object only to be a closer communion and correspondence, which should not affect the outward relations of either. The Associate Reformed Church was anxious for a visible union. Among the difficulties urged against a visible union, was the psalmody. The Scotch Churches will use Rouse's version of the Psalms, and nothing else. To this it was replied, that while the Presbyterians used other psalm-books, they never interdicted the use of Rouse, and it could be left to each individual church to use what books they pleased. The same objections and answers were made to organs and choirs. A difficulty was also suggested by a delegate of the Associate Church, on the matter of Communion. It is a fundamental principle with this Church, to admit to its communion none but those who give evidence of piety, and who are under the jurisdiction of the Church; to which it was replied, that as the other denominations require credible evidence of piety, this difficulty would be obviated by a formal amalgamation of the churches. The meeting not being so fully represented as desirable, and not being able to agree upon a basis of union, it adjourned to meet again in April next.

Proclamation,

By JOHN YOUNG, Governor of the State of New York.

The year which will soon be added to the Past has been to the people of this State eminently auspicious. Plenty has crowned our harvests—Labor has been justly rewarded, and everything around us evidences a healthy and enduring prosperity. War, with all its attendant evils, has passed away, and Peace, as honorable as welcome, has been restored. The means of education, and all the advantages of intellectual progression, have been enjoyed by us in an eminent degree; and the Future is full of hope and promise.

As a Christian people, we are admonished that these blessings are the gifts of a beneficent God, and while we thus rejoice in His bounty, we should not forget the homage due from grateful hearts:

I, therefore, respectfully recommend to the people of this State, to set apart THURSDAY, THE TWENTY-THIRD DAY OF NOVEMBER next, to be observed as a day of Public Thanksgiving to ALMIGHTY GOD; and that with such Thanksgiving be mingled Prayer to Him who holds in His hands the destinies of nations, for the continuance of those blessings which have been and still are so abundantly showered upon us.

In testimony whereof, I have caused the privy seal of the State to be hereunto affixed. Witness my hand, at [L.S.] the City of Albany, this twenty-eighth day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight.

JOHN YOUNG.

By the Governor. HENRY V. COLT, Private Secretary.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamship America has arrived at New York since our last, bringing European news to October 28, which will be found below,

Ireland.

From Ireland we have the result of the State trials. The brutal sentence of the law is not to be enforced against those convicted of felony. The sentence of O'Brien, Meagher, McManus, and O'Donoghue, has been commuted to transportation for life. This implies banishment to a penal settlement, and degrading toil in chains.

England.

Speaking of the health of the country, Douglas Jerrold's paper of the 28th says: "Our remarks last week as to the existence, but not the spread of cholera, are just as applicable now. There have been fatal cases, however, in one of the metropolitan prisons—the Millbank Penitentiary. Duncan Turner, a man of fifty, under sentence of ten years transportation, and George May, a young man, also convicted of sheep-stealing, having died of Asiatic Cholera, as shown before Coroner's Juries. In different parts of the metropolis there have been fatal cases of cholera, as there have been at Edinburg and elsewhere, but the average, as well as we can judge, is perhaps lower than that of last week. The number of deaths in the metropolitan districts, as was the case during the previons week, was in that which ended last Saturday, much below the average, namely, 983, while the weekly average derived from the number of deaths which occurred in the corresponding weeks of the past five years, is 1,154, or 171 more than occurred last week. The fatal cases of cholera amounted to 45.

Upward of 1,000 peaceful French soldiers of the National Guard, have been parading, with polite and intelligent curiosity, the streets and parks of London, or visiting the public places. Were they in plain clothes, such a number would be swallowed up in the populous stream of the metropolis, but as the visiters wear their uniforms, their numbers are at once recognizable.

France.

There appears to be now no doubt that the election of the President of the Republic will take place on the 10th of December next. The National Assembly will adjourn about a fortnight before the day fixed for the election, in order to allow the members to go to their respective Provinces to agitate in favor of Gen. Cavaignac, who, his friends hope, will be the candidate, not only of the Republicans of the veille, but also of the lendemain.

M. de Lamartine has left Paris on a provincial tour. His arrival at Macon, en route for his chateau at Monceau, is announced. On that occasion the Mayor of Macon presented him with an address, to which M. de Lamartine delivered an answer, which appears in the journals.

It is said that Louis Philippe and the Government have come to an understanding with respect to the private property of the ex-royal family in France. The Count de Montalivet is to be liquidateur, and a loan of 24,000,000 is to be raised to pay the most pressing claims on the property, and for the immediate support of the members of the royal family now in England. Louis Philippe is said to have bound himself, if this plan be agreed on, to pay regularly to the Duchess of Orleans her dowry of a million of francs per annum.

Prussia.

On the 16th ult. serious disturbances occurred at Berlin, in consequence of a conflict which had arisen between the Burgher Guard and Laborers, in a part of the city called the Cöpnickerfeld. There was a pretty sharp fight, and several lives lost on both sides. Two captains of the Guard were mortally wounded.

Austria.

Vienna is now surrounded on all sides except one, the Nussdorf line. The Russian Ambassador has left the city. The two Commissioners of the Central Executive in Frankfort, after remaining a short time in Vienna, proceeded to Olmutz. Nearly the entire population of the capital are resolved to hold out to the last—come what may. It is calculated that 100,000 persons have quitted Vienna since the 6th of October.

Frightful accounts are published of the atrocities committed by the military while bivouacking in the Schwarzenberg Park. Several bodies, horribly mutilated, were found on the grounds after the precipitate departure of the troops.

The fortress of Osoppo, near Undine, after holding out against the Austrians for six months, capitulated on the 16th inst., after a most severe bombardment. The garrison, which consisted of papal troops, was disarmed. Beside some stores, 37 pieces of artillery were taken by the Austrians, whose loss was extraordinarily small, amounting only to a few wounded.

Bavaria.

Munich has been the scene of serious disturbances, on account of a rise in the price of beer. On the morning of the 18th, the disturbances which had commenced the previous day, were renewed, and a mob, the greater part of which consisted of soldiers, went round to the different beer-houses, smashing the tables and furniture where they were not given beer at the usual price. Some bakers' and grocers' shops were plundered.

Spain.

It is said that Cabrera has shot 20 officers in reprisals for the 19 whom Gen. Villalonga lately put to death. The corps which entered Benagaucil has also shot five soldiers, because Gen. Villalonga had caused five Carlists to be shot at Liria.

Persia.

Letters from Persia, via Trebizond, announce an important event. The King of Persia, Mohammed Shah, died at Teheran, from a violent attack of gout, to which he had long been subject.

On the Coast of Africa, a British man-of-war chased a slave steamer, which, after leading her sixty miles from the coast, suddenly returned, leaving the vessel of war to beat back, and in the meantime the steamer took on board her cargo of fifteen hundred slaves and was off.

The Election.—Since our last week's paper went to press, the question who shall be the next President has been decided. General Taylor is undoubtedly the man. The N. Y. Tribune of Monday morning figures up the matter so as to show 163 Electors for Taylor, and 127 for Cass, giving the former a majority of 36. The aggregate vote for the Free Soil ticket is estimated at 200,000. The House of Representatives, 31st Congress, it is now thought, will stand thus: Taylor 68, Cass 53, Van Buren 8,—but about this there is considerable uncertainty. We give below the classification of the States, and number of electors, as made up by the Tribune. The returns from some of the most distant are still imperfect, and farther returns may modify them somewhat:

For Taylor—Massachusetts 12, Rhode Island 4, Connecticut 6, Vermont 6, New York 36, New Jersey 7, Pennsylvania 26, Deleware 3, Maryland 8, North Carolina 11, Georgia 10, Louisiana, say 6, Florida 3, Kentucky 12, Tennessee 13.

For Cass.—Maine 9, New Hampshire 6, Virginia 17, S. Carolina say 9, Alabama 9, Ohio 23, Indiana 12, Illinois 9, Michigan 5, Wisconsin 4, Iowa 4, Missouri 7, Arkansas 3, Mississippi 6, Texas 4.

Very Mysterious Disappearance.—Not long since, the mother of a young lady named Marietta Smith, residing at 100 Greene-st., received by the two-cent post an anonymous warning in a female hand, to the effect that a plot had been formed to remove her child from her paternal home for ever, to her ruin and destruction, and to a place where her parents would never more behold her, and entreating Mrs. Smith to take every possible means to avert the impending danger. The writer was evidently acquainted with the family, who have been residents of this city for nearly thirty years, and are much esteemed for their probity and worth. Mrs. S. showed the letter to Marietta, to the rest of the family, and to several intimate friends, but no one could conjecture who the writer was, or whence the danger was to proceed. Miss Smith has six sisters and a brother, was educated at Public School No. 5, and is a teacher there. Several of her sisters hold similar situations. On Saturday, 4th, she left her father's house for the Normal School in Grand-st., called upon a friend in Elizabeth-st. at 1 1-2, and immediately left for home with her satchel of books on her arm, evidently quite happy and cheerful. Since then she has not been seen or heard of, nor any tidings obtained as to her fate. Aldermen Macdermot, Adams, Downing, and Shultz, bodies of the Police, agents of the Public School Society, and numerous friends of the family, have been active and unwearied in their exertions to ascertain the cause of her absence, but thus far in vain; letters have also been sent to Boston, Philadelphia, Albany, Buffalo, Washington, Charleston, New Orleans, and Cincinnati, describing her, and stating particulars. She is 17 years of age, a native of this city, tall, slender, with long waist and neck, handsome form, fair complexion, auburn hair, round face, gray eyes, dimpled cheeks, and is slightly freckled. Her carriage is easy and graceful. We trust that her abductors, whoever and wherever they are, may be soon and suitably punished, and their victim rescued. [Trib. 11th.

Robbery of the Patent Office.—The Commissioner of the Patent Office has offered a reward of $1,500 for the recovery of the articles stolen from that office on the night of the 8th inst. The articles are a gold snuff-box, set with diamonds; a gold scabbard, belonging to the sword presented to Com. Biddle; gold medal, struck by order of the Senate of Hamburg at their centennial commemoration of the establishment of their constitution; silver medal; duplicate of the same; gold medal, commemorative of the delivery from assassination of Gen. Bolivar; gold medal, struck in Peru in 1821; do. do. in 1828; gold medal of Napoleon; silver do. do.; silver medal of Rio de la Plata, 1813; Roman gold coins; pint bottle of ottar of roses; pearl necklaces; two extra pearls in the gold snuff-box which was taken; twenty-one medals, of copper and silver, of Gens. Wayne, Green, and other Generals.

Wholesale Extermination.—It was stated recently, by Rev. Mr. Chiniguy, in a public meeting at Montreal, that he had a list of fifteen families, once among the wealthiest of Montreal, who have all been destroyed by intemperance. Their aggregate fortunes, a few years ago, amounted to $800,000. Now they have disappeared entirely, root and branch, solely through the influence of intoxicating liquors. He had another list of fourteen families, of various occupations, whose aggregate fortunes amounted to $1,200,000, who have also disappeared from the same cause; and another list of five hundred and seventeen families, who resided in fourteen parishes, and were all once comparatively wealthy, but are all now destroyed by liquor, except remnants scattered through the States and elsewhere. It is thus that intoxicating liquors destroy the human race.

Snow Storms.—A snow storm prevailed in Buffalo, Election day, and in Providence, R. I., Wednesday. . . . The Buffalo Courier learns by telegraph, that there was a violent snow storm at Painesville, O., snow falling to the depth of sixteen inches. . . . In other sections of the country our exchanges chronicle rain and snow storms of recent occurrence. Snow fell at Stockbridge, Mass., on Wednesday night, 8th inst., to the depth of three inches. . . . There was a slight fall of snow at Boston Thursday morning, being ten days later than the commencement last year.

Shocking Accident.—Mr. Calvin Symmes was instantly killed in a most shocking manner, in the cotton factory on Mount Ida, on Saturday, the 4th inst. He had charge of one of the rooms, and wishing to make some alteration in his machinery, stayed at noon for that purpose, while the factory was stopped and the hands out to dinner. While he was in the act of putting on the belt to start up, he caught his hand in it, and he was carried round until he was crushed and torn horribly, one leg and arm being severed from his body. ## SUMMARY.

The abolition of slavery in Missouri, through gradual emancipation, is being fully discussed in the St. Louis papers. The ground assumed for the agitation is, that slavery is opposed to the prosperity of the State, its industry, enterprise, intelligence and morals. It is contended that wherever it exists, it tends to impoverish, or at least to impede the progress of the white race, and that a fair chance can never be had for free labor while it continues.

The "Rungle Family"—two brothers and two sisters—weighing in the aggregate fourteen hundred pounds, have started from Virginia on an exhibiting tour. One of the young ladies is so fleshy as to be unable to walk, and when moving of her own accord, goes upon her hands and knees. They are of the usual height, and their mother is an unusually small woman; the father, however, is an ordinary sized man.

To the astonishment of all persons connected with English Railroads, not less than 77 miles on the Great Western Railroad were passed over by an express train in 78 minutes. This rate of speed was attained, it will be observed, on a broad guage track, seven feet wide, and with engines having driving wheels eight feet in diameter.

We learn from the Rome Sentinel, that the directors of the Rome and Oswego plank road, on Thursday, declared a semi-annual dividend of 6 per cent, out of the earnings of the road for the last six months. About one-third of the tolls have been invested as a sinking fund, thus making the earnings of the road during the half year, about nine per cent on its capital. The cost of the road was about $85,000.

In France, during the year 1846, 3,861 persons were drowned, 624 crushed to death by horses and vehicles, and 45 railroad accidents. The statistics prove that fewer lives are lost on railroads than on common roads, in proportion to the number of passengers.

The Batavia Advocate announces the death of Jezreel Knapp, in that town, on Sunday night, aged 97 years. He was a soldier under Washington in many of his hard-fought battles, and was intimately acquainted with the Father of his country.

The Syracuse papers are urging the importance of forming a speedy connection with the Erie railroad, by constructing a road from their city to Binghampton, seventy-three miles distant. The intervening country is represented as populous and productive, and the surface favorable.

The schooner John Castner took fire on the 29th ult., on a trip from Philadelphia to Charleston. By battening down the hatches, she got within a mile of the latter place, when engines came and extinguished the fire. It is stated that there were two hundred kegs of powder on board.

The Governor or Kentucky offers a reward of three thousand dollars for the arrest and delivery to the jailer of Floyd County, of Field-Salyer, who is charged with killing Wiley M. Morgan in that county on the 2d of September last.

Thaddeus B. Wakeman, Esq., corresponding Secretary of the American Institue, died in N. Y., November 6th. He was a gentleman of large experience, a graduate of Yale College, and one universally beloved in life, as he is in death regretted.

A transit of the planet Mercury occurred on Thursday morning, the 9th inst. Nearly thirty years will elapse before another transit of this planet will be visible in this country. Of the six which will occur during the next half century, only those of 1878 and 1894 can be seen here. The last transit of Venus was in 1769, and the next two will occur in 1874 and 1882.

A child of Mr. Crowfoot, dentist, in New Haven, was recently saved by a Newfoundland dog, who dragged him out of a cistern into which he had fallen, and was found lying by his side. The child was restored by the prompt application of proper remedies.

M. Corcoran, the financial negotiator, has sent $1000 to Mr. Gordon Smith, boat builder, of Stonington, Conn., as an acknowledgement for his rescuing Mr. C.'s daughter from drowning, the latter part of last summer. The reward is honorable to the heart of the father, and was wholly unexpected by the worthy recipient.

Mr. McCormick, passenger on board the steamboat Mouterey, on the Kentucky river, fell overboard near the mouth of the Elkhorn. He had about his person $3500 in gold, the weight of which is supposed to have dragged him down.

Edward Underhill, Esq., the learned Secretary of the Hanserd Knollys Society, and editor of the Baptist Record, has undertaken a history of the Baptists in all times and in all countries.

The Freeman's Journal announces the conversion to the Roman Catholic Church, of Robert A. Bakewell, student of the Episcopal Theological Seminary, New York, and rector of Genesee.

The number of emigrants arrived at New York from foreign countries, from June 1, 1848, to Nov. 1, 1848, ten months, was 161,363, more than treble the number that arrived in 1844.

A dreadful affray took place at Yelville, Marion county, Ark., on the 25th ult., in which three men were killed and several wounded.

On Monday, Nov. 5, the snow fell to the depth of three inches at Little Falls, in this State. At Utica, it was, at the same time, two inches in depth.

The Syracuse and Oswego Railroad is doing a much larger business than was anticipated. The Company have ordered a large number of cars, and four new locomotives.

Encke's Comet has been seen at Cambridge on several mornings recently, at about 4 o'clock, in the east, with the naked eye. It appears to have a tail a degree and a half long, and a strong envelope.

The Elizabethtown and Somerville Railroad was opened a few days since to Whitehouse, a village 10 miles beyond Somerville, its former terminus. It now extends 36 miles in the direction of Easton, Pa., with which place it will probably connect in the course of another year. The old road has been relaid with heavy rail, and the line is in excellent condition.

Mr. Bancroft, our Minister to England, has announced that the difficulties heretofore existing between the United States and that Government, in regard to our postage communications, have been adjusted, and that arrangements have been entered into for a fair and equitable disposition of the differences heretofore existing between the two Governments.

The French National Assembly have passed one practical measure, which entitles its members to the gratitude of that great people. It has passed a bill for the reduction of postage on all inland letters to 4 sous, or 4 cents. The same will go into effect on the first of January next. Russia has also established a penny postage throughout her great empire.

On the waters of the River An-vase, only fourteen miles from the Mississippi, in South Missouri, a beautiful rose-red granite has been discovered in large quantities. It is very uniform in its texture, possesses great firmness, and is believed to be superior to any granite yet discovered on the American Continent, and not surpassed by the Egyptian or Russian.

The trains upon the Oswego road have commenced their regular trips, with every prospect of a fair business. At Syracuse they connect with the regular trains for Albany, and at Oswego with the steamboats on the Lake. The fare to Buffalo by this route is $1 50 less, and to Rochester $1 less, than by the present railroad from Syracuse to Buffalo.

Mrs. Elijah Beckwith, daughter of Col. Sheldon, of Watertown, N. Y., committed suicide by hanging herself at the residence of her father on Saturday morning, Oct. 28. She was aged 28, and leaves three children, the eldest about six.

The Kingston Whig of Saturday states that the schooner Ellen, belonging to E. Browne & Co., which left Kingston in ballast the week previous, was driven into Wellington on Wednesday last, dismasted and all hands missing. The unfortunate vessel had been landing fish on the beach of Prince Edward, and in attempting to claw off the shore she perished. Nine souls were on board.

Miscellaneous.

TO MRS. JUDSON.

Suggested by her Poem, "My Bird."

AND does thy bird, so loved, so fair,
Still with its presence bless thy home?
Then thou indeed, most happy there,
For earthly joys need'st never roam.

But ah! a bird as fair as thine—
And fairer earth has never known—
I once could call, with fondness, mine,
But now, alas! that bird hath flown.

O long, full long, may'st thou be spared
The anguish that my heart doth know,
And with glad songs may thy sweet bird
Cheer thee wherever thou shalt go.

And as it learns, when thou art lone,
To charm thee with its sweetest lays,
Then thou canst teach that infant voice
To soar to heaven in grateful praise.

And oh! did not old "ocean roll"
Between thy happy home and mine,
I'd hasten to thy Indian cot,
And share thy joys—yes, even thine!

I'd woo that little bird to me,
And fold it to my throbbing breast,
And there in safety might it lie,
Where late my own was all so blest.

Say, when at night thy "birdling" fair,
Doth fold its tiny wings to rest,
Wilt thou not crave, in secret prayer,
Blessings on this deserted nest?

TREATMENT OF THE CHOLERA.

Reliable information in regard to methods of treating this terrible disease, is of great importance, now that we are obliged to look upon its re-appearance among us as more than probable. We give therefore portions of a letter from Rev. H. G. O. Dwight, of Constantinople, which appeared a short time ago in the N. Y. Observer. It will be observed, that it corresponds in important respects with information which we have already communicated.

The Asiatic Cholera, which, when fairly seated, is one of the most unmanageable of all diseases,—despising all human art or skill, and mocking all the assiduities of friendship in almost all cases—begins with a mild diarrhea, which in that stage is most readily cured. True, where the cholera is raging, we are continually hearing of persons who arose well in the morning, and are in their graves before night; and it is not to be doubted that there are some cases in which the very first attack of the disease is the collapse, from which recovery is rare. But I can say with truth, that in every instance of these sudden deaths of cholera, in which I have been able to investigate the circumstances, I have found that the individual had been laboring under diarrhea for some days previous. Generally this is so slight as not to be much noticed; it is attended with no pains, and no sickness of stomach, perhaps, and gives the person no particular inconvenience. But it is this very diarrhea which is most insiduoisly preparing the system for the most dreadful onset of disease.

Whenever the cholera is prevailing in any place, it should be a rule in every instance, to stop even the slightest diarrhea immediately. For this we have a remedy always on hand. Opium, in some form or other, must be used immediately, and without fear. In the form of laudanum perhaps it may be used most conveniently. At such times it should be found in every house; and the master of the family should give the strictest injunction to every inmate of his house, to give immediate notice if attacked with diarrhea. In mild cases, six drops of laudanum for an adult will be sufficient to check the disease. The dose should be repeated every four hours until the diarrhea is stopped.

This is the most important direction. In severe cases of diarrhea a larger dose must be used, and the dose may be increased indefinitely without the least injury, so long as the effect of checking the diarrhea is not produced. I have been called to prescribe in a great multitude of cases of cholera, in this incipient stage, and I have found every one of them to yield to this medicine. The prescription is one which our brother Doctor Smith left with his brethren in Turkey, in anticipation of the cholera, when he was returning to America; and by the blessing of God I do believe it has saved thousands of lives. Our native brethren in Nicomedia and Broosa, having been instructed on the subject by Doctor Smith, have been exceedingly useful as instruments in checking the disease in a great multitude of cases. Many even of their worst enemies among the Armenians have flocked to them for this medicine, and having proved its virtues, have become their best friends.

I have used with the best effects, in many severe cases, when there was much pain, and tendency to cramp, and coldness in the extremities, a mixture of equal parts of laudanum, tincture of rhubarb, and tincture of camphor.] Of this, eighteen drops may be given for an adult at a dose in mild cases, to be increased according to circumstances. Of all epidemic or contagious diseases, none excites more general alarm than the malignant cholera, and yet I know of none that gives such timely premonitions of its approach, and that is so perfectly under human control, (so to speak,) as this is in this early stage.

Of course, when tnere is a tendency to diarrhea in cholera times, the strictest attention should be paid to diet, and fruits and crude vegetables should be carefully avoided. Wherever the cholera prevails, it has been found that most people are easily inclined to bowel complaints, and this is an indication that the diet of people generally should be regulated accordingly. A sudden change from a generous to a low diet in such circumstances has been found quite injurious. A person who is well should continue to eat very much as he has been accustomed to, except that most people eat too much, as a general rule, and except that fruits and certain vegetables, which at other times would be harmless, under the cholera atmosphere are apt to produce diarrhea.

I will close my communication by giving some particulars of one or two cases, from many that have come under my own immediate observation, to illustrate what I have said above. I was awakened one night about midnight by two of my own children—one fifteen and the other thirteen years of age. They had both been attacked with diarrhea and vomiting, accompanied by the severest pains, amounting almost to cramps, in the stomach. The cholera was prevailing around, and, of course, I had the greatest reason for apprehension that this was a sudden attack of the disease. I administered immediately full doses of the mixture mentioned above, repeating it every two hours as long as the symptoms continued urgent. I gave also the oil of peppermint, and repeatedly applied the spirit of camphor, with friction, to the region of the stomach. The next day they were both well again, excepting of course some debility from the preceding night's attack. They had both eaten freely the day before of a dish of stringed beans, and I remarked that each upward evacuation of the stomach brought with it some of these beans, in precisely the same state in which they had been eaten twelve hours before. * * *

The following should be a warning:—

Fain would I hope that our beloved country may be saved from the ravages of this scourge;—but this can hardly be expected. It will probably come, and come to many as "a thief in the night," although the warning has been long and loud. The class of people among whom it makes its greatest desolations, are those who use habitually the intoxicating cup. I don't know that even the strictest attention to the rules I have given above will save the drunkard, when he is once attacked. When the seeds of this disease are cast into such a man's system, it is like striking fire into a box of tinder. The whole internal coatings of his stomach, besides other vital organs, are already diseased, and he is a subject of which the cholera will make very short work. It makes one shudder to think how many drunkards will be suddenly ushered into eternity by this dire disease!

THE DEAD-LETTER OFFICE.

The story of Adele Barron, published in a recent number of the Knickerbocker, which turns upon some missing letters, has brought to mind an incident related by Frank Granger, as having occurred when he was at the head of the Post Office Department. A letter was one day received from the Postmaster of a town in N. Jersey, enclosing a letter very old and dingy, and covered with fly specks in every part, except where a paper or card-rack of some barroom had protected it. The superscription, if there ever had been any, had faded entirely away. The Postmaster wrote that he had found it in his letter-box, and tried in vain to discover who had deposited it there, in order that it might receive a proper direction, as it apparently contained money. It had not been advertised, and was not strictly a dead letter; but he sent it to the department to be disposed of. The Postmaster General took the responsibility of opening it, and found that it was dated at Philadelphia, in the year 1821, (twenty years before,) and enclosed a twenty dollar bill of the United States Bank. It was addressed by a man to his wife, at a small village not far from the post office where the letter was found, informing her that he (the writer,) should start from home in two or three days; but that, as his brother was about to leave for home, he took advantage of the opportunity to send her by him the enclosed sum of money, wherewith to make preparations for an approaching wedding.

The Postmaster General caused a letter to be written to the address of the writer, informing him of the circumstances. In a week after, a reply was received from a female, who stated that the writer of the letter was her father, and the one to whom it was addressed was her mother, both of whom were dead; that twenty years before, on the eve of her own wedding, she remembered that her father and uncle had quarreled, the former having been led, by some suspicious circumstances, to discredit the assertion of the latter, that he had lost a letter containing money entrusted to his care, and to insinuate that he had appropriated the money to his own use. The consequence was, that all intercourse between the families had from that time been suspended, and that she should immediately write to her uncle and cousins, who were still living at a distance, to beg that the intercourse and friendship so long interrupted, might be resumed, the discovery of this letter having satisfied her of what she had long suspected, that her father was wrong, and relieved her mind from a weight of painful anxiety.

Whether any farther clue to the manner in which the letter had arrived at the office at so late a period was ever ascertained, is not known; the probability is, that it had been picked up at or near some country tavern on the road, and was placed with a variety of business cards and miscellaneous papers which usually fill the tapes over the mantel-piece of such a place, and there it had remained from year to year, perhaps concealed from notice by other papers and letters, until by change of landlord, or an improvement in the house, the landlord had disposed of it by depositing it in the nearest post office. ### JOHN OF AUSTRIA.

His marriage is the most romantic part of his history. Always on the wing in some part of Styria, he arrived late one evening at the beautiful little village of Aussee, on the lake of the same name, and requested post horses and postillion to proceed immediately on his journey. The arrival of any body at such a time was perfectly unexpected, and there was no postillion to be found. The poor postmaster was in a dilemma; it was a neglect of duty to have no postillion at a post station, and what was to be done? One of his daughters, who was known to the neighborhood on account of her energy and business activity, as "Postmaster Nanni," a pretty mountain lass of eighteen, volunteered her services to rescue her father from his difficulty, and go disguised as a postillion with the Archduke.

She started off, driving outside, handling the reins, and blowing the postillion's horn among the mountains with all the dexterity of one fully initiated. On arriving at the station, the Archduke praised her speed and care in the darkness of the night, and, placing a few silver pieces in her hand, departed. The adventure of the "Postmaster Nanni" with the Archduke soon became noised about in Aussee, and reached his ears; he doubted, and, passing through the village shortly afterwards, inquired for the postillion; Nanni was introduced to him; he was struck with her beauty, unadorned, and intelligence, and determined to educate her.

A longer acquaintance ripened into love, and he honorably offered her his hand and heart; his love was returned; but how could an Archduke marry the "Postmaster Nanni?" This juvenile caper came to the ears of his eldest brother, the Emperor Francis, who raved and foamed at the degradation of his brother John, and his total destitution of ambition and sense of propriety, forbade the bans, and banished the Archduke from the court.

But love laughs at Emperors as well as locksmiths, and "Postmaster Nanni" accompanied the Archduke to the Styrian mountains as the "housekeeper Nanni," and remained with this title until the death of Francis. They were then lawfully married, and Nanni assumed the title of Baroness Brandhoff.

From the day of their acquaintance until the present time, they have lived in the most perfect domestic harmony. The Baroness Brandhoff is daily expected at Vienna, and for the first time, apartments are being prepared for her in the palace, as she has never been admitted to court, and always occupied a private residence on her visits to the capital. The "Postmaster Nanni" will shortly take up her residence in Frankfort, to dictate to the Queens and Princesses of Europe.

THE FRENCH SEWING MACHINE.

This machine, to which we have before alluded, is the invention of a humble artizan, who has a great mechanical genius, and who has been engaged for thirty years in the perfection of his invention. He received a patent for it in France a few years ago, and it is said that for more than twenty-five years, he sought in vain to make it work, and that the thought flashed all at once upon his mind regarding its true and perfect principle. The machine was introduced into London some time last year, and has attracted much attention in that city. It is very cheap; some are sold for twenty dollars, and the price varies from that to thirty. The machine is fixed on the table, and is a very small box. It is worked by a treadle, and every movement of the foot produces a corresponding action in the needle; so that three hundred stitches can easily be made in a minute. The hands are merely used to guide the material being sewn, and by turning a screw the stitch is easily varied. The machine will sew, stitch, and form cords and plaits. The stitch is tambour or crotchet stitch. The whole value of the invention consists in making machinery do what was hitherto done by the fingers, and thus resolving a problem supposed impracticable. The beauty of this machine is, that it can work button-holes and embroider. M. Magnen, who exhibited it in London, wore an entire suit worked by it, consisting of coat, pants, vest, and all their appurtenances. To France belongs the credit of this invention. M. Thimonier is the name of the inventor, and his fame will go down to posterity with that of Jacquard.

Cultivation of Trees.—Few persons have any correct idea of the rapidity of the growth of well-cultivated trees, and many are deterred from planting them, by the consideration, selfish at the best, that they shall not live to reap the fruit of their labors. Such persons may derive encouragement from the statement of a few facts. In the Spring of 1836, I set out in front of my office at Chester, two elm trees. They were then so small that I could easily carry either of them, with a full top, upon my shoulder, and were perhaps two or three inches in diameter. I measured them carefully in the Fall of 1847, and found them of equal size, and each measuring forty-five inches in circumference. They stand about eighteen feet apart, and some twelve feet from the building, for which they form a perfect protection from the Summer's sun, their branches being already interlaced. The elm is in that neighborhood of more rapid growth than the rock maple, or indeed more than any other forest tree. An apple orchard may be brought to commence bearing in four years from transplanting from the nursery, which should be the second or third year from the time of budding. By the eighth or tenth year, your orchard, well managed, will pay you annually for your trouble and expense in planting it, and will continue productive as long as you have any right to expect to live.

Colton's "Lacon."—This remarkable book was written upon covers of letters and scraps of paper of such description as was nearest at hand; the greater part at a house in Prince's street, Soho. Colton's lodging was a penuriously furnished second floor; and upon a rough deal table, with a stumpy pen, our author wrote. Though a beneficed clergyman, holding the vicarage of Kew, with Petersham, in Surrey, Colton was a well-known frequenter of the gaming-table; and, suddenly disappearing from his usual haunts in London about the time of the murder of Weare, in 1823, it was strongly suspected he had been assassinated. It was, however, afterwards ascertained that he had absconded, to avoid his creditors; and, in 1828, a successor was appointed to his living. He went to reside in America, but subsequently lived in Paris, a professed gamester; and it was said that he thus gained, in two years only, the sum of £25,000. He blew out his brains while on a visit to a friend at Fontainebleau, in 1832—a bankrupt in health, spirits, and fortune.

Relation of the Sexes.—The editor of the National Era, in reply to a correspondent, says: "As to our own creed, we think it highly orthodox. We believe that woman was taken at first from the side of man, but that ever since man has been born of woman; that they are both very indispensable to each other, and if 'man, the hermit, sighed till woman smiled,' she would have done the same thing, had not her full gaze, on first awakening to life, rested upon him; that if, in a certain sense, man is the head of the woman, woman is the heart of man in a good many senses; that there is no conflict of rights, and, so far as we have ascertained, no natural hostility between the sexes; that the crowning glory of each is the well-ordered family, where husband and wife rule each other, by love and reason, without rude appeals to prerogative on one side, or necessity or suffering submission on the other—both equally loved and respected by their children, both equally loving and reverencing the great Father of All.

The Mineral Riches of Algeria.—From a work on the mineral riches of this region, by M. Henry Fournel, Paris, we learn that there is a valuable mine of argentiferous Galena near the frontiers of Tunis, at Kefum-Thaboul, occurring in argillaceous and schists connected with sandstones and conglomerates. Magnetic iron ore abounds in the mountains Bon Hamra, the small chain Belelieta, and to the north of Lake Fizara. To the north of the place last-mentioned, there is an entire mountain, (the Mokta-el Hadid,) which rises out of the gneiss to a hight exceeding 300 meters, and presents, from top to bottom, pure ore without a particle of rock. Remains of ancient Roman works and scoria were found, indicating that they were formerly mined.

Victoria and Sweetmeats.—The following is an account of the wages paid to the confectioners of her Majesty:—

First German confectioner, £300 per annum; second do. £250 per annum, with apartments and traveling expenses; three female assistants and an errand man, £80 per annum each; chief pastry cook, £250 a year, with rooms and attending expenses, with one male and ten female assistants, at £70 a year, a butler and his assistant, at £50 and £60 each. The total royal expense for making sugar plums, cakes, tarts, (independent of the cost of materials,) being £1,200 per annum.

Emery in Asia Minor.—M. Tchihatcheff, in his recent explorations in Asia Minor, says Silliman's Journal, has brought to light extensive beds of emery in the western portions of this country, particularly between the ruins of Stratonicea in Caria and Smyrna. This substance is indispensable in polishing minerals, and all hard stones, as well as for the lapidary's use generally, and by these new discoveries, it is evident the necessary supply will suffer no diminution.

◆

Vanity in Animals.—The learned philosopher, Dr. Gall, in his remarks on the organ of love of approbation, says that in the South of France they decorate their mules with bouquets when they travel well. The most painful punishment which can be inflicted on them is to deprive them of their bouquet and tie them to the back of the carriage. "I have," he says, "a female ape; whenever they give her a handkerchief, she throws it over her, and takes a wonderful deal of pleasure in seeing it drag behind, like the train of a court robe."

◆

The Lost Soul.—Amongst the foreign birds lately brought into this country, is a specimen of the feathered tribe from Peru, to which the natives give the beautiful name of alma perdida, (the lost soul.) Its cry is exceedingly melancholy; the first note is shrill and long, and is followed by three more of the same length, but gradually deepening in tone. The Peruvians say it is bewailing the dead.

◆

Cheap Living.—Mr. Taylor, in his "Views a Foot," says: "The cheapest city, and one of the pleasantest in the world, is Florence, where I breakfasted on five cents, dined sumptuously on twelve, and went to a good opera for ten. A man would find no difficulty in spending a year there for about $250. This fact may be of some importance to those whose health requires such a stay, yet are kept back from attempting the voyage through fear of the expense."

◆

Cure for the Toothache.—Take a piece of sheet zinc, about the size of a sixpence, and a piece of silver, say a quarter of a dollar, place them together, and hold the defective tooth between or contagious to them; in a few minutes the pain will be gone as if by magic. The zinc and silver acting as a galvanic battery, will produce on the nerves of the tooth sufficient electricity to establish a current, and consequently to relieve the pain.

VARIETY.

It is stated of a Venetian, a great humorist, who died some years since, that he made a provision of torches for his funeral, which he caused to be privately loaded with crackers, and comunicated to a confidential friend the hubbu which would result from the explosion, and which he calculated would take place in the most inconvenient spots. It is added, that the result verified the most sanguine anticipations of the projector.

The late Mrs. Hon. Roger Sherman, of Fairfield, Conn., received into her family, and educated at different periods, twelve destitute orphan children. She had lost her own children, and both herself and her husband being impressed with the conviction that they might do good by filling the place of parents to the homeless, they commenced the work—and as one and another became settled in life, their places were filled by others.

There is more talk about Father Mathew's visit to this country. This has been regularly got up for the last six years, and he has not come yet, nor is it probable that he will come. Many inebriates who got tired of waiting to be converted by his persuasive eloquence, have quit the bottle, and become sober men without his aid. If his visit should be much longer procrastinated, others may share the same fate.

A woman by the name of Wright, living in this village, says the Hallowell Cultivator, in a vomiting spasm, threw from her stomach a live snake measuring seven inches in length, which is supposed to have been swallowed some months since in drinking water from a spring. The snake lived two or three days in a bottle of water, and is now preserved in spirits.

Two persons who have chosen each other out of all the species, with the design to be each other's mutual comfort and entertainment, have in that action, bound themselves to be good humored, affable, discreet, forgiving, patient, and joyful, with respect to each other's frailties and miperfections, to the end of their lives.

Rev. Dr. J. O. Choules, of Rhode Island, delivered the opening address of the annual fair of the American Institute, in New York. He well remarked: "Many parents show a disposition to raise their children to live without labor; but they will raise a generation which will curse its ancestry."

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., } Principals.
IRA SAYLES, A. M., }

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULATIONS.

1. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.
2. Punctuality in attending all regular Academic exercises will be required.
3. The use of Tobacco, for chewing or smoking, will not be allowed either in or about the Academic buildings.
4. Playing at games of chance cannot be allowed.
5. Using profane language cannot be allowed.
6. The use of any kind of intoxicating drinks cannot be allowed, unless prescribed in case of sickness, by a regular physician.
7. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, cannot be permitted.
8. Gentlemen and ladies of the Institution will not be permitted to visit the rooms of the opposite sex, except in cases of imperious necessity, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.
9. Good order must be maintained at all times, and in all the rooms and halls of the Institution, and in all the intercourse of students with each other.
10. All students are required to retire regularly at the ringing of the bell designated for that purpose, as occasion may require; and to rise at the ringing of the morning bell, also designated.
11. Any room, occupied by students, will, at all times, be subject to the visitation of the Teachers of the Institution, who are required to see that the regulations are complied with.
12. Students will be required to keep their own rooms in good order, and to pay all unnecessary damages, either of rooms or of furniture furnished with the rooms.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

GOVERNMENT.

The Government of the students will be in the hands of the Principals, and will be strictly and steadily exercised, and at the same time, strictly parental. The object of our academic government being to secure the greatest possible amount of physical, intellectual, and moral good to the students themselves, regularity and order of exercises, and good and wholesome citizens to society. No unwarrantable means will be made use of to enforce the observance of the above regulations; yet our constant endeavor will be, to make the means resorted to as effective as humun means may be.

Parents who place their children in this Institution, and all students who are sufficiently old to understand the necessity of order, cannot be too well assured that the foregoing regulations form the most essential part of the contract between them and us; and that whatever student wantonly violates them, and shows himself incorrigibly determined on pursuing his waywardness, will be expelled from the privileges of the Institution, and will not be permitted to re-enter it again, without special proof of reformation. Nor will an expelled student have any deduction made from full term charges.

Farther, parents are requested not to place money for expenses, in the hands of students who are not old enough to use money with discretion and economy. Either of the Principals, or the Book-keeper of the Institution, will act as fiscal guardian of such students without charge.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

EXPENSES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Board, per term, | | from $14 50 to $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | | 1 50 |
| Washing, | | 2 50 |
| Fuel, | spring and fall, 75 cents, winter, | 1 50 |
| Tuition, | | from $3 50 to 5 00 |
| Lights, | | 1 50 |
| Incidental Expenses, | | 25 |
| Extras—Music on the Piano Forte, | | 10 00 |
| Oil Painting, | | 7 00 |
| Drawing, | | 2 00 |

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition (except the extras above mentioned) need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall, should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchange and losses.

A GLIMPSE OF THE CHINESE.

From a letter of Mrs. L. M. Carpenter to the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association.

SHANGHAI, April 12, 1848.

DEAR BRETHREN,—Mr. Carpenter suggests that your instructions to your missionaries, in which you request a statement of facts on various subjects, can be better responded to by their wives in some instances, as they often have access to persons and places where gentlemen do not, the customs of the Chinese being quite strict in this respect. And I, claiming a woman's prerogative of using the limits assigned me to the best advantage, intend to give you, not only what they cannot, but also what they need not, because I write it. And here let me say, that I begin no farther back than my last dates home, as I will not trouble you with a "thrice told tale," which to me is a weariness to tell, as it must therefore be to others to hear.

I begin with the Procession of the Umbrella Lanterns, which occurred soon after our last dates, namely, on the evening of the eighteenth of March. This I despair of describing adequately, although it passed directly under our windows, and I have since had the privilege of a still nearer view, having met it just without the city walls, a few evenings since, (on our return from the monthly concert at Dr. Bridgeman's,) and being obliged to stand still in the narrow street until the whole had passed. The procession includes about fifty umbrella lanterns, so called from their near resemblance to an umbrella. They are hexagonal, transparent, and most gorgeously ornamented with paintings, embroidery, silk fringe, and flowers. Wreaths and bouquets are placed on the top, and frequently small lanterns, in the form of flowers, birds, animals, serpents, and men, which, being also transparent, hollow, and lighted from within, add greatly to the brilliance of the scene. These lanterns are carried like umbrellas, above the heads of the people, and alternate with bands of music (and some very fine music too) and crowds of men and boys, and sometimes "women and children." The whole is usually preceded by four men, carrying a table, on which stand two other men bearing lanterns, and surrounded by lights. The expense of these lanterns must be very great, and it is said many persons actually abridge their domestic comforts, that they may be able to possess one; and, after all, there is nothing in it but a love of display and amusement—so our teacher says—and I would add, a love of the beautiful, which it certainly manifests on a large scale.

The Procession of the "Dragon Lantern," which took place on the evening of the fifth of March, is a much less showy affair. One long serpent-like form, made up of the cheap lanterns in common use, (which consist of oiled paper stretched in a cylindrical form over a network of ratans,) united by intervening pieces of silk gauze, of a yard or more in length, which answers to joints, form the body of the Dragon, the extremities only being really serpent-like, the head a very formidable one, and the whole figure lighted from within by small candles. It is carried above the heads of the crowd, and being twisted and coiled about in the most fantastic manner, represents all the writhings and contortions of the serpent, a fiery flying serpent, just ready to alight upon the noisy group below.

Our proximity to a large temple, at which these processions often stop, gives us a fine opportunity to behold them.

You have already been informed of our New-Year's Calls among our neighbors. We have since had an opportunity of extending our acquaintance, have once dined out; at which time we took our first practical lesson in the use of chop-sticks. The formalities of meeting being duly gone through, we were presented with the smoking apparatus, (a civility never omitted,) large metalic pipes, with wooden handles several feet in length, well filled with tobacco, and accompanied by the torch ready for lighting them. After excusing ourselves, as unaccustomed to such luxuries, they were removed, or monopolized by the other guests present, of whom there were a goodly number, and the indispensable tea was served in its place. This tea-drinking must be the same the world over, for I observe invariably the same effects here as are attributed to it at home, namely, the enlightening of the eyes, and the awaking of the perceptive faculties to the affairs of our neighbors in a wonderful manner, for it seems to be the time here for a general scrutiny into the personal merits and defects of its tantalized subjects. Our clothes are made the subject of general discussion and strict examination, our bonnets and gloves particularly, which have no parallels among Chinese ladies. Sometimes they attempt to put them on, but heads like theirs, full of natural bouquets, artificial flowers, "head bands, and crisping-pins, curls, chains, and bracelets, and mufflers," can hardly be crowded into bonnets like ours; and gloves meet with their proportionate number of impediments, in multitudes of rings and bracelets. Much is said about our painting our faces white and on this occasion our hostess insisted that I not only painted my face, but my hands, also and pushed back my sleeves to see if my arms too were painted. We are often asked if our country women use such paint as themselves, making no scruple of acknowledging the prevalence of this custom among the belles of the Empire.

Dinner came in due time. Chairs were placed for ourselves at the table, the others remaining standing; and here, as every where else, the whole course of things is reversed in China. First comes the dessert, nuts of several varieties, which were often taken from the shells and laid before us. Next followed sweetmeats, of many unnamable kinds, but mostly consisting of beans, and a peculiar kind of little white seeds, imbedded in sugar, and preserved in various forms and colors. Next followed cakes, some very fine; boiled pies, (I have no other name for them,) of the size and form of a common apple, filled with meat, sugar, and fruits, fried potatoes, and so forth.

We were furnished with ivory chop-sticks, but I must have displayed a sad want of skill in the use of them, for a kind lady at my left hand, seeing my dilemma, took the jeweled hair-pin from her own head, and passing it through the potatoes, handed it to me, asking at the same time if I had not been accustomed to chop-sticks, and finding I had not, seemed to consider me entitled to the benefits of the hair-pin for the remainder of the repast; and I am sure no poor fish ever nibbled more cautiously at a bait, than did I to avoid coming too near the gilded wire. At the close of the meal, tea was again brought in, after which the ladies invited me to a ramble through the house, leaving Mr. C. to entertain, and be entertained by, the gentlemen.

The apartments belonging to the different members of the family, consisted of a dormitory and an ante-chamber, comfortably furnished with all the appurtenances thereunto belonging, and sometimes tasteful and elegant additions of pictures, vases, flowers, plants, and embroidery. Large trunks, which they assured me were filled with clothes, were sometimes placed above each other, against the wall, reaching nearly its whole extent, and in some instances quite to the ceiling. Each inmate had a story to tell me of her own little personal affairs, or her individual projects, displaying her embroidery, her jewels, her head ornaments, or her furniture, and asking continually how I was pleased. Of course I was pleased with every thing, but in answer to their queries, was often obliged to confess that I had not been accustomed to their luxuries—that American ladies did not use such, &c. Some writer has said, that cleanliness was not included in the calendar of Chinese sins, and I am sure my conscience would not allow me to enter the different rooms with the flattering exclamation which is almost always heard upon the introduction of Chinese females into ours, "kway-zing, kway-zing," (clean, clean.) Upon our departure, we were as usual laden with mementos of the visit from the delicacies of the board, to which on this occasion were added some more enduring gifts, whose substantial forms will entitle them to a voyage across the deep, on the first opportunity.

Crowded as are the streets of Shanghai with men, women, and children—and teeming as they do with all the various avocations of life, from the most delicate needle-work, to the washing of cups and platters, the turning of the mill, or the ringing of the hammer upon the anvil, until the whole becomes as it were but one great work-shop—still the true pictures of domestic life are all behind the scenes. But go into some narrow street, (the widest are rarely twelve feet,) so narrow that two can scarcely pass without collision, where nothing but dead walls are to be seen on either side, with occasionally a small rude door, closed and bolted; knock at these same doors, and if the call is not answered by a frightened child, who, seeing you through the crevices, runs screaming away, you will probably be admitted, and the first feeling will be one of surprise at finding yourself suddenly in an open area, looking like a little hamlet in the country, with its grass-plots, its trees, its beds of flowers, and garden vegetables, and a little mimic lake, stagnant, it is true, and filthy in the extreme, bordered with willows, and bearing full testimony, that in all the varied walks of Chinese life, there may be found a lingering love of the beautiful, and an almost instinctive propensity to the cultivation of taste.

The blending of extremes among them is truly wonderful. Nothing can exceed the neatness, the scrupulous elegance, with which the toilet of a Chinese fashionable is performed, and you wonder whether the same richly-wrought satin robe, so intensely pure, could ever have been worn in the street before, or whether it is not doomed to certain ruin from the filthy elements of even the atmosphere we breathe. Yet such are they from day to day.

A GOOD SERMON.

BY REV. JOSHUA MARSDEN.

It should be brief; if lengthy, it will steep
Our hearts in apathy, our eyes in sleep;
The dull will yawn, the chapel lounger doze,
Attention flag, and memory's portals close.

It should be warm—a living altar-coal,
To melt the icy heart, and charm the soul:
A lifeless, dull harangue, however read,
Will never rouse the soul, or raise the dead.

It should be simple, practical, and clear;
No fine-spun theory to please the ear;
No curious lay, to tickle lettered pride,
And leave the poor and plain unedified.

It should be tender and affectionate,
As his warm theme who wept lost Salem's fate;
The fiery law, with words of love allayed,
Will sweetly warm, and awfully persuade.

It should be manly, just, and rational,
Wisely conceived, and well expressed withal;
Not stuffed with silly notions, apt to strain
A sacred desk, and show a muddy brain.

It should possess a well adapted grace,
To situation, audience, time, and place;
A sermon formed for scholars, statesmen, lords,
With peasants and mechanics ill accords.

It should with evangelic beauties bloom,
Like Paul's at Corinth, Athens, or at Rome.
Let some Epictetus or Sterne esteem;
A bleeding Jesus is the gospel theme.

It should be mixed with many an ardent prayer,
To reach the heart, and fix, and fasten there:
When God and man are mutually addressed,
God grants a blessing, man is truly blessed.

It should be closely, well applied, at last,
To make the moral nail securely fast:
"Thou art the man!" and thou alone wilt make
A Felix tremble, and a David quake!

THE MOLOKANERS OR MILK-EATERS.

SHORES OF THE BALTIC, May, 1848.

I have recently obtained some intelligence respecting a Russian colony, of considerable extent, singular origin, and very uncommon attainments; of which, though prevented by reasons affecting its political security from quoting all the sources of my information, I may convey to your readers some very interesting particulars.

Although doubtless the name of Temperance Societies was never heard in the wide Steppes of Russia, the thing itself is not unknown to a simple and true-hearted community of dissenters from the Russian-Greek Church, whose continued existence, and even increase, during many years of persecution, seems to have borne some resemblance to Israel's experience in Egypt; while their present comparative tranquility in the land of their banishment equally displays the power of divine grace, and the truth of the declaration that, "when a man's ways please the Lord, he will make even his enemies to be at peace with him." The first detailed account which I saw of the Molokaners, or Milk-eaters, was contained in a letter from the Rev. Mr. Roth, one of the Basle Missionaries, whose station, Helenendorf, may well be described as situated on the utmost verge of Christendom.

In the course of a missionary tour to Schamachi and its environs—a journey in which the Gospel messenger is exposed to dangers similar to those rehearsed by St. Paul, 2 Cor. 11 : 26—Mr. Roth met with a venerable member of this singular community, and he details the interview in the following words:—"It was in the middle of October, in one of those nearly impassable and wholly indescribable roads, with which nothing in Germany can be compared, that I again fell in with one of those Molokaners of whom I have before made mention. With this aged and highly-interesting disciple I was happily enabled to converse for some considerable time, as our several roads lay in the same direction, and one of my companions was capable of acting as interpreter between us. Before, however, entering on the chief subject of our discourse, it may be well to give a short account of the rise, past history, and present extent of this long-despised and severely-tried people.

"The Milk-eaters separated themselves from the Greek Communion, avowedly, on account of the invocation of saints, the various masses, the worship of pictures and relics, the prescribed use of the sign of the cross, and similar superstitious observances, insisted on by the Greek Church. In short, they took conscientious exception against every part of the public worship of that Church, excepting the sermon, which, however, (more especially in the country parishes,) is almost always omitted as superfluous. After enduring in their birth-place, which was situated in the interior of Russia, unspeakable hardships and oppressions, and seeing, year after year, many of their leaders exiled to Siberia, as obstinate heretics, it was a matter of thankfulness to them when the Russian government came to the determination, some eight or nine years since, to banish the whole of this pestilent sect to the Schamachian district in the province of Grusia. This punitive measure was no doubt meant for their hurt, but God turned it to good, and as, like Israel of old, the more they were oppressed the more they multiplied and grew, the Russian government may well have felt surprise at the amount of immigration to which this sentence of banishment gave rise; for there now exists in that wild region from sixty to eighty villages, containing many thousand families. The norm of their faith is simply the Scriptures of the Old and New Testament, their hymns are the Psalms of David, and the Bible knowledge possessed by both men and women among them may be justly termed extraordinary. Their public worship commences with the singing of a psalm; then follows an extempore prayer by one of their elders, who afterwards reads and expounds a chapter of the Bible, much in the manner, it would seem, of our Wirtemberg Scripture-readers. * * * The children of both sexes are, generally speaking, instructed by their own parents, although, where a person fitted for the task can be found in a village, a regular school is maintained. But, however accomplished, the result is a most happy one, since not one child above twelve years of age can be found among this people who does not possess a competent knowledge of reading and writing, as well as a rich store of Scripture passages committed to memory. In respect of morals, they are so exemplary, that few denominations of German Christians may bear comparison with them. When, for example, a dispute arises between two Molokaners, (which is said to be a very rare occurrence,) they feel bound in conscience to so literal a fulfillment of the apostolic admonition, "Let not the sun go down upon your wrath," that they make a rule of seeking out each other and shaking hands before sunset. A liar or a drunkard is unknown among them; indeed, the majority of them drink no species of fermented liquor, (although the use of such is not absolutely forbidden,) and hence the appellation of Milk-eaters, by which they are now generally known. Whether this name was at first assumed by themselves, or given in derision by others, I am unable to determine.

"Such being the character given of this singular and estimable sect by persons on whose testimony I feel warranted to depend, I return to my old fellow-traveler and the conversation which passed between us. You may imagine my surprise when, after some general remarks on religious topics, he addressed me as follows:—'I should feel greatly obliged if you will give me your opinion, whether we Molokaners are right in thinking that the coming of the Lord Jesus cannot be now far distant?' After stating to him my conviction, that according to Scripture we were bound to mark the movements of the nations, and especially the progress of the Gospel proclamation, as the finger-posts which should guide our judgment as to 'times and seasons;' but that, notwithstanding this, the prophecies of Scripture could only be safely pronounced upon after their fulfillment, and that, therefore, in my mind, no mortal man was empowered or entitled to decide, with authoritative certainty, when the coming of the Son of Man would take place;—I proceeded to impress upon him, to my best ability, the present duty to which we were all called, that of watchfulness with prayer, since our Lord himself compared his coming to that of a thief in the night, or to a flash of lightning, which may at any moment dazzle our astonished vision from the most unexpected quarter. The old man seemed satisfied with my answer, saying that was his own opinion too, and that it afforded him great pleasure to find their views on this question were shared by other Christians. I then observed, that in Germany, several very pious men had given much diligence to the examination of all that could throw light on the interesting questions connected with the 1260 years, and yet had never been able to satisfy even their minds so fully upon it as to fix the time of our Lord's second coming. 'Among others,' continued I, 'a very thorough search was made into this matter many years ago, by a distinguished man named Bengel; but even he found it too high for him to reach, and its depth too great for him to fathom.' On the mention of Bengel's name, the old man's countenance lighted up, and he exclaimed with animation, 'Oh! I know him—I know him well!' and farther converse proved him indeed no stranger to Bengel's sentiments. You may imagine my astonishment. Can it indeed be possible, that Bengel's Apocalypse or his Sixty Discourses have been translated into Russ? And yet, how else could this Russian become acquainted with his name and writings? Luther, too, appears to be a familiar name among the Molokaners, who sometimes indeed call themselves simply Lutherans, in opposition to the Russian Greek Church. But what a glorious hope does this excite as to the disclosures which the GREAT DAY shall make! What extensive good may we not then find has been accomplished by believing authors and preachers, compared with what either they or we ever dreamed of! And how large may be the accession to the 'white-robed multitude,' which shall then stand at the right hand of the JUDGE, from places of the earth deemed by us dark, only because they were to us unknown! 'Lastly,' concluded Mr. Roth, 'my old friend informed me that, but a very few weeks since, a fresh detachment, comprising several hundred families, had joined them from Russia, now no longer exiled by government, but coming of their own free will, to enjoy the liberty of faith and worship, granted to their co-religionists in their far, but not now desert home.'"

"LET THE DEAD BURY THEIR DEAD."

A writer in the Philadelphia Christian Observer has given a new exposition of this passage. To prepare the way for his exposition, he states the following historical facts. "Among all nations, there has ever been, and is now, a class of persons, who, from choice, or from the regulations of society, have the charge of burying the dead. Among the Hindoos, it is the business of a particular caste. Among the Parsees, who never bury their dead, but expose them in an open tower, where the flesh is devoured by vultures, a particular class of men take charge of the whole subject. The same thing exists among the Mohammedans, and among all the eastern nations. The ancient Greeks had their Entaphiastai, or those who prepared the body for interment. The ancient Romans had their Vespilliones, who carried the body to the grave in the evening; they had also their Sandapillones, or sextons, who carried the dead upon a bier. These persons were supported by the people for this express business. The Jews have had, from time immemorial, their Kabronim, or society of buriers; at present each synagogue has two of such societies; one of males for the interment of the men, and one composed of females for the preparing of their own sex for interment. Their business is to watch by the sick, to wash the body before burial, &c. The members of these societies are chosen by lot, and their services are performed without fee or reward." (See Alexander's Hebrew Ritual, page 186.)

The writer thinks it evident that such a class of persons were employed to bury the dead in the time of our Saviour. When Ananias was struck dead, the evangelist, Luke, tells us that "the young men (oi neoteroi) arose, carried him out, and buried him." It was the business of these young men to do so. The existence, then, of this class of persons, among the Jews, makes it certain, to my mind, that when one of the disciples asked permission to go and bury his father, the Savior referred to this class of men. They would attend to it. They were chosen by the people for the performance of that duty. And if this disciple had a particular part to perform, in the interment of his father, as is the case among the Hindoos now, he must relinquish even that duty to follow Jesus. We have the word now in use which exactly expresses the idea in the passage, namely, Undertakers. And by the adoption of this word, or of one conveying a similar idea, we get a right understanding of this verse. This makes all plain, and does away with the absurdity of committing the work of burying our friends, into the hands of those who are "dead in sin." If ano persons wish men, who are "dead in sin" or, who may at times be dead drunk, to bury their friends, they can be accommodated with such in this city; but we have no idea that the Saviour recommended that so sacred a work should be performed by profane hands. But with the explanation given, how plain, and how sensible, does the answer appear. One of the disciples desired permission to go home and assist in burying his father, who may or may not have been dead at that time. To this request the Savior replies, "Follow me; and let the buriers of the dead (i. e., the Undertakers, as we would say,) bury their dead. It is their work. There is other work for thee."

A MISSIONARY'S SERMON.

We recently noticed the return to this country from Ceylon of Dr. Poor, the veteran missionary of the American Board. On making a visit a short time ago to Danvers, Mass., the place of his birth, he found, on examining the records of the church with which he united in 1805, that he had been connected with it longer than any other surviving member. In an address to this church, published in the Boston Recorder, he spoke from this passage, in Romans 14, "Now, I beseech you, brethren, that you strive together with me in your prayers to God for me, that I may be delivered from them that do not believe in Judea, and that my service that I have for Jerusalem may be accepted of the saints; that I may come unto you with joy by the will of God, and may with you be refreshed." He accommodated the text so as to apply to his own case, and brought tears into the eyes of many. He said that on this his first appearance in the church of which he was the oldest member, he might be expected to make some report of his labors. One year of the thirty-three he had been absent, had been spent in going and returning; seven in Ceylon, twelve in Batticotta, six in the southern continent of India, and the last six or seven in Ceylon, the scene of his early labors. He had now left that field on a furlough of two years, at the earnest solicitation of his fellow laborers there, and of his friends at home, with the hope and expectation that he should thereby obtain a new lease of life, and return to his beloved employment and companions, refreshed both in body and spirit, and better able to carry out his great desire of serving his Lord and Master in that cause to which he had so early devoted himself—a desire which had been encouraged and cherished by his sainted mother.

In applying that part of the text in which the apostle prays for himself, he said, He had no occasion to pray to be delivered from enemies; but he felt the need of their prayers, that he might be kept from temptation in the new and strange scenes by which he was surrounded, that he might not say or do anything which might be an injury to the great cause. He found himself here in new and strange circumstances. The habits and manners of society had changed; the face of the country was changed; the means of travel and communication had changed. He had never seen a steamboat, or railroad, or electric telegraph, until his arrival in England a few weeks ago. And he said he did not know but the physical changes which everywhere met his eye, were indicative of moral changes equally great. He felt embarrassed. He really did not know what it was proper to say. He did not wish to be entangled in new or old school divinity, or in the various political questions which seemed so deeply to agitate the public mind; all good, perhaps, in their place; but he could not understand them, and he wished to avoid all such matters. He came to them, as the apostle said, 'to be refreshed.'

He came to get good and to do good; and he hoped to be better prepared on his return, to engage in his Master's service, and with a life strengthened and prolonged by this visit to his native land. He wished that his service for Jerusalem might be accepted of the saints, and that his visit might be the occasion of exciting them anew to labor for Zion. He firmly believed no one would so much as lift a finger towards carrying out God's great designs of mercy, without securing a blessing for himself.

PERIODICALS.—An exchange says: Religious newspapers are making giant strides in the extent of their circulation. It is truly wonderful, that within thirty-five years of the birth of the first of this species of newspapers, they should already number such an immense, as well as respectable progeny. The American Messenger, about five years old, takes the lead, having a circulation of 130,000 monthly; the Christian Miscellany, 60,000; the Early Days, 34,000; the London Family Visitor 60,000.

RAISING FUNDS FOR BENEVOLENT PURPOSES.

We have before us a letter from Bro. Levi H. Bond, of Lost Creek, Va., in which he expresses a great desire to see the Seventh-day Baptist denomination doing more than it is at present for the promulgation of the gospel generally, and of the truths which distinguish it in particular. In order to secure this, he proposes to be one of twenty to raise the sum of one thousand dollars, to be paid within two years, half of which shall be devoted to the Foreign Mission, one-quarter to the Tract Cause, and the balance to Home Missions. Or, if twenty cannot be found to raise one thousand dollars, he will be one of ten to raise five hundred dollars, in the same way, and for the same objects.

—We are glad to see the spirit manifested by Bro. Bond, and would very cheerfully lend any assistance in our power to carry out his plan, not even refusing to become one of the proposed twenty. Still we must confess some doubt as to the policy of adopting such expedients to raise specified sums. We have now a well-organized Missionary Society, which is designed to take the direction of both foreign and home missionary efforts, and which ought every year to receive and disburse three or four times the amount here proposed for either of these objects. We have also a Sabbath Tract Society, which is doing all in its power to disseminate truth on the subject of the Sabbath. Both of these Societies, we believe, enjoy the confidence of our people, as organizations through which they can safely and successfully dispense their benefactions. If we mistake not, the confidence in them, and the disposition to coöperate with them, is daily increasing. What is now needed most of all, is a deep sense of duty, on the part of the people, to contribute regularly and liberally for these objects. Our own conviction is, that a Christian has no more right to let the year roll round without considering how God has prospered him, and contributing to objects of benevolence accordingly, than he has to let the Sabbath come and go without attending to its duties. If this conviction could be wrought into the soul of every member of the denomination, there would be no deficiency of funds, and no necessity of new expedients to raise them. Thank God there are some, of whom this conviction seems to have taken possession, and whose contributions are as regular as the return of the seasons. Whether these contributions are according as God has prospered the givers, it is not for us to say. If they are, we feel sure that they will increase, instead of being diminished, in years to come. We know of instances in which individuals have determined to give a tenth, or even a fifth, of all their income to benevolent objects; and we believe no case can be found in which the ability of such persons has been reduced by carrying out this determination. Who can tell the glorious results which would follow the formation of a similar determination on the part of every individual? Let those who desire to see such a state of things brought about, give the influence of their words and example in favor of it. By saying this, we would not be understood to depreciate the plan of Bro. Bond, but only to insist that every one ought to give something, and that regularly, for benevolent objects; and if our societies are what they ought to be, let us all give to the extent of our ability through them, as the best mode of attaining the desired end. We have already hit upon a good plan. Let us carry it out fully and liberally, and then see if something will not be accomplished.

THE WAY THEY STOP SUNDAY MAILS.

Hon. Cave Johnson, the official head of the Post Office Department, has recently written a letter in relation to Sunday Mails, out of which the opponents of such mails will endeavor to make considerable capital. It seems that a clergyman residing somewhere in the State of New York, having read various newspaper notices of the discontinuance of Sunday Mails, took it upon him to write Mr. Johnson a letter, in which he gave him all the credit of their discontinuance, and highly applauded his course. Mr. Johnson, as in duty bound after such a flattering notice, wrote a very gentlemanly reply, and stated, among other things, that he "should be gratified to see the transportation of the mails, as well as every other species of labor, rest on the Sabbath." All very good—and if he had stopped there, his sabbatic orthodoxy would have been established. But he goes on farther to say, that the Sunday Mails have been discontinued only where the people have indicated a desire for their discontinuance by stopping the ordinary means of transportation. He assumes, that so long as the regular modes of conveyance, such as stages, rail-cars, and steamboats, are kept in operation, the mails must go also; but when these are discontinued, the Post Office Department will understand that the people no longer desire Sunday Mails, and will accordingly discontinue them.

At first view, this does not seem to amount to much. But let us see how it is used. Heretofore the railroad and steamboat companies have objected to giving up their Sunday business, because the mail must be carried, and if they carry the mail they can, without much additional expense, carry the passengers also. Now the opponents of Sunday Mails go to the Directors of these Companies, and show them, that having the monopoly of travel, they can do all of the business in six days of the week as well as in seven, thus reducing their expenses and increasing their profits. Of course they feel the force of such an argument, and seeing clearly that they can make more money by stopping on Sunday than by running, they conclude to stop, and the circumstance is trumpeted abroad as a triumph of religious principle. The Post Office Department being already pledged to discontinue the mails when the cars stop running, does so at once, and so the whole thing works to a charm. The railroads and steamboats make all the money by the operation, while all the inconvenience falls upon the traveling and commercial community. And this they call carrying out the wishes of the people!

CHRIST THE END OF THE LAW.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Inasmuch as I have heretofore suggested to you some of my objections to Doctor Chalmers' explanation of Rom. 10: 4, "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth;" and inasmuch as my objections (or criticisms) have been made public; and inasmuch as I signified that I did not know but I might try to give a better explanation of that text, in case no other one would undertake it—it may be that some of your readers expect to hear something from me on the subject. But having thought more about it, it has occurred to my mind, that perhaps I had better say but little, lest in my weakness I should commit a blunder as erroneous as I supposed the Doctor had done, and at last have to undergo the criticisms of the learned. I will venture, however, to give my views of that passage, in as few words as I conveniently can.

I supposed the Doctor's mistake consisted mainly in his taking Paul in that text to allude to the moral law, which I think he did not. I wish it distinctly understood, that when I use the term moral law, I mean the ten commandments. I think that people are often led into gross errors by mistaking the meaning of the writer when he uses the word law. The writers of the New Testament do not always define particularly what law they allude to when they use that word; but, by carefully comparing it with the general tenor of the book, I think we may come to a pretty correct conclusion in the premises. When Christ said he did not come to destroy (or dissolve) the law, he could not have meant the Levitical law, because he did put an end to that to all true believers, whether Jew or Gentile; of course, he must have meant the moral law, which is clearly understood from his following words: "Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments," &c. And when Paul said, "By the law is the knowledge of sin," he no doubt alluded to the moral law, for he repeated one of the ten commandments to show his meaning. But when he said, "For what the law could not do, in that it was weak through the flesh," we cannot suppose that he then meant the moral law, for surely there can be no weakness in that which is perfect and immutable. And I think he must have had allusion to the law of sacrifices, which he says made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did. And this same law of sacrifices and the priesthood was undoubtedly what Paul meant when he said, "The priesthood being changed, there is made of necessity a change also of the law;" not the moral law, for we Seventh-day Baptists do not believe there ever was any change of the moral law. Some people, it seems, take the word law here to refer to the moral law, and use it as an argument for the change of the Sabbath. Many other passages might be quoted, which plainly show that the word law is often used in the New Testament without any allusion to the moral law, but more commonly alludes to the Levitical priesthood and sacrifices. And this law, and no other, undoubtedly the Apostle had in view when he said, "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth." To this law Christ was the end in every sense of the word; for if we take the word end as equivalent to purpose, as Dr. Chalmers says we must, the very purpose for which this law was instituted was to point the minds of the people to Christ, the great sacrifice that was in process of time to be offered. This law was, as Paul said, a shadow of good things to come. But really I can see nothing in the moral law that in anywise resembles a shadow. It is something solid, and not like a shadow, that appears for a little while, and then vanishes away, as the law of sacrifices did.

Again, Paul says the law was our schoolmaster to bring us unto Christ, (or until Christ.) And I can see nothing in the moral law that resembles a schoolmaster, unless it be such an one as I never heard of—one that would do nothing for his scholars but whip them to death because they and their forefathers had disobeyed the orders of the school. Doctor Chalmers says, "There is one obvious sense in which Christ is the end of the law, (meaning the moral law,) and that is, when the law, viewed as a schoolmaster, brings us to the conclusion, as to its last lesson, that Christ is our only refuge." Now such a statement as this seems to me to be entirely visionary; for I cannot see what there is in the moral law that would teach us that Christ is our refuge, or that would teach any thing at all about Christ, or any way of escape from the penalty. I thought, indeed, it was gospel, and that only, that taught such a lesson, and there is no such thing as gospel in the moral law. Take away the gospel, and what would the moral law teach? View it as a schoolmaster, if you please, and as such it would teach nothing but condemnation and death to every transgressor. Still, these things considered, I think it is clear, that Paul had no allusion to the moral law when he said, Christ is the end of the law for righteousness. We find (Deut. 6: 22) that Moses told the children of Israel it should be their righteousness, if they should observe to do all those statutes as the Lord had commanded them; and of course we must conclude, that they had always considered it to be their righteousness, for it seems that they trusted in Moses, as Christ said they did. But Paul would have them understand, that it should no longer be considered their righteousness to offer those sacrifices which could never take away sin, nor make the comers thereunto perfect, but had only served as a schoolmaster to lead them to Christ; and as Christ has already come, we are now no longer under such a schoolmaster. Christ is the end of the law of sacrifices for righteousness to every one that believeth. Now let it only be understood, that the Jews, believing and trusting in the declaration of Moses, that it was their righteousness to do all the statutes of the ceremonial law; and also understand, that it was the ceremonial law, and that only, that Paul meant when he said Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth; I say, allowing such to be the true facts in the case, and the text in question needs no farther explanation. It means exactly what it says, no more and no less, and there is no mystery in it to be explained. But to propagate the doctrine that Christ was the end of the moral law, appears to me to be opening an awful flood-gate to all sorts of iniquity, and the profanation of the Sabbath in particular. And I think it probable that Doctor Chalmers' mistake originally grew out of his preconceived unscriptural doctrine of supererrogation and imputed righteousness; that is, if I understand it, that Christ had so much righteousness over and above what he needed for himself, that he could supply all that would come to him for it, with righteousness sufficient to form their right and title deed of entry into the kingdom of God; or, in other words, he could furnish them with so much of his own extra obedience or righteousness as would qualify them to be justified by the deeds of the law, even if they had never kept a syllable of it themselves. I would not by any means willingly misconstrue any thing the Doctor has said, but what I have just now stated, appears to me to be the exact amount of his theory.

EASTERN ASSOCIATION—EXECUTIVE BOARD.

The semi-annual session of the Executive Board of the Eastern Association was held at Hopkinton City, R. I., Nov. 15, at which time reports from its missionaries were read, from which the following extracts are taken:—

Bro. Lewis says: "The season I enjoyed among our brethren at Phœnix was really pleasant. I preached twice on the Sabbath, and three times on first day. On Sabbath afternoon we held our meeting in a newly-erected Episcopal Chapel, the occupancy of which our people are permitted to have when not in use by its own society. I regard this as very favorable just at this time. . . . My appointments at Portsmouth are continued regularly every first day, and I am expected to supply them for a time not as yet definitely fixed. . . . At Newport, our meetings are now held on the Sabbath in the afternoon only, as one family have removed to Pawcatuck, and one or two members are detained at home by bodily indisposition. I have resumed my evening appointment on Cononicut; and as Elder Carr has removed, I am the only minister left there."

Brother Clarke, missionary at Green Hill, says: "The past has been more successful than might reasonably have been expected, from so little labor and so much opposition. None have fallen from the truth. In worship, a commendable zeal is manifest, and I have often felt that it was good for me to be there. . . . I cannot feel to abandon that field, [South Kingston,] but would urge my brethren of the other churches to hold forth the word of life there, expecting that God will bless their labor of love. The truth must have time to germinate and bring forth fruit. Now may be a crisis with some, and if our interest falls off, they may think that the truth for which we labor is not so essential."

Bro. Clarke accompanied his report with some very cogent remarks. His report states that he had baptized one of late, and that five others had signified their intention to unite with the church.

The Treasurer submitted a report, showing great delinquency in the churches about forwarding their amounts pledged. Also, that the whole amount now pledged would not continue our present operations much beyond the 1st of February, 1849.

The Board instructed the Corresponding Secretary to continue the mission so long as the funds will warrant. In behalf of the Board, the Secretary would respectfully request each church to forward immediately to the Treasurer their sums pledged, and, if consistent, to add to the same a sufficient proportion to continue the mission during the associational year. Something over one hundred dollars more than is pledged will be required to continue the present operations to the close of the year in May, 1849.

The Board adjourned to meet at Westerly on the first day following the second Sabbath in February, 1849, at 10 o'clock, A. M.

Proposed Pantheistic Temple at Paris.—A scheme has lately been put forth at Paris for converting the Pantheon, agreeably to its name, into an idol temple, in which all religions are to be combined. An artist of the name of Chevenard has been entrusted with the execution of it by M. Ledru Rollin. The plan of the artist is fully developed in the published account, from which the following is an extract:—

"Men of all nations, and of all ages, may enter that Temple, (the Pantheon,) and find there the objects of their worship; the Chaldean his stars; the Egyptian his Osiris, Isis, and Typhon; the Indian his Brahma with all his Avatars; the Hebrew, Jehovah; the Persian, Ormuzd and Ahirman; the Greek and Roman, their Olympus with its full complement of gods; the Christian, his Christ eighteen times glorified; the Northern barbarian, his gods shivering beneath Polar snow; the Mahomedan, who hates images, his Prophet with his face veiled by a flame; the Druse, his calf Hakem, with his azure eyes and his lion mask. Every one will be able to say his prayers in that universal Church, the true metropolis of the human race."

THE WORKING OF EMANCIPATION IN JAMAICA.

The great British emancipation act, which, on the first of August, 1838, converted 800,000 West India slaves into free men, was a new era in the history of human freedom, and its results have been watched with intense interest, from both sides of the Atlantic. Different representations have been made, according to the different opportunities which writers on this subject have had for forming a correct judgment. Nowhere have we seen statements which seemed more candid, discriminating, and intelligent, than in the October number of the New Englander. The writer, (supposed to be Rev. C. S. Renshaw,) speaks from extended personal observation, having resided some time in Jamaica, as a missionary. He confines his attention to this Island, as giving the most full and fair view of the working of emancipation.

Jamaica, he states, is about 6400 square miles in extent, or about as large as the State of Massachusetts, and has a population of about half a million. The population is divided into three classes, viz: white, brown, and black. The brown men gradually rose in wealth and influence, and after a severe struggle, obtained for themselves equal rights, eight years before the emancipation of the blacks.

"The progress of this class has been very rapid. Immediately after their enfranchisement, two of their number were returned to the local Legislature, and others have been added at each successive election, until about one-third of the whole representation is by colored members."

The condition of the emancipated blacks, their domestic habits, improvements, &c., are matters of special interest, and of these the writer thus speaks:

"The whole rural population have homes.—For the most part they live in the same places, and, perhaps, in the same huts, in which slavery left them. These are very low, small, rude tenements, of from ten feet square, divided into two rooms, to fourteen feet by twenty-four, divided into three or four. The posts of the house are fastened into the earth, which is slightly raised and beaten hard for a floor; the sides are made of bamboo, cut and split to the size of laths, which is daubed or plastered with mud, on one side or both, and rubbed till smooth and hard; and by successive rubbings, and filling up the cracks, this process makes a neat wall. The roof is thatched with long grass, or with the leaves of the cocoa-nut tree; it is often a foot thick, reaching nearly down to the ground. The under surface is smoked to a glossy black, to protect it from the vermin with which the island abounds.

"Many thousand huts have been built since the emancipation, and they are uniformly better than the slave huts; higher, larger, better ventilated. A few are boarded up, more are shingled, and many are floored. All manifest an improved taste, style, and manner of living. About twenty thousand of the peasantry have become freeholders. Not only have the people homes—they have the means of a comfortable subsistence. Every man, woman, and half-grown child, has a provision ground, in which they cultivate yams, cocoas, (a root somewhat resembling a beet, but of a much finer, firmer texture,) plantains, sugar-cane, cassada, coffee, corn, beans, &c., &c., which they sell or barter for bread, biscuit, butter, sugar, cheese, lard, fish, meats, soap, candles, &c."

Much has been done in a religious way, for the elevation of the freed men. The number and denominations of missionaries in Jamaica, is thus stated:

"Since the decree of emancipation, the missionary bodies of England have vied with each other, in their efforts for the moral elevation of the freed men. In 1824, there were, perhaps, forty-five ministers of religion in Jamaica;—some of these were State-paid hirelings—seventeen were dissenting missionaries. In 1831, there were nearly one hundred ministers, forty-four of whom were dissenters. There are now not less than two hundred and ten ministers, of whom about one hundred are of the established churches of England and Scotland, thirty are Wesleyans, twenty-six Baptists, sixteen Presbyterians, thirteen Independents, fifteen Moravians, five "Wesleyan New Connection," four American Congregationalists. Besides these, there are three Jews, five Catholics, and twenty-five Native Baptists."

N. Y. Baptist Education Society.—The annual meeting of this Society was held in Hamilton, N. Y., on the 15th of August last, at which the reports of the various officers were presented. From the Treasurer's Report, it appears that the receipts of the past year were $14,199 07, and the disbursements were $13,901 63. The value of the Society's property, after deducting its indebtedness, is estimated at $80,905 87.

The Jews in Hartford, Ct.—The Christian Secretary says that there are some four hundred Jews in Hartford, Ct., who attend the Jewish service regularly, in a hall fitted up for the purpose. "At the commencement of their new year, a few weeks since, their shops were closed nearly all the week; they are also closed on Saturdays."

Lectures on Europe.—At the request of many citizens, Dr. Baird has recently commenced in New York a course of lectures on the present condition of Europe, the entire avails of which are to be devoted to the aid of the religious societies in France. Probably no man in this country is better qualified than Dr. Baird to describe Europe as it is.

TRACT OPERATIONS.

At the late Anniversary of the American Sabbath Tract Society, an earnest desire was expressed to have its operations extended, by the employment of colporteurs, to distribute publications, and endeavor to awaken interest upon the subject of the Sabbath. Encouraged by this, the Board has already appointed four brethren to labor as colporteurs during parts of the year to come, and correspondence has been opened with two other brethren in view of their appointment. New editions of Tracts have also been printed, and matters are being put in a shape to do more in future than has heretofore been done. To carry forward these operations with vigor, increased liberality will be required on the part of friends and contributors. We believe that many stand ready to increase their contributions, when they see a prospect of their being put to good use. Now is the time to send them on. Let every one who desires to see things moving, consider how God has prospered him, and appropriate accordingly. Letters may be addressed to the Treasurer, T. B. Stillman, or to the Corresponding Secretary, Geo. B. Utter.

The Odious Black-Laws.—A Committee appointed for the purpose by "Friends" of the Congregational order, convened in Annual Meeting at Green Plains, Clark County, Ohio, Sept. 28th and 29th, 1848, have published an address and form of petition against the unjust and iniquitous laws which make distinctions between persons on account of color. Believing that it is only necessary to arouse and concentrate against them the moral sense of the people, they request every man and woman into whose hands the following petition shall fall, to consider himself or herself especially called upon to circulate it, or something similar, obtain every name which can be had, and forward the same to some member of the Legislature for presentation at an early day:—

Form of Petition.

To the Senate and House of Representatives, in the State of ——:

The undersigned, residents of the State of ——, respectfully represent that we believe all laws making distinctions between persons on account of color, to be unwise and injurious to both white and black, and highly iniquitous; and we therefore respectfully request you to repeal all laws upon our statute books creating such distinctions.

Murder of Missionaries.—It is stated in English papers, that Dr. Bettleheim and his family have all been murdered at the capital of Loo Choo, China, where they were residing. Dr. Bettleheim, who went to Loo Choo under the auspices of the Bishop of London, who promised to ordain him after a specified term of service in the Loo Choo Mission, was a native of Hungary, was originally of the Jewish persuasion, and was educated for the surgical profession, but afterward joined the Church of England. He was a young man of much talent, and of no inconsiderable experience. His wife was a native of London, and they had two children. The disastrous fate which has fallen upon them is said to have visited the Romish missionaries also.

Two Aged Ministers.—The following incident, which occurred at a recent session of the Kentucky Methodist Conference, is narrated by the editor of the Nashville Christian Advocate, who was present:—

"During the morning session the Rev. Benjamin Northcot, an aged and venerable local minister, was introduced to the conference. He was a traveling preacher in Kentucky as early as the year 1790 or 91, and is now in his 78th year. Having received the salutations of the bishop and members, his eye rested on the venerable William Burke, his colleague in early times, and in a moment they were in each other's arms, like old companions, who had fought side by side, they now rejoiced in their trophies, having before them the fruits of their early toils. The effect was most thrilling; the members and the spectators present were bathed in tears, and felt they were in the presence of worthy patriarchs."

The Largest Connecticut Ship.—On Monday, the 6th inst., a ship was launched from the yard of the Messrs. Greenman, at Mystic Bridge, Ct., which is supposed to be the largest ever built in that State. She has three decks, and under the present law will be able to carry some five hundred steerage passengers. Her burden is estimated at eight hundred tons, which is a little larger than the Niagara, launched from the same yard several months since. She is named the "Silas Greenman," after a veteran ship-builder of that name, recently deceased, the father of the present company.

Blackwood's Magazine for November, republished by Leonard Scott & Co., was laid on our table three days before we could have received a copy from Edinburg. The following is its table of contents:—A Glimpse at Germany and its Parliament; Satires and Caricatures of the Eighteenth Century; A Parcel from Paris; Life in the Far West; The late George Frederick Ruxton; The Naval War of the French Revolution; Danube and the Euxine; The Memoirs of Lord Castlereagh; A Call; What is Spain about? ## THE LATEST FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamship Acadia, which sailed from Liverpool on the 4th inst., arrived at Boston on the 19th. We give a summary of the news brought by her.

From England, we learn that the cholera does not make very rapid progress. During the week previous to the sailing of the steamer, there were but 34 deaths in London while the average daily number was only one for the antecedent five days. In Edinburg and the neighborhood, it still lingers; there have been five deaths since the last report, making 169 deaths since Oct. 4, out of 290 cases.

The news from Ireland is not particularly important. It is said that the Attorney General has given his fiat for the issue of a writ of error, under the certificate lodged by Mr. O'Brien's counsel at his trial and conviction at Clonmel. Consequent on this proceeding, the distinguished prisoner will be taken up at once to Dublin to have the writ argued in the Court of Queen's Bench. whence, if the decision there be not favorable, it will be removed to the House of Lords, as in the case of the State prisoners of 1844. A similar sanction has been granted upon the cases of Messrs. Meagher, McManus, and O'Donoghue.

In France, the election of the first President of the Republic, now absorbs public attention It seems that a large majority of the National Assembly had come to a determination to support a motion postponing the election until February, but the decided opposition of General Cavaignac to any farther delay, changed their resolution, and it was finally resolved that the President should be chosen on the 10th of December, as originally fixed upon. The success of Louis Napoleon is considered as certain by his own partizans. There were serious riots among the soldiery in Paris on the day before the steamer sailed.

The most important and exciting intelligence by this arrival is from Vienna. That city is surrounded by the forces heretofore enumerated, but the interrupted communication between the beleagured and the rest of Europe, preclude anything like a detail of the eventful circumstances. The water and gas-pipes which supplied Vienna have been cut off by the Imperial troops, a strong conflict having taken place before they could capture the establishments from which these conduits ran. The whole week has been spent in desultory, isolated conflicts, attended with considerable slaughter, between the besieged and the besiegers, and the besiegers seem to have wished to arrive at the frightful last resource of bombardment. The latest dispatches say that beyond a doubt the city has been attacked and bombarded by Windischgratz, and that his troops have suffered severely, and had failed to make themselves masters of the town. Jellachich has been compelled to retire, and the citizens are determined to destroy the city rather than surrender. The defense of Vienna can only be paralleled by the defense of Sarragossa.

The overland mail has arrived from India. The British forces have sustained a defeat in the direction of Moultan. The reverse is said to have been caused by the treachery of the auxiliary Sikh troops, under the command of Shere-Singh, who, just as General Whish's brigade had commenced operations, promising the most brilliant results, deserted, and with 5000 men joined the forces of the Dewan. It is alleged that the plot had been preconcerted, and the sudden manner in which the desertion appears to have been made gives color to the allegation. The event, as a matter of course, caused the tactics of the British to be instantly changed. General Whish raised the siege, and made a retrograde movement to unite his forces to an intrenched camp, some fifteen miles distant from the citadel.

Important Indian Treaty.—General Wm. Medill, Superintendent of Indian Affairs, has bought off all the right of the Menominee Indians in the Territory of Wisconsin, whereby the United States have acquired the title to 4,000,000 acres of new territory in Wisconsin, embracing land on the Fox and Wisconsin rivers, and laid down in the recent maps as part of Brown, Portage, and Wisconsin counties. It embraces Little and Big Bull Falls, Whitney's Mills, &c.

Some years ago, Congress granted to Wisconsin the alternate sections to complete a canal between the Fox and Wisconsin rivers. The canal could not be made because the Indians owned much of the land. It has now been bought; and two days after making the treaty, two hundred squatters had laid their claims. The land is very rich and valuable.

Several attempts have been made to treat with this very old and once powerful tribe of Indians, of which Osk-Kosk is Chief. But all have been unsuccessful. He is connected with some of the wealthiest and most influential citizens of the Mississippi on the Crow-wing river, near where the Winnebagoes now are, and on land which the Government bought of the Chippewas.

The treaty is a very fair one for both parties. The Indians get about $300,000; and, out of this, a specific sum is set apart for a manual labor school, a grist-mill, blacksmith-shop, and the support of a miller for fifteen years. The Indians remove themselves, and thus save those swindling operations which are gone into by contractors in their removal. Thus the whole matter is a plain business transaction between the Indians and the Government. There are no reserves in the matter to make trouble.

Drunkenness among the Hindoos.—It is a lamentable fact, that many of the Hindoos, (who were formerly a temperate people,) of all ranks, are learning to drink, and are fast becoming drunkards. This fact is sufficient ground to lead every Christian to examine, with anxious solicitude, the connection between the drinking usages of Christendom, and the prospective ruin of this interesting people.

New Steamboat for Seneca Lake—Railroad Enterprise.—The proprietors of the present line of steamboats on Seneca Lake, have just procured from New York the model of a boat which they design building within the next year, designed to run as a passenger boat on Seneca Lake. It is proposed to build it 244 feet long, with 30-feet beam, 11-feet stroke, and a 50-inch cylinder. With this sized craft, it is anticipated that the run of the lake will be made in 2 1-4 hours. Indeed, the Company have made a contract to perform the trip in this time.

In connection with this enterprise, there is another upon which its consummation depends. The Chemung Railroad, to run from the head of the Lake to a point near Elmira, where it intersects the New York & Erie Railroad, is already under contract, and is to be finished by the 1st of November, 1849. The Directors of the New York & Erie Railroad have contracted for the use of this connecting link for ten years, on payment of eight per cent on the cost of construction, with the privilege of another ten years at ten per cent. This secures to the stock holders of the Chemung road a good return for their investment. To carry out the plan still farther, and make the arrangement more perfect, the Company have also made a contract with the proprietors of the Seneca Lake boats to carry passengers for ten years, thus enabling them to receipt fare from N. Y. to Geneva. Through tickets will probably be about $5, and the time saved by this route, between Geneva and New York, it is said, will be some 8 or 10 hours. [Rochester Adv.

Extraordinary Case.—There fell under our observation yesterday, says the Kingston (Ulster Co.) Journal, the most singular case of disease we ever witnessed. The subject is a man named Snyder, aged 35 years, residing in the town of Warwarsing, in this county. Four months ago he had an attack of sickness, but recovered, and was to all appearance entirely healed. About a fortnight after his recovery he was seized with drowsiness, and for some time after slept nearly two thirds of the day. The disease continued to increase, until he would sleep two or three days without waking. When we saw him yesterday he was continuing an uninterrupted sleep of five days. His pulse is regular, though not very full; his respiration is easy and natural, and his skin moist and cool. If food or drink be placed in his mouth he swallows it, and he walks when led by the hand and slightly supported. On Thursday last he awoke from a sleep of two days, spoke a few words, struck a lady who was in the room violently with a chair, and almost immediately afterward sunk into his present slumber. He is on his way to the New York Hospital.

The Mode of Electing the President.—Electors of the President and Vice President will meet in the Capitols of their respective States on the first Wednesday of December next, being the 6th day of the month, and will proceed to vote for President and Vice President, which vote will be duly recorded. Copies of the record will be made out and authenticated, and sent to Washington by a special messenger, there to be delivered to Congress.

On the day fixed for the purpose, the record of the votes will be opened in the presence of the two Houses, and the result declared. Messengers will then be dispatched to the gentlemen chosen, informing them of their election, and requesting them to attend at Washington to take the oaths of office, and enter upon their duties.

The term of Mr. Polk will expire on the 4th of March, and that is the day fixed for the inauguration of the new President. But as the next 4th of March comes on Sunday, the inauguration will not take place till Monday, the 5th. In 1821, on the election of Mr. Monroe to his second term, the 4th of March came on Sunday, and the oath of office was administered on Monday, the 5th.

Death of an Eccentric Character.—Died, on the 15th, in Boston, William G. Baylies, aged 63 years, leaving a fortune estimated at over $200,000. For six months past the deceased has confined himself entirely to his room, refusing to see any one—even his own brother—but the lady at whose house he boarded. He has not during the whole time washed himself or shaved; has changed his linen only when he could no longer keep it on him; and has patched his clothes until little or nothing of the original cloth could be seen. He has, so far as is known, taken nothing of late but strong coffee without milk. He refused to the last to take any medicine or to see a physician.

SUMMARY.

A Manchester landlord recently levied for rent upon the studio of his tenant, a sculptor, of the name of Clarke, and sold under the hammer about £400 worth of busts for £60. It was proved that the auctioneer sold the head of John Wesley for that of Volatire; one of Chantrey as "a bald-headed chap's;" that of Raffaelle as "a long-haired show boy's;" and that of Sir Charles Bell, as Deaf Burke's! The jury, indignant at the oppression of the landlord, the ignorance of the auctioneer, and the desecration of arts, gave the sculptor £550 damages!

A boy about eight years old died last week in Willet-st., N. Y., of hydrophobia. He was bitten several months since. It should be remembered, that there exists a substance said to be an infallible specific against this disease, called hydrophobine, and known, we believe, to most physicians. The best reliance, however, is on cutting away the wound as soon as possible after the bite, and cauterizing with a red-hot iron. This has, so far as we know or have read, never failed. [Tribune.

The Norwich Aurora says that a clergyman in that city, put a vote into the ballot-box, on the back of which he appended the following prayer:—"May God grant that this vote, given with extreme reluctance and many fears, may not contribute to perpetuate the shame and crime of my beloved country, nor bring upon her the curse of Heaven."

The late Rev. Dr. Milnor, of New York, while a member of Congress from Pennsylvania, (where he was then an eminent lawyer,) was once challenged to mortal combat by Mr. Clay—as appears by Rev. Dr. Stone's memoir, about to be published by the American Tract Society.

The Syracuse Star mentions the discovery of a bed of Anthracite near the town of Camillus, Onondaga county—in appearance precisely similar to the Pennsylvania production. The land upon which the coal has been discovered is about a mile and a half south of the village, in a hilly though fertile section.

The Great Dam built across the Connecticut river for the manufactories at what is called the "New City," was filled on Thursday last. It is thirty feet high, and the water rose within two feet of the top, when the work below gave way, and the whole concern was destroyed. The loss will probably be $100,000. It was built too straight.

Cist's Advertiser says that the Messrs. Bogen, of Cincinnati, have cut 10,000 hogs in the last twelve months into sausages, and that they weighed 2,000,000 pounds.

CONSTITUTION
OF A
SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

Art. 1.—This Society shall be known by the name of "The Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society."

Art. 2.—The object of this Society shall be to print and publish such periodicals, books, &c., as shall meet the wants of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination, and promote the cause of Christ generally.

Art. 3.—Each contributor of five dollars may become a Member of the Society, and each contributor of twenty-five dollars may become an Honorary Director, with the privilege of participating in the deliberations of the Board of Managers.

Art. 4.—The Society shall hold an Annual Meeting, at which it shall elect a President, a Vice President, a Corresponding Secretary, a Recording Secretary, and a Treasurer, who, together with four others elected for the purpose, shall constitute a Board of Managers to conduct the business of the Society, having power to make their own by-laws, and to fill any vacancies that may occur in their body.

Art. 5.—The Board of Managers shall meet quarterly for the transaction of business, at such time and place as shall have been appointed at a previous meeting. The Recording Secretary shall call extra meetings of the Board, whenever any three members of the Board shall request him to do so.

Art. 6.—The minutes of each meeting of the Board shall be signed by the Chairman and the Recording Secretary.

Art. 7.—The first Annual Meeting of the Society shall be held in the City of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, 1849, (25th day of the month;) and subsequent Annual Meetings may be held at such times and places as the Society shall direct. At these meetings the Board of Managers shall present a Report of their transactions, together with the Treasurer's account.

Art. 8.—Should there at any time, on the presentation of the Annual Report of the Board of Managers, be a surplus on hand, over and above what may, in the judgment of the Board, be required to meet the wants of the establishment, the Society shall divide such surplus in equal sums among the following benevolent objects, viz: Missions, the circulation of religious Tracts, the education of candidates for the ministry, and the support of indigent superannuated ministers or their widows and orphans. Should the Society for any reason ever be dissolved, its property, if any, shall be divided in the same manner as above provided in case of surplus.

Art. 9.—This Constitution may be altered at any Annual Meeting of the Society, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

☞ The above is the Constitution formed by delegates from the Eastern, Central, and Western Associations, at a meeting held in New Market, N. J., on the 5th and 6th days of September last. It is kept standing for the purpose of giving all an opportunity to become familiar with it. Will not some friend of the cause, in each section of the denomination, volunteer to obtain what members he can in his own neighborhood, and forward their names?

PROSPECTUS OF THE
EDINBURGH QUARTERLY MAGAZINE
OF MOAAL AND INTELLECTUAL SCIENCE.
Volume I. for 1848—American edition.
GEORGE COMBE AND ROBERT COX, EDITORS.

THE many and earnest desires expressed by the lovers of Phrenology on this side of the Atlantic, and the hope of still further advancing this great cause, has induced us to publish an American edition of this profound and

SCIENTIFIC QUARTERLY.

Its character and merits need but little comment, further than that it emanates from some of the ablest minds in England and Scotland, and has been before the public more than twenty years.

GEORGE COMBE,

The distinguished phrenological writer, is its principal contributor and virtual conductor. This work embodies all the new discoveries, together with all of interest which appertains to Phrenological Science.

MAGNETISM

It also advocates, showing its adaptation to medical science, to the relief of human suffering, and to its other various and important applications.

It also urges, with great ability and pre-eminent success,

HUMAN RIGHTS,

Showing the bearings of this science of mind to legislation, moral and political government, as well as to individual self control and intellectual cultivation.

The first number will be embellished with a beautiful portrait of Mr. Combe, and subsequent numbers by those of other distinguished individuals. Each number will contain 96 pages, and will be issued quarterly on the following REDUCED TERMS, invariably in advance:

Miscellaneous.

WHAT MUST IT BE TO BE THERE!

We speak of the realms of the blest,
Of that country so bright and so fair;
And oft are its glories confess'd;
But what must it be to be there!

We speak of its pathway of gold,
And its walls deck'd with jewels most rare;
Of its wonders and pleasures untold;
But what must it be to be there!

We speak of its freedom from sin;
From sorrow, temptation, and care;
From trials without and within;
But what must it be to be there!

We speak of its service of love;
Of the robes which the glorified wear;
Of the Church of the first-born above;
But what must it be to be there!

Then let us, 'midst pleasure and wo,
Still for heaven our spirits prepare;
And shortly we also shall know,
And feel what it is to be there!

THE SUFFERINGS, PERSEVERANCE, AND TRIUMPH OF GENIUS.

There is at present in England an American who went to that country to endeavor to interest the capitalists in a new bridge which he has constructed. His name is Remington, and he is a native of Virginia. An account of his progress is given by himself, in the following letter to the late Dixon H. Lewis, and is published in Hunt's Merchant's Magazine.

STAFFORD, England, Aug. 15, 1848.

MY DEAR SIR:—I should have written sooner but that I had nothing pleasant to say. I reached London on the first of January, 1847, without money or friends, which was just the thing I desired when I left America, and just the thing I assure you I will never desire again. I commenced operations at once, on the supposition that in this overgrown city, I would at least enlist one man. But Englishmen are not Americans. An Englishman will advance any amount on an absolute certainty, but not one penny where there is the slightest risk, if he got the whole world by it. I spent the first five months looking for this man with unparalleled perseverance and industry, living for less than threepence per day.

I am convinced that few persons in London know so much of that incomprehensibly large city as myself. But alas! my wardrobe was gone to supply me with wretchedly baked corn bread, on which I lived entirely. I slept on straw, for which I paid a halfpenny per night. I became ragged and filthy, and could no longer go among men of business. Up to this time my spirits never sunk, nor did they then; but my sufferings were great. My limbs distorted with rheumatism, induced by cold and exposure—my face and head swelled to a most unnatural size with cold and tooth-ache, and those who slept in the same horrid den as myself were wretched street beggars, the very cleanest of them literally alive with all manner of creeping things. But I was no beggar; I never begged, nor ever asked a favor of any man since I came to England. Ask George Bancroft, whom I called upon two or three times, if I ever asked the slighest favor, or even presumed upon the letter you gave me to him. I did write him a note asking him to come and witness the triumph of opening the bridge at the Gardens, and delivered the note at his own house myself. Although Prince Albert came, I never got even a reply to my note. If Bancroft had come, and been the man only to have recognized me, in my rags as I was, it would have saved me much subsequent suffering. I will not believe that Bancroft ever saw the note, for his deportment to me was very kind.

The succeeding three months after the first five, I will not detail, up to the time I commenced to build the Bridge. I will not harrow up my feelings to write, nor pain your heart to read, the incidents of those ninety days. My head turned gray, and I must have died but for the Jew, who did give me one shilling for my acknowledgment for £10 on demand. These wicked robberies have amounted to several hundred pounds, every penny of which I had to pay subsequently; for since my success at Stafford, not a man in England who can read but knows my address. It cost me £10 to obtain the shilling with which I paid for admittance into the Royal Zoological Gardens, where I succeeded, after much mortification, in getting the ghost of a model made of the Bridge. The model, although a bad one, astonished every body. Every engineer of celebrity in London was called in to decide whether it was practicable to throw it across the lake. Four or five of them, at the final decision, declared that the model before them was passing strange, but that it could not be carried to a much greater length than the length of the model.

This was the point of life or death with me. I was standing amid men of the supposed greatest talents as civil engineers that the world could produce, and the point decided against me. This one time alone were my whole energies ever aroused. I never talked before—I was haggard and faint for want of food—my spirits sunk in sorrow of my mournful prospects—clothes I had none—yet, standing over this model, did I battle with those men. Every word I uttered came from my inmost soul, and was big with truth—every argument carried conviction. The effect on those men was like magic—indeed, they must have been devils not to have believed under the circumstances. I succeeded. My agreement with the proprietor was, that I should superintend the construction of the Bridge without any pay whatever, but during the time of the building I might sleep in the Gardens, and if the Bridge should succeed, it should be called "Remington's Bridge."

I lodged in an old lion's cage, not strong enough for a lion, but by putting some straw on the floor, held me very well, and indeed was a greater luxury than I had for several months. The carpenters that worked on the Bridge sometimes gave me part of their dinner. On this I lived, and was comparatively happy. It was a little novel, however, to see a man in rags directing gentlemanly-looking head carpenters. The Bridge triumphed, and the cost was £8, and was the greatest hit ever made in London. The money made by it is astonishingly great, thousands, tens of thousands crossing it, paying toll, besides being a great attraction to the Gardens. Not a publication in London but what has written largely upon it. Although I never received a penny, nor never will for building the Bridge, I have no fault to find with Mr. Tyler, the proprietor, for he has fully done all that he promised to do—that is, to call it "Remington's Bridge."

The largest wood-cut perhaps ever made in the world, is made of the Bridge. Every letter of my name is nearly as large as myself. The Bridge to this day is the prominent curiosity of the Gardens. You can't open a paper but you see "Remington's Bridge." Soon after it was built, I have frequently seen hundreds of men looking at the large picture of the Bridge at the corners of the streets, and envying Remington, when I have stood unknown in the crowd, literally starving. However, the great credit of the Bridge gave me some success with a tailor. I got a suit of clothes and some shirts—a clean shirt. Any shirt was great, but a clean shirt—O God, what a luxury! Thousands of cards were left for me at the Gardens, and men came to see the Bridge from all parts of the kingdom. But with all my due-bills in the hands of the Jews, of course I had to slope, and come down to Stafford.

I first built the mill, which is the most popular patent ever taken in England. The coffee-pot, and many other small patents, take exceedingly well. The drainage of Tixall Meadows is the greatest triumph I have yet had in England. The carriage Bridge of Earn Talbot is a most majestic and wonderfully beautiful thing. Dukes, Marquises, Earls, Lords, &c., and their ladies, are coming to see it from all parts. I have now more orders for bridges from the aristocracy than I can execute in ten years, if I would do them. Indeed, I have been so much among the aristocracy of late, that what with high living, being so sudden a transition from starving, I have been compelled to go through a course of medicine, and am just now convalescent. Of course, anything once built precludes the possibility of taking a patent in England, but its merits and value are beyond all calculation.

A permanent, beautiful, and steady bridge, may be thrown across a river half a mile wide, out of the reach of floods, and without anything touching the water, at a most inconsiderable expense. The American patent is well secured at home, I know. I shall continue to build a few more bridges of larger and larger span, and one of them a railroad bridge, in order that I may perfect myself in them, so as to commence fair when I reach America. I have a great many more accounts of my exploits since I came to Stafford, but must defer sending them until next time. I beg you will write to me, for now, since a correspondence is opened, I shall be able to tell you something about England. I know it well. I have dined with Earls, and from that down—down—down to where the knives, forks, and plates, are chained to the table for fear they should be stolen. I am, my dear Sir, your obedient servant,

J. R. REMINGTON.

EARTHQUAKES.

The shaking which this portion of the earth's surface recently received in this vicinity, has caused a large amount of conjecture to be set afloat as to the cause of the phenomenon. We believe that the most generally credited theory of earthquakes, among scientific men, is that which rests on the supposition that the centre of the earth is a liquid mass, completely filling the globe, whose crust varies in thickness at the Poles and at the Equator, being much thinner at the latter. It is obvious that any exciting cause, the sudden manufacture of an immense quantity of gas, the fall of unmelted masses into the fiery liquid, or any similar circumstance, may raise a wave in this internal lava-ocean, or possibly two or three waves, which proceed as waves in our upper seas. A wave moves, but the water only rises and falls. It is a very common error to suppose that the water itself flows along. The progress of a wave consists in the rise and fall of successive bodies of water, one mass falling and displacing and forcing up the next, and so on across a sea. Supposing this same process to take place in the lava which already fills, almost to bursting, the globe, it can readily be imagined that the crust will be lifted and strained as the wave passes along. Hence the frequent fissures in the earth's surface, which gape and close again. The fact that the crust of the earth is thinner at the Equator, (a fact easily explained when we reflect on the revolution of the earth and the natural result at different distances from the Poles,) explains the more disastrous effects of such waves in torrid regions. The same wave which there stretches the thin crust of the earth, and lifts it in hills, and overturns cities, and empties seas, finds here a granite shell which hardly yields to the heaviest waves. [N. Y. Jour. of Com.

CANINE FIDELITY.

On Saturday night, a man residing in East Market street, found in that part of the city called Moore's Survey, a child of six or eight years of age, sitting on the outside, and weeping bitterly. The child was attended by a Newfoundland dog, which attempted to pacify its companion by lying beside him and licking his face. The man took the boy in his arms, and brought him to the engine house, thinking that his parents would be more likely to hear of him there than at any other place. The dog followed quietly, and upon Mr. Rykman, whose humanity and care are well known, making a bed for the child, the dog testified its delight by jumping about the room and licking the host and child alternately. The boy being comfortably bedded for the night, the dog took his post beside him, and could not be coaxed from the spot. During the night Mr. Rykman had occasion to go into the room, but the moment he crossed the threshold, the dog, which was so docile when he left, became furiously enraged, and actually drove him out of the room, at least as quickly as he entered. Neither coaxing or scolding had the slightest effect upon the faithful animal; he had taken the child under his protection, and appeared determined to perform his duty. Early in the morning, another member of the family, who was not aware that they had visitors, went into the room, but he had hardly placed a foot inside, when he was furiously attacked by the dog, and compelled to decamp. Before doing so, however, he seized a chair to defend himself, and broke it to pieces over the dog, without producing any other effect than rendering it more savage and determined than before.

Finding it impossible either to get into his room, or coax the dog out of it, or awaken the child, Mr. Rykman procured assistance, and an entry was effected simultaneously by the door and window. Still the dog remained resolute; he would permit no one to approach the child, and it was actually necessary to beat him severely with clubs ere he could be driven out of the house. This being at last effected, the dog started off as rapidly as it could, and in the course of a couple of hours returned, accompanied by the child's mother, jumped into the room, and began licking and fondling its little companion! Even then it was with difficulty that the woman could prevent the dog from flying at those who had been compelled, in self-defense, to beat and drive him from the house. The woman said she had been in search of the child all night without success, and that, in crossing the common near Dundurn, she saw the dog following her at the top of its speed.

Upon reaching its mistress, the faithful animal immediately caught her by the dress, and began pulling in the direction of the town. The woman, aware of the intelligence of the animal, and knowing that it accompanied the boy when he strayed from home, followed, certain that she would be taken to her child, whether dead or alive. Nor was she disappointed. [Hamilton (Canada West) Spectator.

ISOPATHY.—A new method of curing diseases.—The Paris correspondent of the Courier des Etats Unis, has the following account of a new school of medicine. Isopathy consists in applying to the diseased organ the same organ borrowed from the animal in full health. Examples will render the definition more clear. If the disease is on the lungs, the lungs of a sheep are placed on the breast of the patient; if it is the liver or heart which suffers, they place on the diseased part the heart or liver of an ox; if the hearing is affected, Isopathy makes you a night-cap trimmed with the ears of a calf!

This may at first seem singular, and yet nothing is more real than this system! It has been much talked about, fame has seized upon it, the learned discuss it, the academies examine it, numerous experiments of it have been made in Germany, and as there is always found at Paris, in all professions, a crowd of ambitious men, who hold themselves upon the watch for discoveries, with the hope of making, by the aid of new systems, a fortune which they have not been able to realize by the old methods, we number already several Paris doctors who have hastened to proclaim themselves Isopathists.

◆

TO BUILDERS.—Very few people, or even builders, are aware of the advantages of wetting bricks before laying them; or if they are aware of it, they do not practice it; for of the many houses now in progress in this city, there are very few on which wet bricks are used. A wall twelve inches thick, built of good mortar, with bricks well soaked, is stronger in every respect, than one sixteen inches thick, built dry. The reason of this is, that if the bricks are saturated with water, they will not abstract from the mortar the moisture which is necessary to its crystalization, and, on the contrary, they will unite chemically with the water, and become as solid as a rock. On the other hand, if the bricks are put on dry, they immediately take all the moisture from the mortar, leaving it too dry to harden, and the consequence is, that when a building of this description is taken down, or tumbles down of its own accord, the mortar falls from it like so much sand.

◆

A COSTLY MOUSE'S NEST.—A young woman who works in one of the mills at Valley Falls, R. I., was robbed in a rather singular manner recently. Twenty-one dollars belonging to her (two 5's, a ten, and one dollar bill) were deposited for safe-keeping in a milk pitcher on the shelf at her boarding house. It was afterwards discovered, that the two 5's and the ten had been abstracted from the pitcher, and a search was instituted for the lost money. A quantity of dried apples were on a shelf in the same closet, and a hole was noticed in the paper that contained them. On opening this paper, a mouse's nest was found among the apples, and this nest it was ascertained was made in part of the lost bills. They were torn and eaten into small pieces, but the fragments show their denomination, and what banks they were on.

◆

SINGULAR CIRCUMSTANCE.—There resides in Delaware, some few miles from Templesville, in Queen Anne's county, a respectable farmer, having a daughter now about eleven years old, who, until attaining her fifth year, labored under an impediment of speech which was thought to be incurable. At that time, for some trifling indiscretion, her mother spoke quickly and sharply to her, and boxed her ears; and, singular to relate, from that moment for four months the child never uttered a word. At the expiration of that time, however, when the afflicted mother had become almost frantic at her supposed instrumentality in depriving her child of even her impaired speech, this faculty was again restored—and, what is still more incomprehensible, without the slighest impediment of any kind—a blessing which she has uninterruptedly enjoyed to the present time.

◆

A RUSSIAN WIFE FAIR.—The chief opportunity of seeing native finery is mixed up with a curious custom observed on Whit-Monday, at the summer gardens, where the unmarried girls parade themselves for the chance of being selected and sought in marriage by those who are on the lookout for wives. These young people arrange themselves in rows by the sides of the long avenue, attended by their mothers, decked out in their gayest costume, while congregated thousands promenade up and down in dense crowds. The idea realizes what we call "love at first sight," and is certainly a novel way of putting the power of Cupid to the test. If any arrow tells, the party introduces himself to the mother, exchanges addresses, and the matter is negotiated at home. This is confined to the little people—I mean those just above the middle class; but in former times it was common to all ranks. [Life in Russia.

The first Omnibus in New York, called the "Greenwich Stage," commenced running about the year 1800. It left Baker's, No. 4 Wall st., three or four times a day, and went to the vicinity of what is now called Bank street. The fare was 25 cents, and passengers registered their names every day on a slate at the office, or gave them to the driver in order to be called for when they desired to make the "trip." The route was up Broadway to just about what was then called Dr. Livingston's House—at that time a kind of landmark for dwellers in the city, which stood about the present corner of Spring street—and from thence turning off to the left, across the common or open country, to the termination named. There are now 327 omnibuses in the city, running in every conceivable direction, the route of each being nearly twice as long as that of the old stage, and the fare in all cases is only sixpence. AMERICAN LABOR.—The following beautiful tribute to labor is from a speech lately delivered in Faneuil Hall, Boston, by Daniel Webster:—

"I have spoken of labor as one of the great elements of our society, the great substantial interest on which we all stand. Not feudal service, not predial toil, the irksome drudgery by one race of mankind, subjected on account of color, to the control of another race of mankind; but labor, intelligent, manly, independent, thinking and acting for itself, earning its own wages, accumulating those wages into capital, becoming a part of society and of our social system, educating childhood, maintaining worship, claiming the right of the elective franchise, and helping to uphold the great fabric of the State. THAT IS AMERICAN LABOR, and I confess that all my sympathies are with it, and my voice until I am dumb, will be for it."

VARIETY.

Frederick the Great once paid a visit to the schoolroom of a well-known and highly esteemed pedagogue of his day. The old schoolmaster continued his occupation without taking particular notice of the King, and kept his hat on as usual while Frederick's head remained uncovered. The clock had, however, no sooner struck twelve, and the scholars disappeared from the room, than he took off his hat with haste, made a very low bow to the King, and remarked, "Your Majesty will please to pardon me, but I was forced to behave as I did on account of my boys, for if theyk new that the empire contained a person of greater consequence than myself, it would be utterly impossible to keep them in order."

A new plan of Macadamizing roads is now being tested on portions of the Third Avenue An excavation 19 feet wide, and one foot or more deep, is made in the centre of the road. The bottom of this excavation is leveled, and covered with a layer of round river stones and pebbles to the depth of from 8 to fourteen inches. On this a layer of broken stone is placed so as to elevate very considerably the centre of the road, ane sand is then laid upon the top. It is believed that this kind of road will become more compact and durable than any other, and that the expense of Macadamizing will be reduced fully one third.

From sundry recent experiments, the fact is established that fine saw-dust or rasped wood, steeped in a mixture of concentrated sulphuric and nitric acids, and afterwards washed and dried, will explode similar to common gunpowder, and is rightly managed, with much greater force. The greatest wonder about it is that the fact had not been discovered earlier.

Some queer old fellow volunteers the following advice to the ladies: "Always dress as neatly and plain as possible; let Flora be your jeweller, and a rose-bud the only gem about you. This covering yourself with gewgaws, like fat cattle, only indicates that you are intended like them for the market."

Mr. Delevan says there are 3,710 Temperance Societies in the United States, with 2,600,000 members. In Great Britain there are 850 societies, with 7,600,000 members. Temperance societies do not exist in Prussia, Austria, and Italy; and in Russia they are prohibited by the Emperor.

Two new religious papers are about to be established in New York City; one to be a Congregational paper, under the editorship of Rev. Joshua Leavitt, of Boston, and the other a Presbyterian, under the patronage of the New York and New Jersey Synod.

In the coffee plantation of Reconociminto, Cuba, belonging to Senors Elizalde, there was lately gathered a lemon, of the following monstrous dimensions, viz: 19 1-2 inches in circumference, 16 1-2 inches high, and weighing 1 1-2 pounds.

Robert Hall remarked of a miserly rich man: 'Yes, yes, he would listen and incline his head. He may lend a distant ear to the murmurings from the vale beneath, but he remains like a mountain covered with perpetual snow.'

Is is stated that in the town of Windsor, N. Jersey, containing a population of only five hundred, there are 337 newspapers and periodicals taken. We dare say that they are prosperous in proportion to the knowledge thus obtained.

The fountain of true politeness is a good and generous heart. It consists less in exterior manners than in the spirit developed in conduct in the intercourse with society.

A little girl walking in the cemetery of Pere-la-Chaise, Paris, and reading one after another the praises on the tombs of those who slept beneath, said, 'I wonder where all the sinners are buried.'

A writer in the Whig Review tells an anecdote of a lawyer, who charged his client, among other items, 'for waking in the night and thinking of his business.'

Some New York printers talk of establishing an American newspaper in Paris.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., } Principals.
IRA SAYLES, A. M., }

As isted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULATIONS.

1. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.
2. Punctuality in attending all regular Academic exercises will be required.
3. The use of Tobacco, for chewing or smoking, will not be allowed either in or about the Academic buildings.
4. Playing at games of chance cannot be allowed.
5. Using profane language cannot be allowed.
6. The use of any kind of intoxicating drinks cannot be allowed, unless prescribed in case of sickness, by a regular physician.
7. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, cannot be permitted.
8. Gentlemen and ladies of the Institution will not be permitted to visit the rooms of the opposite sex, except in cases of imperious necessity, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.
9. Good order must be maintained at all times, and in all the rooms and halls of the Institution, and in all the intercourse of students with each other.
10. All students are required to retire regularly at the ringing of the bell designated for that purpose, as occasion may require; and to rise at the ringing of the morning bell, also designated.
11. Any room, occupied by students, will, at all times, be subject to the visitation of the Teachers of the Institution, who are required to see that the regulations are complied with.
12. Students will be required to keep their own rooms in good order, and to pay all unnecessary damages, either of rooms or of furniture furnished with the rooms.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

GOVERNMENT.

The Government of the students will be in the hands of the Principals, and will be strictly and steadily exercised, and at the same time, strictly parental. The object of our academic government being to secure the greatest possible amount of physical, intellectual, and moral good to the students themselves, regularity and order of exercises, and good and wholesome citizens to society. No unwarrantable means will be made use of to enforce the observance of the above regulations; yet our constant endeavor will be, to make the means resorted to as effective as human means may be.

Parents who place their children in this Institution, and all students who are sufficiently old to understand the necessity of order, cannot be too well assured that the foregoing regulations form the most essential part of the contract between them and us; and that whatever student wantonly violates them, and shows himself incorrigibly determined on pursuing his waywardness, will be expelled from the privileges of the Institution, and will not be permitted to re-enter it again, without special proof of reformation. Nor will an expelled student have any deduction made from full term charges.

Farther, parents are requested not to place money for expenses, in the hands of students who are not old enough to use money with discretion and economy. Either of the Principals, or the Book-keeper of the Institution, will act as fiscal guardian of such students without charge.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

EXPENSES.

| | |
|---|---|
| Board, per term, | from $14 50 to $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | 1 50 |
| Washing, | 2 50 |
| Fuel, spring and fall, 75 cents, winter, | 1 50 |
| Tuition, | from $3 50 to 5 00 |
| Lights, | 1 50 |
| Incidental Expenses, | 25 |
| EXTRAS—Music on the Piano Forte, | 10 00 |
| Oil Painting, | 7 00 |
| Drawing, | 2 00 |

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition (except the extras above mentioned) need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall, should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchange and losses.

A GLIMPSE OF THE CHINESE.

From a letter of Mrs. L. M. Carpenter to the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association.

[Concluded.]

We have very many visitors from among our neighbors, and many from other parts who do not speak the Shanghai dialect, who come to the city on a visit to their friends, and with them to see us. We are often pressed to return the calls, and sometimes prevailed on to go at the time. The last case of the kind, let me mention here. An acquaintance of ours across the way introduced several friends, who seemed remarkably anxious that we, Mrs. W. and myself, should accompany them home. The presence of our mutual friend gave us courage, and we consented to go. Immediately one of the women, who had an infant with her, departed, which seemed nothing strange to us, and we were soon ready to follow them. They took us through an obscure way, which leads from our retired dwelling, but what was our surprise, as we emerged into the public street, to find it thronged with eager but quiet spectators, with eyes all intently fixed upon the point of our emergence. As we knew not where we were going, we supposed our path would lead through the crowd towards which we were hastening, and begged our conductors to allow us to return; but they only laughed at our fears, and firmly but kindly urged us on. The street before us seemed completely blockaded, and we felt much relieved, when, just before entering the throng, they turned with us into another quiet street. But my misgivings were scarcely conquered when I saw at the end of this street, also, another crowd gazing at us; how then was my dismay increased, when turning to look back, I found that the formidable blockade had closed in at the entrance of this same street, and began to despair of egress in either direction. But a door was now opened at our right, through which we were begged to pass, which I confess I did with more trembling than I ever before entered any native dwelling. However, we were kindly welcomed, politely entertained, introduced as usual to a house full of neighbors, declined the pipe, drank tea, tasted the dainties, underwent the usual scrutiny of the wondering groups, complimented the ladies, praised the children, were bountifully supplied with mementos of the visit, and then escorted home, to be again gazed at in the street, and to enter our own house feeling very much as if we had been most designedly made a spectacle to the curious, for we could only account for the crowd of gazers, by supposing that the woman who preceded us had given notice of our approach, and it being a part of the city where we had seldom if ever been, our presence was quite a novelty.

We suppose our friends are expecting to hear of us as living in a constant state of alarm, since the renewal or rather the repeated acts of hostility upon foreigners, and especially the late one upon the missionaries here. It is true that for a while after the attack upon Messrs. Medhurst, Lockhart, and Muirhead, there were strong reasons to fear for the final issue. But now that the offenders are brought to justice, and daily exposed before the Custom-House in their heavy wooden collars, we feel quite certain that the restitution is ample, and the exhibition of judgment sufficiently appalling to the ever timid spirits of these natives.

As another proof of my occasional fears, and of their apparent groundlessness, I might mention, that soon after the late attack upon the missionaries, Mr. Carpenter and myself, in our walk on the city walls, called, as we often do, at one of the temples through which we must pass in going round, and sat down to rest. Immediately the man who welcomed us, and who constantly attends therein, came and invited us to walk into an adjoining room and sit a while. We were no sooner there, than he began to talk about the late escape of the missionaries from the fury of his countrymen, and asked Mr. C. whether he was a teacher like those men. He laughed most immoderately on being answered, as indeed he did at almost every thing said, either by himself or us, and then insisted that we should go in still farther. We did so, when he offered us seats, asked if we would drink tea, or "eat rice," showed us many things around the room, and when we spoke of leaving, pressed us to go up stairs and see his wife and children. Here my courage well-nigh failed, but I turned to him, as he unbolted the door, and asked if his family resided there. He assured me they did, but an immoderate fit of laughter, which followed his answer, in no way relieved my doubts, and I plead weariness, and the necessity to proceed, as a reason for declining the invitation, assuring him that I hoped at some future day to see his wife. He seemed to wonder at my walking so far for amusement, and whether I would not really prefer a chair. In conducting us out of the temple, he pointed to the worshipers then prostrating themselves before the idols, and motioned us to join them. Peals of laughter followed our refusal to do so, and we left the temple half wondering whether indeed we had not exceeded the limits of cautiousness, in venturing in so far. Still we allow ourselves to take walks as usual, stroll about, enter the houses and temples, talk to the people, and sleep as soundly at night as if no danger had ever threatened. Indeed, we do not feel that danger has really threatened, but we shall not wonder if the gathering clouds, which seem hovering around this Empire, should finally, and at no distant day, burst out into a storm. Surely missionaries of the cross have little reason to anticipate a long series of years, peaceful as those hitherto experienced by the members of the different Boards here, and must expect that sooner or later severer trials will come. The murder of poor Lowrie, soon after our arrival, as well as the recent attack upon Medhurst, Lockhart, and Muirhead, were all by other than Shanghai men, and as it seems by men of a different stamp too. But this is a heathen city. The man of sin is at work. Satan's kingdom will not be thrown down without a struggle. The peaceable reign of Christ will not be ushered in uncontested, and the soldiers of the cross must gird themselves for the war. It is God alone who can give to his Son the kingdoms of the world for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for a possession.

Much as you must have heard, ere this, of the difficulties of this most difficult language, you are doubtless prepared to receive letter after letter, to wait month after month, and even year after year, before you receive the glad news of any direct results from all our efforts. The wonder to me is now that any have ventured to undertake, as soon as many have done, to preach in this dialect. The words are all monosyllabic, and each syllable may constitute a word by itself, and that word may signify ever so many things, so that more depends upon the connection, and upon the tones, than upon the mere sound of the syllable. If "vowels do not absolutely go for nothing," consonants may be "changed at pleasure," and the change is not detected by a Chinese. For instance, "jeu, keu, tal," in the same connection will all go for the same words; so also, "sa, za, ta, ca," are interchangeable consonants; "che, ke," are also examples of the same, but this might be multiplied indefinitely, so I forbear. These, which are constantly recurring sounds, may serve as an example of the difficulties ever before us. After all, we contrive to make ourselves understood much more readily than I could have anticipated had I known all these before hand.

The work of the missionary in China must be a laborious one. And sometimes it seems that nothing short of a miracle can suffice to accomplish it. But the God of Missions is a wonder-working God. He will overturn, overturn, overturn, and China shall own his sway. We know not yet the part assigned to our people in this great work, but we do sometimes feel thankful that our lot has been cast in this particular port, where we trust something may be done for the cause of Truth, while as yet we are unable to do much directly for the heathen themselves. The reasons for our practical differences from others will be inquired into. Particulars will from time to time be forwarded to you by those who take upon themselves the laborious duty of contending for the faith once delivered to the saints. Meanwhile, I would urge my plea with theirs to be remembered, as also we know we are, at a throne of grace. What do we here without such intercessions—without the blessings which the fervent effectual prayers of the righteous may bring down upon us? And let it not be thought that merely the work of our hands demands your prayers. We are still the same poor frail beings as when our frailties were before your eyes. We are still surrounded by temptations, and many of them the more trying because peculiar to our isolated position, and inseparable from it, and most of all, entirely unappreciable by those who look only at the written part of a missionary's life. "My grace is sufficient for thee;" these are the comforting words which we take to our hearts in every time of trial.

Influence of Missions.—At the sailing of the new missionaries for the Sandwich Islands, from Boston, a few days since, in connection with the usual devotional services at the wharf, Rev. Dr. Poor, from India, remarked, that when he was at Andover, some thirty five years since, it was a serious question among the theological students whether any ought to peril their lives as missionaries to the Sandwich Islanders—naked and ferocious savages, as they then were, of the very lowest grade. Since that period, however, as a striking demonstration to the world of the refining and elevating power of the gospel, those Islands have been brought up to a respectable rank among civilized nations, and have now flourishing schools, seminaries, and a well-organized government—besides upwards of 20 Christian churches, some of them among the largest in the world.

A GOD EVERY WHERE.

Not worlds on worlds in phalanx deep
  Need we to prove a God is here;
The daisy, fresh from winter's sleep,
  Tells of his hand in lines as clear.

For who but He that arched the skies,
  And pours the day-spring's living flood,
Wondrous alike on all He tries,
  Could form the daisy's purple bud?—

Mould its green cup, its wiry stem,
  Its crimson fringe so nicely spin;
And drench in dew the topaz gem,
  That, set in silver, gleams within?—

And fling it unrestrained and free,
  O'er hill and dale, and desert sod,
That man, where'er he walks, may see
  In every step, the stamp of God?

THE CHARM OF GAMBLING.

From a new Juvenile Work in press, and about to be published by Lewis Colby & Co., 122 Nassau-st.

BY J. H. GREEN.

I knew a happy and worthy family, whose subsequent misery and sorrow arose from the social card-table, as a source of entertainment and amusement for themselves and friends. This family consisted of, beside the parental twain, three sons and a daughter, all of whom gave promise of a life of usefulness and honor. The insidious vice of gambling crept into the beloved family circle, and brought sorrow and desolation in its wake.

The daughter had reached her thirteenth year, and gave developments of beauteous womanly maturity anon, when she was seized with consumption, which painful disease soon left its withering power on her fragile frame. Though rapidly sinking into the grave, she for some time retained her seat at the card-table; at length, however, her malady increasing, she retired from the fascinating amusement, and sought preparation for death and immortality. She now requested that cards might no longer be the pastime of the evening, beneath their roof, and her father, loving her tenderly, readily complied with her request, and the card-table was accordingly set aside. It was now that parent realized the fascinations of the games, and found that a passion for gambling had insensibly become a rooted principle of his breast.

He sought the gaming table abroad, and spent his evenings in the fashionable gambling houses of the place. He continued as usual to play for pastime, but becoming a wine-bibber, one night, while merry in his cups, he was induced to hazard money, in a game of Faro! He lost his money not only on this occasion, but on almost every other evening afterward. Still he persisted in his recklessness, and played deeper and deeper in ruin, till on one Friday evening, he came into a room where several individuals and myself were seated at a game of cards. He offered to stake five dollars on a game, and being permitted, his money was won from him. He then bet ten dollars, which he also lost. Becoming excited, he continued to bet, and as a matter of course, where all were sharpers, he was well supplied with liquor, and cheated, not only of what funds he had, but forced to give a check for money thus won from him. He became drunken, and remained with the gamblers during the night. The following day the check was cashed, and a portion of the money used in keeping him intoxicated, so that he was kept away from his family several days. Great excitement prevailed on account of his absence in the community, while his friends and family suffered painful anxiety in regard to his fate. I was seated at a table, playing with him on a Sunday evening, the third day since he entered the gamblers' den, when his family physician entered, and inquired of the unfortunate and inebriated man, if he knew where he was, and if he would not return to his stricken daughter and distressed family.

"Yes, yes, Doctor, he'll be there presently; go and say that I will soon be with them!" The physician left, but the poor man continued the game, and speedily forgot his promise. About half an hour passed in this way, when a female rushed into the room, and threw her arms around the neck of the gamblers' victim—it was his wife.

"Great God! My husband! what are you doing here?"

"Beloved, my wife! what seek you, and why come to this place?" said the man, bending his head and reeking with shame and mortification.

"Oh, my dear husband, come home instantly, our poor child is dying! Her only prayer for two days has been for your welfare. Come, dear husband, now! Our daughter may not live till our return."

The wife, husband, and physician, immediately left the place.

A short time again elapsed, when that deluded man returned, and composedly resumed his seat at the gaming table. I incidentally inquired of him how he had left his daughter.

"Oh, God! Remind me not of that, sir. She is dead—she is dead, and died while I was seated here at cards! I could not remain; the tempter drove me back! I could not see her dead! Oh, God! I could not stay and see my child a cold and lifeless corpse."

While he raved and wept, his wife appeared the second time, and dragged him from that pandemonium to his now hapless home.

Four years after this affecting circumstance, while I was sojourning in the same city, lecturing on gambling, I received a visit from that unfortunate man. His appearance before me recalled to my mind at once the painful incident just detailed, and I inquired what were his feelings when he visited home and found his daughter a corpse.

"Oh, sir, I left your table thinking it was but a ruse to bring me home; but, I cannot tell the horror that filled my soul, when I realized that my child was dead. I clasped her lifeless form in my arms, and implored her to speak, if but one word, that I might know that I had not lost her forever! There came no response. I cast the dead body from me, and rushed out wild and frantic, yet voiceless myself, determined on self-destruction. I felt that I was her murderer, and the terrible thought drove me mad. Scarcely knowing what I did, but impelled by the foul fiend, I found myself in the street, hastening away to the wharf with purposes of fearful consequence—but, strange to say, that bright lamp, at the door of the gambling house, diverted me from a watery grave, and turned my feet into the den itself, where I sat abstractedly, I have no doubt, for I knew nothing until your inquiry about my dead child, restored me to consciousness. Providence instructed me in an awful lesson, and from that hour to the present, I have never allowed cards in my house, nor played any myself abroad, nor touched the intoxicating bowl; and, God help me, I never shall."

This incident is sufficient of itself to show the consequence of indulging in card-playing and gaming. We could sincerely wish that it might lead every one to serious reflection, and induce a return to the paths of rectitude and honor, ere that terrible desolation follow, which most certainly attends, as we know full well, the course of the Gambler and Drunkard!

A CHEERFUL RELIGION.

It cannot be requisite to a man's being in earnest, that he should wear a perpetual frown. Is there less of sincerity in nature, during her gambols in spring, than during the stiffness and harshness of her wintry gloom? Does not the bird's blithe carroling come from the heart, quite as much as the quadruped's monotonous cry? And is it, then, altogether impossible to take up one's abode with truth, and to let all sweet homely feelings grow about it and cluster round it; and to smile upon it, as a kind father or mother; and to sport with it, and hold light and merry talk with it, as with a loved brother or sister; and to fondle it, and play with it, as with a child? No, otherwise did Socrates and Plato commune with truth; no, otherwise Cervantes and Shakspeare. This playfulness of truth is beautifully represented by Landor, in the conversation between Marcus Cicero and his brother, an allegory which has the voice and the spirit of Plato.

On the other hand, the outcries of those who exclaim against every sound more lively than a bray or a bleat, as derogatory to truth, are often prompted, not so much by their deep feeling of the dignity of the truth in question, as of the dignity of the person by whom that truth is maintained. Our grave faculties and thoughts are much chastened and improved by a blending and interfusion of the lighter, so that the "sable cloud" may turn forth her "silvery lining" on the night; while our lighter thoughts require the grave to substantiate them, and keep them from evaporating. When your feelings tell you anything, and your understanding contradicts them, more especially should your understanding be merely echoing the verdict of another man's, be not over hasty in sacrificing what you feel to what you fancy you understand. You cannot do it in real life; a stream is running not to be gagged with paper.

MISSIONS OF THE UNITED BRETHREN.

Among the Churches of Christendom, that of the United Brethren exhibits a remarkable independence both of system and operation. It is not formed to be universal. It could not possibly comprehend a nation, nor, under present discipline, exist in harmony with the great body of human society. And its peculiarity appears at once to the observer of its missionary labors, which were, without an exception, undertaken among the most barbarous and even singular portions of mankind. With self-denial beyond comparison, some of their earliest missionaries followed the vagrant gipsies in their haunts, and sought to minister to Ghuebres in Persia, and to slaves in Algiers. The lepers at the Cape of Good Hope have now Moravian pastors. In the official statements, published from time to time, the subjects of their indefatigable care are classified as Negroes, (formerly slaves,) Hottentots, Tambookies, Fingoos, American Indians, Esquimaux, and Greenlanders. The brethren who began their missions were destitute of pecuniary means and literary attainments. A negro of Copenhagen first engaged the attention of some of Count Zinzendorf's servants. This awakened the compassion of some of the humbler emigrants at Herrnhut, who yielding to a holy impulse, offered themselves to God and to the Church for a service in which the prospect was bondage, and the reward perceptible only to the eye of heaven-imparted faith. Leonard Dober went to the Island of St. Thomas, intending to sell himself for a slave, in order that he might have access to the gangs of negroes, repeating, because actuated by the same spirit of primitive Christianity, the devotedness of those who in earlier ages sold themselves to heretics and heathens in order to bring them over to the faith of Christ. He began his evangelical labors on that Island in the capacity of a hired servant, and then, for the sake of greater liberty to act, became watchman on a plantation. Another, Dachne, built a hut for himself in the depths of a wilderness in South America, where, for the space of two years, he braved alike the wild beast and the savage, often depending for sustenance on the casual charity of wandering Indians, who soon fancied him to be possessed of supernatural powers, were drawn by reverential admiration of his piety, and gradually attached themselves to his society. Thus, a Moravian settlement arose, like many others, beyond the boundaries of the civilized world, and became an outpost of religion and humanity. In short, the Moravian missionaries have equaled, if not surpassed, the most heroic members of the Society of Jesus, in patience, courage, self-denial, and perseverance, even unto death, not in the cause of an earthly chief, but in the service of our crucified Redeemer. The United Brethren have a martyrology not less impressive than that of the first centuries of Christian history.

THE SECRET OF SUCCESS.

It may to some appear like vanity in me to write what I now do, but I should not give my life truly if I omitted it. When filling a cart of manure at the farm dung-hill, I never stopped work because my side of the cart might be heaped up before the other side, at which was another man; I pushed over what I had heaped up to help him, as doubtless he did to help me, when I was last and he first. When I have filled my column or columns of a newspaper, or sheet of a magazine, with the literature for which I was to be paid, I have never stopped if the subject required more elucidation, or the paper or magazine more matter, because there was no contract for more payment, or no likelihood of there being more. When I have lived in a barrack-room, I have stopped my own work, and have taken a baby from a soldier's wife, when she had to work, or have gone for water for her, or have cleaned another man's accoutrements, though it was no part of my duty to do so. When I have been engaged in political literature and traveling for a newspaper, I have not hesitated to travel many miles out of my road to ascertain a local fact, or to pursue a subject into its minutest particulars, if it appeared that the public were unacquainted with the facts of the subject; and this at times when I had work to do which was much more pleasant and profitable. When I have needed employment, I have accepted it at whatever wages I could obtain—at plough, in farm drain, in stone quarry, at breaking stones for roads, at woodcutting, in a saw-pit, as a civilian or as a soldier. I have in London cleaned out a stable and groomed a cab-man's horse for a sixpence, and been thankful to the cabman for the six-pence. I have subsequently tried literature, and have done as much writing for ten shillings as I have readily obtained—been sought after and offered—ten guineas for. But had I not been content to begin at the beginning, and accepted shillings, I would not have risen to guineas. I have lost nothing by working. Whether at laboring or literary work, with a spade or with a pen, I have been my own helper.

EFFECTS OF IMAGINATION.

The following anecdote was related by the celebrated father Taylor, in the course of a recent lecture: "It happened, years ago, in the days of old-fashioned meeting-houses, with their pews like pens, and their pulpits perched up to an elevation which placed them without the pale of human sympathy, and when a fire for the purpose of warming a church was a thing unheard of, that some enterprising young men who had worshiped in such a church, determined to have the house warmed by stoves. But the project encountered the most violent opposition from all the old people. They declared that it should not be; that stoves were not a gospel ordinance; that the congregation must suffocate. The young men, however, prevailed, and one Sunday the congregation beheld in the church two formidable black stoves, with the pipes traversing the entire length of the house. The old men and women looked on with horror, and held their breath for the result. The exercises of the church proceeded. Soon a lady fainted away, and in a few moments another gasped for breath, and was carried out of the church, and then another. At last a stout burly man swooned and fell. The frightened minister at once dismissed the church, and there was a general rush of the indignant people toward the stoves. The windows were thrown open, and they were about to precipitate the offenders from the house, when, lo! and behold! the stoves were cold! and not a particle of fire had been kindled in either of them. The masons had not quite time to finish putting them up, and no fire had been made. The triumph of the young advocates of stoves was complete."

The Expiring Martyr.—John Huss, the Bohemian martyr, beheld and acknowledged the hand of Providence in the time and manner of his death. There was something peculiarly affecting and sublime in his exclamation to his brutal and treacherous tormentors. After he had offered a beautiful supplication on their behalf, in which, like his great Exemplar, he implored mercy and not vengeance upon his murderers, the bishops appointed by the Council of Constance stripped him of his sacredotal garments, degraded him from his priestly functions and university degrees, and put a paper mitre upon his head, covered him with the resemblances of infernal spirits, and with this inscription, "A ringleader of heretics." The heroic martyr smiled, and said, "It is less painful than a crown of thorns." His last supplication amidst the flames was, "Jesus Christ, thou Son of the living God, have mercy upon me!"

A Reasonable Prayer.—Josiah Winslow was one of the early Governors of the Massachusetts Colony. It is said that at his funeral Rev. Mr. Whitherell, of Scituate, prayed that "the Governor's son might be made half equal to his father." Rev. Dr. Gad Hitchcock observed afterward, "that the prayer was so very reasonable, it might be hoped that God would grant it; but he did not." [N. Y. Observer.

Humility.—"Remember, Moses wist not that the skin of his face shone. Looking at our own shining face is the bane of spiritual life and of the ministry. Oh, for the closest communion with God, till soul, and body, head, face, and heart, shine with divine brilliancy; but, Oh, for a holy ignorance of our shining!!"

Slavery, as defined by Frederick Douglass, is perpetual unpaid toil; no marriage, no husband, no wife, no parent, no child; ignorance, licentiousness, whips, scourges, chains, auction, jail, and separations, an embodiment of all the woes the imagination can conceive.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, November 30, 1848.

THE SABBATH.

"There are amongst and around us, in the community, many persons who speak well of the observance of Sunday as a matter of usage, of the practical benefits of a day which calls men together for purposes of moral and religious teaching, and they wish to retain all these benefits, while they divest the Sabbath of its sacred character, and of all its divinely-established sanctions. They wish to keep a Sabbath, not as 'the Lord's day,' but merely as a man's day—not as a holy day, but as what the world calls a holiday. They wish to enjoy all its benign social influences, while they divest it of all those high and sacred claims which give it a binding power over the conscience. But this is an impossibility. This error is like that of the French Socialists, who pronounce in a solemn manner those great Christian ideas, Liberty, Equality, Fraternity, yet seek their actual realization, not by becoming Christians, by bowing their necks to the easy yoke of Christ, but by their own social devices by resolutions, by acts of legislation, and by open violence. These great words denote the elements of a millennial state; but how shall men attain this high condition? Strait is the gate and narrow is the way that leads to it. It is only by adopting and practicing the principles of Christianity. Thus it is in regard to the benefits of the Sabbath. They can only be enjoyed by those who acknowledge that the Son of Man is Lord of the Sabbath, who honor his authority, and imbibe the spirit of his religion. Without this regulating influence, the Sabbath will become a licentious holiday and a popular curse."

* * * * *

"Where the true spirit of the Sabbath is cherished and diffused, all other Christian institutions will take root and flourish, just as naturally as effects spring from an adequate cause. Public worship will be no formality, public morals will be elevated, public taste will be purified, education will be spread abroad, domestic peace, social order, and civil prosperity, will be 'the stability of our times.'"

The above is from a recent number of the Christian Watchman and Reflector, the Baptist paper published at Boston. With its general drift, we have no fault to find; on the contrary, we have often insisted, that it is impossible to enjoy all the benefits which the Sabbath was designed to confer, while we "divest the institution of its sacred character, and of its divinely-established sanctions." But how this doctrine can consistently be advocated by one who neglects to keep the seventh day, is more than we can tell. In the beginning, when God created the heavens and the earth, He "rested on the seventh day from all His work which He had made, and blessed the seventh day and sanctified it, because that in it He had rested from all his work." At a later period, when He wrote the Decalogue upon the tables of stone, He made the seventh day an important and necessary part of the Fourth Commandment, saying, "The seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work." Throughout the history of His chosen people, He connected blessings with the observance of the seventh day, and curses with its desecration. And in the New Testament, wherever the seventh day is spoken of, it is as the Sabbath, or day of rest from secular labor. This order of things has never been changed by Divine Authority. God has never taken his blessing away from the seventh day, nor has he ever revoked his solemn command to every member of the human family, "In it thou shalt not do any work." How then, we ask, can the man who neglects to keep the seventh day, consistently insist upon the observance of the Sabbath, and reprove those who would "divest it of its sacred character and its divinely-established sanctions?" It cannot be done; and when it is attempted, the language of Paul to the Jews may justly be quoted in reply, "Thou that makest thy boast of the law, through breaking the law dishonorest thou God?" It is common, we know, when the inconsistency in question is urged, for the convicted person to begin to talk about the first day, and to represent the keeping of that day as sanctioned by the apostles and early Christians, and withal quite as well suited to the ends of the Sabbath as the seventh day. But what has that to do with the point under consideration? Just nothing at all. God has blessed the seventh day, and commanded us to keep it holy. His blessing he has never withdrawn, nor has he ever revoked his command. Although, therefore, one should keep the first day of the week, and even the remaining five days, and yet neglect the seventh day, he would stand in the same relation to this commandment as if he kept no day. This brings us back to the question at issue, which is, whether one may consistently urge obedience to the sabbatic law, while he neglects that part of the law which requires the observance of the seventh day? We say he cannot, and we believe the reader will bear us out in that assertion.

It may be proper, in this connection, to say a word about the popular notion above alluded to, that the first day is quite as well suited to the ends of the Sabbath as the seventh day, and that, therefore, its observance may be regarded as obedience to the Fourth Commandment. As to the comparative suitableness of the two days, we know but little, except that God has seen fit to select and appoint the seventh day for the Sabbath, while he has said nothing about the sabbatic character of the first day. With a Baptist—and indeed with any body who professes to take the Bible as a rule of faith—this ought to be sufficient. Of course the burden of argument in the case does not fall upon us. We are satisfied with the arrangement which God has made. If, however, there are those who suppose a change is desirable, it devolves upon them to show, not simply that the first day is as good as the seventh, but that it is enough better than the seventh to justify the change they propose—a thing which they have never done, at least so far as we have seen in reading a great many books written by them upon the subject. As to the observance of the first day being obedience to the Fourth Commandment, but few words need be said. The Fourth Commandment requires the observance of the seventh day of the week, and gives as a reason that on it God rested from the work of creation. The reason usually given for observing the first day, is, that on it Christ completed the work of redemption by rising from the dead. Here, then, we have a different day, and a different reason. And yet this observance is called obedience to the commandment! As well might the citizens of New York celebrate the twenty-fifth day of November, because on that day the British troop left the city, and call that celebrating Independence Day.

The editor of the Watchman and Reflector thinks that "where the true spirit of the Sabbath is cherished and diffused, all other Christian institutions will take root and flourish." We are happy to agree with him in this opinion, and therefore it is that we desire above all things to see the true spirit of the Sabbath cherished and diffused. But how is this state of things to be secured? Not by abandoning the true Sabbath, and endeavoring to put in its place a day for which there is no divine commandment to "give it a binding power over the conscience." That experiment has been tried over and again, but has always failed, as the history of degenerate churches proves. If ever the true spirit of the Sabbath becomes generally diffused, it will be in connection with a day and an institution for which its friends can quote a "Thus saith the Lord."

SUNDAY TRAVELING.

It is well-known, I believe, that in some of the New England States it was formerly considered a criminal act to travel or labor on the first day of the week; consequently, it was lawful to arrest a traveler on the highway and punish him as a criminal. At length the matter was brought before the Supreme Court, where it was decided, that the law was unconstitutional and void. This decision threw the Commonwealth into the greatest confusion, and a high fever, which has scarcely yet subsided. I have before me a volume of the Panoplist, published about that time in Boston, from which many interesting extracts might be made. But I have neither room nor time for more than a single one at present. After warning the people, that if the law could not punish them for their transgressions, the Almighty surely would, and giving a narrative of several accidents and misfortunes which had happened to travelers on the first day of the week—(which narratives Dr. Edwards and others have continued to the present day)—they make the following candid concession:—

"The seafaring men of our country are certainly a very enterprising, and, I consider them, a very useful class of citizens. But there is, if I am rightly informed, one idea respecting the Sabbath which prevails extensively among them, that is directly subversive of the sacred institution. The idea is this, that the Sabbath is a lucky day, and of course that a voyage commenced on that day is more likely to be prosperous than one commenced on any other day of the week; and thus it has been, in times past, that more vessels sailed on foreign voyages upon the Sabbath, in the proportion of two or three to one, than on any other day."

Now I agree with the writer in the Panoplist, that these facts are subversive of one of two things, either the legality of the Sunday Sabbath, or the principle that God punishes Sabbath-breakers the same as our rulers do thieves, and robbers, i. e. as soon as they are convicted of the crime, without partiality. How this monstrous absurdity ever obtained footing in Boston, (or in any place in Christendom,) is to me a mystery. If the ship owners, masters, and other seafaring men, who have long been in the habit of sending their richly-freighted vessels to sea on Sunday, could not discover the judgments or vengeance of an offended God, who could? Do not their ships return as promptly and as richly laden as those which sail on other days? Does not experience prove to them, and all the world, that this doctrine is delusive and false, and derogatory to the character of our Heavenly Father, who sendeth rain on the just and on the unjust, and permitteth the righteous and the wicked together to inherit the earth.

As a counterpart to this, permit me to ask one question. Has not Friday been as long and extensively considered, and by the same class of citizens too, an unlucky day for the commencement of any important work, whether sailing, traveling, raising buildings, or launching ships? How many ships have laid in port during the day, or from Friday morning to Saturday morning, with a fair wind, in preference to sailing during the unlucky day? Have more misfortunes happened on this day than any other? But suppose we admit, for argument's sake, that one has ever been a lucky, and the other an unlucky day, and that God has thus ordained it; what inference shall we draw from it? I should think nothing less than that he would frown upon any attempt to commence a journey, or any other enterprise, on the last day of the week, which would be likely to interfere with a due observance of his holy Sabbath on the succeeding, or seventh day of the week, the only Sabbath authorized or established in holy writ; and furthermore, that those who, having rested on that day according to the commandment, might commence their business on the first day of the week with his approbation and blessing.

LIBERTY OF CONSCIENCE.

BORDENTOWN, N. J., Nov. 23d, 1848.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I enclose the following extract from a letter which I have just received from a very intelligent gentleman in Pennsylvania, who has shown himself on all occasions to be a strong advocate for the rights of conscience, and likewise has proven himself a steadfast friend of the oppressed. Its publication in the "Recorder" will afford some consolation to the persecuted and down-trodden brethren of that State, to find that they have some generous hearts who sympathize with them under their severe trials; and serve to show how the recent decision of the Supreme Court is regarded by impartial, unbigoted men.

W. M. FAHNESTOCK.

The Extract.

I have never seen any reference, either in the publications of your Society, or by your counsel, to an old law in Pennsylvania respecting Liberty of Conscience, and which is no doubt valid now. It was enacted on the 12th day of January, 1705—the same day on which the first Sunday Law was enacted in the Province. It appears to me evident, that it was designed to counteract or prevent any sectarian abuse of the Sunday Law. It is called "The Law concerning Liberty of Conscience," and begins thus:—

"Almighty God being only Lord of Conscience, Author of all Divine Knowledge, Faith, and Worship, who can only enlighten the minds and convince the understandings of people—in due reverence to his sovereignity, &c., be it enacted, That no person now, or at any time hereafter, dwelling or residing within this Province, who shall profess Faith in God the Father, and in Jesus Christ his only Son, &c., . . . . shall in any case be molested or prejudiced for his or her conscientious persuasion, nor shall he or she be at any time compelled to frequent or maintain any Religious Worship, place or ministry whatsoever, contrary to his or her mind, but shall freely and fully enjoy his or her Christian Liberty in all respects, without molestation or interruption."

The above are the words of the law, omitting recitations, which do not affect its tenor, and are not needful to repeat.

The design of this law is too plain to admit of doubt, except that it is interpreted by blinded and bigoted Judges, who seem, for the sake of popularity, to be willing to pander to the vices and weaknesses of the community.

Every enlightened man in Pennsylvania is either shocked or indignant at the decision of the Supreme Court in the case of your Society. No one of these doubts, that the Constitution and the laws of the State have been violated, and that this has been effected by sectarian influence.

You are aware, that as I have no connection with the Seventh-day Baptists as a society, my views are not likely to be prejudiced by any partialities to them on that account; but I have carefully examined the grounds of argument in the case. You are persecuted because you are not willing to substitute one of the Festivals of the Romish Church for what you consider the true Sabbath.

PEACE MOVEMENTS IN ENGLAND.

On the 30th of October last, the deputation appointed at the recent Peace Congress in Brussels, waited upon Lord John Russell, for the purpose of presenting to him an address which was prepared and adopted by the Congress. The Premier received them very courteously, and after hearing the address, and listening to various arguments, he expressed the deep interest which he, in common with the other members of her Majesty's Government, had felt in the preservation of peace, and his belief that such assemblages as that lately held in Brussels were well calculated to produce a temper of moderation and kindness among the various nations of Europe. The deputation then took their departure, highly gratified, not only with their reception, but also with the tone and character of the interview.

The following paragraph from an English paper will give some idea of the plans of the friends of peace in England:—

"The adherents of the Peace Society held a meeting in Exeter Hall, London, on the 31st ult. Mr. Hindley, M. P., in the chair. Several excellent speeches were delivered by Messrs. Ewart, M. P., Bowring, M. P., Elihu Burritt, J. W. Alexander, Joseph Sturge, and H. Clapp; Revs. Dr. Burnett, Thomas Spencer, &c. In the course of the speeches, it was stated that it was intended to hold the next Congress in Paris, in the month of August, and it was expected that the numbers would be swelled by a good delegation from the United States. It was proposed to expend 2,000 francs in prizes for the best essays in defense of the peace principle. It was proposed, too, that, early in the next session of Parliament, the question should be brought forward in the shape probably of an address to the Queen, praying that she would direct her Ministers to insert in all treaties an arbitration clause."

RELIGIOUS READING GRATIS.—We learn that the American Tract Society is now doing an extensive business in the way of printing religious works for gratuitous distribution. Since the commencement of the fiscal year in April last, over 16,000,000 of pages of pure, instructive reading, have been issued for gratuitous distribution to various societies, associations, and individuals. During the month of October, nearly 2,000,000 of pages were granted by the Committee. They were apportioned out as follows: for Foreigners, 384,143 pages; Seamen, 100,862; United States Army, 26,500; Humane and Literary Institutions, 38,000; Sabbath Schools, 30,000; Indian Missions, 5,000; Home and Domestic Missionaries, 118,890; by Colporteurs and Agents among the destitute, 746,675; other grants, 479,622 pages. Total 1,929,702 pages.

THE RIGHT SPIRIT.—The Christian Observer says that last autumn, a merchant in St. Louis published a proposal to furnish a Ten Dollar Library of the American Sunday School Union to every Sunday School in the State of Missouri, which would report its organization within one year from the date of the offer. A recent number of a newspaper of that city states, that he has already paid out, to meet this promise, the sum of eight hundred dollars. By the expiration of the year, it will probably cost him one thousand dollars. Some months ago, this was his expectation.

This gentleman is not a man of large wealth, but he is doing an active commercial business, a handsome portion of the profits of which, he has, for years, conscientiously devoted to God.

A GOOD EXAMPLE.—It is stated as a fact, that the Moravian brethren, though poor, contribute on an average from four to six dollars annually per member, for foreign missionary purposes,—averaging, say five dollars each. Their example is a standing reproof of the want of liberality on the part of many denominations who claim to be more orthodox than they. If five dollars per year were contributed for foreign missions by every member of the Christian Church, there would be no lack of funds to carry on operations which would convince the heathen that Christians are in earnest.

A JEWISH TEMPLE IN JERUSALEM.—The Sultan of Turkey has given permission to the Jews of the Holy City to erect a magnificent Temple or Synagogue, and a messenger has arrived in New York, charged with making collections for that important object. This is the first regular and splendid place of worship which the Jews have been permitted to erect in Zion for 1800 years. Among the exercises in New York on Thanksgiving Day, was an address by M. M. Noah, Esq., at the Synagogue in Crosby-st., in aid of the project.

DEATH OF A VENERABLE EDITOR.—John C. Rudd, D. D., for many years rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Elizabethtown, New Jersey but more recently editor of the Gospel Messenger and Church Record of Western New York, died at his residence in Utica, on the 15th inst., His remains were taken to Elizabethtown for interment.

THE EDMONDSON SISTERS.—The Christian Advocate and Journal publishes the proceedings in the case of these girls subsequent to the meeting in the Tabernacle in their behalf Mr. W. L. Chaplin, of Albany, was charged with the mission of purchasing their liberty, which he did on the 7th inst. The following is a copy of the receipt furnished by the slave-traders:

"Received of W. L. Chaplin twenty-two hundred and fifty dollars, being payment in full for the purchase of two negroes, named Mary and Emily Edmondson. The right and title of said negroes we warrant and defend against the claims of all persons whatsover; and likewise warrant them sound and healthy in body and mind, and slaves for life. Given under our hand and seal, this seventh day of November, 1848.
BRUIN & HILL.
$2250. Seal."

On the following day Mr. Chaplin executed a deed of emancipation. A letter from him to Rev. Dr. Peck expresses the thanks of the parents of the young women, and says of the latter:—

"Mary and Emily may not at this moment be fully sensible of the perils they have escaped—of the certain ruin from which they have been rescued. Their thoughts and feelings are too confused and stirring to admit of calm reflection upon the past. They can only assure their benefactors, that they have taken the solemn resolution to do what in them lies to build up and maintain a decided character for self-respect, purity, and uprightness, and a resolute adherence to the cause of truth and right. They commit themselves to the guidance of the gracious Saviour, and hope to show, by a simple and pure life, that the extraordinary efforts put forth in their behalf have not been wholly misapplied."

"THE OLD STONE HOUSE; or, THE PATRIOT'S FIRESIDE," is the title of a neat little volume, written by Joseph Alden, D. D., of Williams College, and publishd by M. W. Dodd, of N. Y. The design of the author has been to inspire the young reader with the spirit of patriotism, to render him familiar with some of the elementary principles of the Science of Government, to acquaint him with the origin and formation of the Constitution of the United States, and so to qualify him for the duties of a citizen of the Republic. In this design we think he has happily succeeded.

☞ The following paragraph, from an English paper, is going the rounds, and will probably do more to retard the Sunday reform movement, as it is called, than a hundred sermons could do to advance it. It is but just to say, that since the article appeared, the Secretary of the Railroad Company in question has published a letter, in which he denies that the object of the Duchess of Sutherland's journey was communicated to him:—

THE SCOTTISH CENTRAL RAILWAY AND THE DUCHESS OF SUTHERLAND.—On the Friday evening previous to the decease of the Earl of Carlisle, the Duchess of Sutherland, who was sojourning at Dunrobin Castle, in Sutherlandshire, received intelligence of the alarming illness of her parent, and summoning her with all speed to Castle Howard. She instantly posted off to Montrose, where she arrived on Saturday evening, and taking the last train, reached Perth on Sunday morning. The mail train for the south was then preparing for departure, but to the astonishment of her Grace and attendants, on applying for seats in the train, they were told they could not travel by it, or any other train, on the Sabbath, it being against the regulations of the Directors. Letters having been previously sent to all the stations to have the engines ready to convey the Duchess through, it was imagined some mistake had occurred at Perth, and the Secretary was immediately communicated with, as to the sorrowing circumstances which compelled her Grace's attendance at Castle Howard. The train was delayed for a short time in order to have a final answer from the Secretary. But the reply was, "No; the rules of the Company could not be departed from." The mail train started with the empty coaches besides the necessary mail carriage, leaving the Duchess standing upon the platform crying. Nothing was left but to post onwards. She hired a steamer and crossed the ferry on to Edinburg, which occupied the whole day. By the time her Grace reached Castle Howard, the Earl of Carlisle was no more.

NATIONAL POPULAR EDUCATION.—Ex-Governor Slade recently delivered an address in Boston, setting forth the origin, objects and claims of the "Board of National Popular Education," of which he is Corresponding Secretary and General Agent. The Board consists of twenty-five Members; Ex-Gov. Morrow, of Ohio, President; and Judge McLean and Judge Lane, Vice Presidents. Through appropriate agencies, it explores the West, for the raising up of Schools, and making arrangements for the reception and competent support of female Teachers; while it receives applications for supplies, invites such Teachers from the East, collects companies of them, semi-annually, at Hartford, Conn., where it carries them through a six weeks special training—a sort of Teachers' Institute—and thence, under proper escort, sends them to the places provided. The Board, he said, had sent out 110 Teachers in two years, mostly from New England; 32 to Illinois; 31 to Indiana; 12 to Wisconsin; 11 to Michigan; 7 to Iowa; 5 to Tennessee; 3 to Missouri; 2 to Kentucky; 2 to Ohio; 2 to Western Pennsylvania, and 1 to North Carolina.

SIGNIFICANT ELECTORAL TICKET.—The Plymouth Rock states that at the recent election in Massachusetts, several persons voted the following ticket:—

No Union with Slaveholders!

At Large { W. L. GARRISON, of Boston,
S. S. FOSTER, of Worcester.
Districts.—1. Eternal Truth, of Boston.
" 2. Human Rights, of Salem.
" 3. Free Soil, of Newbury.
" 4. Bird o' Freedom Sawin, of Camb.
" 5. Equal Justice, of Worcester.
" 6. Free Speech, of Belchertown.
" 7. Christ'n Consistency, of Cornway.
" 8. Godly Zeal, of Roxbury.
" 9. Univ. Education, of Bridgewater.
" 10. Universal Freedom, of Nantucket.

THE GOLD MANIA IN CALIFORNIA.—The Captain of a New York ship writes from Monterey to the owners, that the mania for gold-hunting in California does not subside. Both his mates were to leave him in a few days, and there is no help to be had at any price. One ship took off three of his men at $100 per month. He says:—

"The coasters are giving $100 per month. All the ships at St. Francisco have been stripped and laid up. The Flora, of New London, is at St. Francisco; all left. You probably have heard of the situation of things here. A sailor will be up at the mines for two months, work on his own account, and come down with from two to three thousand dollars, and those that go in parties do much better. I have been offered $20 per day to go, by one of the first men here, and work one year. It is impossible for me to give you any idea of the gold that is got here."

On the 1st ult., the decree for the complete emancipation of the Jews of the Roman States came into force. They are thereby declared fit for the exercise of all civil rights. The year 1848 is an amazing one. The changes of the forms of government are, however, less surprising than the abandonment of the Ghetto by the Jews of Rome.

The American Baptist Home Missionary Society has appointed a missionary to San Francisco, California. They have secured for this service the Rev. O. C. Wheeler, who expects to sail on the 1st of December, in the first of the new line of steamers. He will proceed on his course to the Pacific, by way of the Isthmus of Panama.

It is stated that the Romish Convent, established at Penryn, England, the Roman Catholic Mission for Cornwall, has been abandoned, because the revolutionary movements on the continent have cut off their supplies. The concern has become bankrupt, and the property is for sale.

Rev. Mr. Ladd, missionary at Broosa, Turkey, writes that a church has been organized there, consisting of seven members, to which four were soon to be added. Others were serious inquirers after the way of life.

General Intelligence.

SEVEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship Cambria arrived at New York on the 25th inst., bringing one week later intelligence, and 67 passengers, among whom is the renowned banker, Baron A. De Rothschild.

The great feature of the news is the capitulation of Vienna to the imperial troops under Prince Windischgratz. An attack on the suburbs of Vienna was commenced on the 28th ult., and the city capitulated after a siege of eight days.

Nothing certain is yet known as to the number of the killed on the side of the Viennese. It is said to amount to as many as 1,500. The army has also lost a great number of soldiers, and many officers, but it is forbidden to the officers to disclose the amount.

From England, there is nothing of special importance. The cholera is no longer restricted to Edinburgh; it has broken out at Portobello, Musselburgh, Dalkeith, Lasswade, and Loanhead, all small towns and villages within six miles of Edinburgh, and lying to the east and south-east. The disease has been peculiarly virulent in Loanhead, which is an inland village, situated on an eminence, and naturally a healthy position; but it is generally inhabited by colliers and others of the poorer classes, and is most probably defective in drainage.

In Ireland, there are apprehensions of another famine. A public meeting of the whole landed proprietors, gentry, &c., of the Westport Union, was held on the 2d inst., "to take into consideration the truly alarming state of this district, and to call upon Government, as they value the lives of her Majesty's subjects, to lose no time in devising the most effectual means of meeting the terrible famine which is already at our door."

In France, the approaching election is the most important and fruitful topic. The number of candidates for the Presidency is decreasing, and it is probable that Prince Louis Napoleon, Gen. Cavaignac, and Lamartine, will be the only candidates voted for when the day of election arrives. Letters from Paris confirm the previous statements of the strong position in which the city is being placed preparatory to the election of President.

COUNTERFEITERS ABROAD.—Two men, one named Daniels, who has been about this village and vicinity for the last four months, on the ostensible business of doctoring horses, and the other named McLean, of York—left the country very suddenly a few days ago, taking with them a couple of horses, which they bought the day of their departure, and paid for in counterfeit money. Both the horses were purchased in Burns—one of Elder Clarke, and the other of Stephen Mundy, with each of which gentlemen they left $100 in counterfeit money—nine 20's on the Oneida Bank, and two 10's on the Troy City Bank. McLean came to this village, as he said, to notify Daniels that a racing match had been made up in Canada for a horse he (Daniels) owned; and not finding him here, hired a livery horse to go to Burns, where Daniels was staying. While there they bought the two horses alluded to.

When McLean returned from Burns, he hired a conveyance to take him to York, representing that his business was very urgent, and having got into a little difficulty with the tavern keeper at Burns, he was anxious to get out of his way, if he should take a notion to follow him. On the way to York he traded off Elder Clarke's horse for a watch. Meanwhile Daniels took the other horse and made off in a western direction. As soon as the fraud was ascertained, officers started in pursuit, but thus far they have escaped. Daniels was traced to Niagara county, and has undoubtedly escaped into Canada. We understand that a horse was stolen from Dr. Patchin, of Patchin's Mills, not long since. This, with other circumstances, induces the belief that an organized gang of villains infests the county, and people should be on their guard. [Dansville Chron.

NEW ROUTE FOR TRAVEL.—It is said that the Syracuse and Oswego Railroad is doing a very good business. There are large offers of freight for the coming Winter season, much more, indeed, than it will be possible for the Road, with its present means, to accommodate. Calculations for the next season are already making by many parties interested in the Lake navigation. Several new lines of boats will run directly between Canada ports and Oswego. The Kingston people mean to make the trip to New York in less than a day. Passengers will leave Kingston at or after midnight, so as to take the morning run East, reaching Albany at noon, and New York the same evening.

LOOK OUT FOR AN IMPOSTOR.—A man about sixty years of age, calling himself Nehemiah Myers, professing to be a converted Jew, and engaged in distributing tracts, is now traversing this county, and pretends to a great amount of piety. He professes to sing and speak in Hebrew, and on Sabbaths topresent himself before the congregations in the different characters, and sing for their edification. Now, this is to certify, that said Myers, while upon my circuit, at the house of Mr. Raymond Saxton, in Middlefield, became angry without provocation, and cursed and swore, being guilty of great immorality; and I therefore admonish all Christian ministers to beware of countenancing or assisting him. DAVID S. ELLIOTT,
Oct. 24th, 1848. of Oneida Conference.

DEATH OF A BRAVE BOY.—We learn from the Portland Argus, that Frederick Whitmore, about twelve years of age, a son of General Jno. C. Humphreys, was drowned in Brunswick on Saturday afternoon. He was skating on a pond with others, when the ice gave way, and a lad fell in. While some ran for assistance, young Whitmore remained and assured his companion that he should not be drowned, and lay down on the ice to reach his hand, and save his young friend from sinking until help should arrive. The lad grasped his hand, and in his struggles drew in his brave benefactor to sink and die, while he contrived to keep above water, and was rescued.

A HOUSE WARMING.—P. T. Barnum, proprietor of the American Museum in New York, who has accumulated an immense fortune within a few years past, has just completed a splendid villa or country seat, at Bridgeport, Conn., which he calls Iranistan. It is said to have cost, with its furnishing, $150,000. The elegant and gorgeously furnished apartments, about fifty in number, were recently thrown open for a public entertainment, which was attended by over one thousand of the principal people of Bridgeport, and by gentlemen from New York, Boston, and Philadelphia.

DURABILITY OF CEDAR.—At the head of one of the graves in the burial-ground at "Old St. Mary's," Md., there stands a cedar slab, which, as the inscription indicates, was placed there in the year 1717! Notwithstanding it has been exposed to the weather for so long a period, it is still perfectly sound; and if unmolested by desecrating hands, it will doubtless remain when every man, woman, and child, that now moves upon the earth, shall have gone down to "darkness and the worm."

---

CIDER-MAKING.—At Madison, Morris County, New Jersey, there is said to be a cider mill which consumes about one thousand two hundred bushels of apples daily. The apples are not ground or broken by squeezing between nuts, as in the common process but they are cut into very thin slices by sharp knives around two revolving cylinders, and then pressed in a machine, from which the juice comes out entirely free from the pulp and other things which are found in the new cider at the old mills—the cider retaining its sweetness a longer time.

---

THE RULING PASSION STRONG IN DEATH.—During the dying moments of Governor McNutt, the New Orleans Times says, a person entered the room with a newspaper in his hand. It was about the time when the election returns were coming in from Pennsylvania. The eye of the dying politician resumed a momentary brightness, as his feeble voice articulated the inquiry, "What's the news from Pennsylvania?" Before the answer could be given, the querist was a corpse.

AN ERRATIC AND EQUATIC EAGLE.—The chief officer of the ship Alexander, of Dundee, Scotland, when about a month out from Calcutta, caught an eagle. He kept it a day or two, and then released it, with a leather round its neck, bearing the name of the ship, the longitude, &c. What is quite remarkable, this same bird was caught on board an American whaleship, 2200 miles distant from the place where it left the former ship.

SUMMARY.

The great will case of the late Sydney Smith, deceased, has at length been decided in favor of the complainant, Mrs. Nancy Harris, sister of the deceased, and wife of General Harris, of South New Berlin, Chenango County. This was argued at the September term of the Supreme Court at Norwich, and decided at the general term of the Supreme Court at Cooperstown. The whole will was delcared void, and the property goes directly to the heirs-at-law, Mrs. Harris and a nephew, Mr. Cady. The estate amounts to over $150,000.

General Taylor was born in Virginia, Nov. 23d 1784, and was 64 years old on Friday last. He is the oldest, except Harrison, of the Presidents at the time of their election.

The American Artizan says that the announcement of the discovery of a successful process for manufacturing ice, is, by many persons, regarded as a joke; but it is sober earnest. The experiments which led to the grand result, have been continued for many days. It is made at a cost of one dollar a ton. Ice is retailed for ten dollars a ton in New York.

The ship Timoleon, arrived at New Bedford a few days since, from Bremen, brought 45,000 building bricks. Bricks are sent from Bremen in large quantities to the West Indies, but we have never before known them to be brought here from that port. The ship no doubt took them in for ballast.

The Secretary of the Navy not long since received a letter, neatly directed in a lady's handwriting, which enclosed the announcement, cut from a newspaper, of the marriage of a young officer in the Navy, and a reference to the 24th chapter of Deuteronomy, and the fifth verse.

To those whom it concerns, and those only:—

Have you paid for the fifth volume of the Sabbath Recorder? If you have not, it is time that matter was attended to. The money was due when the volume commenced; and now that the volume is nearly half finished, it is difficult to frame a satisfactory excuse for delay. The times are hard, no doubt; but who ever heard of their being made easier by neglecting to pay the printer? Don't entertain such a notion for a moment; but pay the printer, and he will insure you easier times, in mind if not in pocket.

TRACT ON SUNDAY LEGISLATION.

At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Sabbath Tract Society, held on the 15th of October, the Corresponding Secretary was instructed to offer a Premium of Ten Dollars for the best Tract, not exceeding 16 pages, on the subject of Sunday Legislation, showing its anti-Christian and anti-republican tendencies. Manuscripts on the subject are solicited, and may be forwarded to the Corresponding Secretary, Geo. B. Utter, before the 15th day of January, 1849, at which time those on hand will be referred to a Committee appointed by the Board for examination and decision.

CONSTITUTION
OF A
SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST PUBLISHING SOCIETY

ART. 1.—This Society shall be known by the name of "The Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society."

ART. 2.—The object of this Society shall be to print and publish such periodicals, books, &c., as shall meet the wants of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination, and promote the cause of Christ generally.

ART. 3.—Each contributor of five dollars may become a Member of the Society, and each contributor of twenty-five dollars may become an Honorary Director, with the privilege of participating in the deliberations of the Board of Managers.

ART. 4.—The Society shall hold an Annual Meeting, at which it shall elect a President, a Vice President, a Corresponding Secretary, a Recording Secretary, and a Treasurer, who, together with four others elected for the purpose, shall constitute a Board of Managers to conduct the business of the Society, having power to make their own by-laws, and to fill any vacancies that may occur in their body.

ART. 5.—The Board of Managers shall meet quarterly for the transaction of business, at such time and place as shall have been appointed at a previous meeting. The Recording Secretary shall call extra meetings of the Board, whenever any three members of the Board shall request him to do so.

ART. 6.—The minutes of each meeting of the Board shall be signed by the Chairman and the Recording Secretary.

ART. 7.—The first Annual Meeting of the Society shall be held in the City of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, 1849, (25th day of the month;) and subsequent Annual Meetings may be held at such times and places as the Society shall direct. At these meetings the Board of Managers shall present a Report of their transactions, together with the Treasurer's account.

ART. 8.—Should there at any time, on the presentation of the Annual Report of the Board of Managers, be a surplus on hand, over and above what may, in the judgment of the Board, be required to meet the wants of the establishment, the Society shall divide such surplus in equal sums among the following benevolent objects, viz: Missions, the circulation of religious Tracts, the education of candidates for the ministry, and the support of indigent superannuated ministers or their widows and orphans. Should the Society for any reason ever be dissolved, its property, if any, shall be divided in the same manner as above provided in case of surplus.

ART. 9.—This Constitution may be altered at any Annual Meeting of the Society, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

☞ The above is the Constitution formed by delegates from the Eastern, Central, and Western Associations, at a meeting held in New Market, N. J., on the 5th and 6th days of September last. It is kept standing for the purpose of giving all an opportunity to become familiar with it. Will not some friend of the cause, in each section of the denomination, volunteer to obtain what members he can in his own neighborhood, and forward their names?

THE VOICE OF AUTUMN.

I am Autumn, and I come
With a song of Harvest Home;
Rich and splendid is my state,
Many pleasures on me wait.
Come, my little child, and see
What the Autumn brings to thee.

Wheat, your daily bread to make,
Indian corn for Johnny cake,
Buckwheat for your nicest dish,
Rice and barley when you wish;
With every wholesome vegetable,
For your Fall and Winter table.

I am Autumn, and I come
With the pear and with the plum—
Peaches for your choicest treat,
Grapes in clusters, ripe and sweet—
Apples russet, red and white,
For many a merry winter night.

I am Autumn, and my bowers
Are planted round with gorgeous flowers;
Dahlias of the richest dye,
Amaranth with its golden eye,
Coxcombs with their crimson folds,
Chrysantheums and marigolds.

I am Autumn, and I bring
Pleasant days for visiting;
Aunts and cousins come to see,
Time flies on with mirth and glee;
Every voice unite to praise
The cheerful, bright autumnal days.

LABORING IN COMMON.

A late number of the Reveau des deux Mondes contains an article from the pen of Marshal Bugaud, on the Principles of Association, in which he gives the details of an experiment under his own observation in Africa. The following extract shows the result in this instance :—

On returning from a prolonged expedition, I went to visit my three little colonies, beginning with that of Mered. It was the end of September, 1843. Generally I was received with joy by the military colonists, who considered me as their benefactor, and called me their father. This time it was on Sunday. I found them sad and almost uncivil. They were leaning against their doors, and did not move to come around me, according to their custom. I saw there was something extraordinary.

I sent for the officer, and he being absent, I addressed myself to the serjeant-major, to inquire the cause of the discouragement, the symptoms of which I had remarked. 'My men have good reason to be sad,' replied the serjeant; 'they are losing the best part of their harvest, and they attribute it to laboring in common; they are tired of this arrangement, and they are going to ask you to break up the association.' 'But how do they lose their harvest?' They reaped in the beginning of June, and we are now at the last of September; it ought to be in the granary long ago.' 'You are right, Governor; it ought to be so; but they do not work, and we have not yet taken care of a third of the barley or wheat. Depending upon the usual prolongation of fine weather, we did not take the precaution to take the sheaves from the rick perpendicularly; we took what formed the roof from the whole of the oblong square. The two storms which came lately have soaked our ricks, and our grain has sprouted.'

I went to the ricks and found the grain growing upon all sides. I immediately assembled the colonists; they formed a circle around me, and we had the following dialogue:

'How is it, my friends, that having made your harvest in June, you have not threshed your grain at the end of September?' 'Because,' they replied, 'we do not work.' 'And why don't you work?' 'Because we depend one on the other; one does not wish to do more than another, and thus we put ourselves on the level of the idle. Do you not think, Governor, that if we each had our portion of this grain, it would have been threshed long ago? We should already have done more than double. Things cannot go on so; we beg you to break up our association.' 'Yes, yes,' cried all the colonists, even the lazy ones. We put ourselves on a level with the lazy ones affected me too much, to leave me undecided about giving up the community labor, but I thought it my duty not to yield too soon. So I made an appeal to the sentiments of fraternity of which I knew the force. 'How, my friends,' replied I, 'you are all comrades of the same regiment, (the 48th,) you selected each other voluntarily, you are young and robust, you make, in some sort, only a family of brothers, and do you not know how to live and labor in common, without calculating whether one does more than another?' 'Governor, we are very fond of each other, and, notwithstanding that, there is no emulation for labor; it does not seem like working for one's self when we work in common. But it would be worse when we marry. Our wives would agree less than we do about the work and everything else. It would be a hell. If we prove to you that we have produced more in the one day each week which you allowed every man to have for himself, than in the five days of the community, you will not refuse to let us dissolve our association.'

'I proceeded immediately to the verification of this fact. I appraised successively the sixty seven individual harvests, the officers wrote down my appraisement, and the sum gave in fact an amount superior by a fifth to the whole of the community harvests. This operation finished, I called the colonists together again, and declared to them that the results of this examination decided me to establish individual labor among them; but I warned them that, since they thought themselves able to take care of themselves, if they seperated, I should withdraw their pay and rations. They received this declaration with unanimous approbation.'

How Much it Costs!—In this city there are at least 2,400 adult males. Of this number, 2,000 use tobacco. For cigars they pay not less than four cents a day, making for each $15 60 a year, and a total for the 2,000 of $31,200. For tobacco six cents per week, making $3 12 per year. Total for cigars and tobacco, per year, $37,420—for the citizens of Cleveland. The cigars and tobacco cost almost, if not quite, as much as the flour consumed in our city. There are several individuals who pay not less than $100 a year for cigars; at $5 per barrel, this would purchase 20 barrels of flour, equal to the supply of four families, or 20 persons, with the staple of life. And all of this $37,000 is paid for an article, injurious to the human system, and entirely unproductive of any good.

The amount paid in the city of Cleveland for cigars and tobacco is fully equal to the amount of the State, County, Township, and City tax. And if we included the amount paid for strong drink, it amounts to more than the State, County, Township, and City taxes of the whole county, levied on the duplicate for the year 1848. There is no wisdom in these expenditures. There is folly rather. But men will have their own way, and do just as they please, and say that it is no body's business. Well, agreed! Nevertheless the amount paid for two years in Cleveland for cigars and tobacco and strong drinks, would pay the subscription of the city to the Cleveland and Columbus Railroad!—which is only $2,000,000! But who cares, smoke and chew away—if you don't some one else will. Never mind the expense, as long as it is paid for. People must live!

ENERGY.

The following interesting anecdote was related several years since by W. A. Maynard.

In December, 1807, Mr. M. was teaching school for a quarter in the town of Plainfield, Mass. One cold, blustering morning, on entering his school-room, he observed a lad he had not seen before, sitting on one of the benches. The lad soon made known his errand to Mr. M. He was about fifteen years old; his parents lived seven miles distant; he wanted an education, and came from home on foot that morning, to see if Mr. M. could help him to contrive how to obtain it.

Mr. M. asked him if he was acquainted with any one in the place.

'No.'

'Do your parents know any one here?'

'No.'

'Can your parents help you towards obtaining an education?'

'No.'

'Have you any friend that can render you assistance?'

'No.'

'Well how do you expect to obtain an education?'

'I don't know, but I thought I would come and see you.'

Mr. M. told him to stay that day, and he would see what could be done. He discovered that the boy was possessed of good sense, but no uncommon brilliancy; and he was particularly struck with the cool and resolute manner in which he undertook to conquer difficulties which would have intimidated common minds. In the course of the day, Mr. M. made provision for having him boarded through the winter in the family with himself, the lad paying for his board by his services at school. He gave himself diligently to study, in which he made good but not rapid progress, improving every opportunity of reading and conversation for acquiring knowledge; and thus spent the winter.

When Mr. M. left the place in the spring, he engaged a minister who resided about four miles from the boy's father, to hear his recitations; and the boy accordingly boarded at home, and pursued his studies.

It is unnecessary to pursue the narrative farther. Mr. M. had never seen the lad since. But this was the early history of the Rev. Jonas King, D. D., whose exertions in the cause of Oriental learning, and in alleviating the miseries of Greece, have endeared him alike to the scholar and philanthropist, and shed a bright ray of glory on his native land.

DRAWING A WIFE BY LOT.

The Moravians are accustomed to resort to the lot, for the settlement of certain difficult questions which sometimes occur among them. It is always done, however, in a solemn manner, and with prayer. The Rev. Mr. M——, who was for many years the highly esteemed pastor of the Moravian church in New York city, when a young man, was stationed among one of the tribes of Indians at the Far West as a missionary. After laboring there for several years in a "state of single-blessedness," he, like other missionaries, desired a companion. But he was attached to no one, and could fix his mind upon no one to be his "better half." Still some one he must have, for he experienced a painful sense of loneliness, isolated as he was from all civil society. He therefore left, for a few weeks, his rude, untamed charge, and went on a journey in search of a wife.

He directed his course, as young ministers do at the present day when engaged in the same pursuit, to a female seminary. He went to Bethlehem, in Pennsylvania, where there was a female academy, under the direction of his own denomination. It is frequently, though improperly, termed the Moravian nunnery. He here made known his errand to those who had the oversight of the institution—to those who were the proper ones to address upon the subject. They informed him that there were in the seminary several young ladies of suitable age, character, and literary attainments, to be the companion of a missionary. But he knew them not. He was attached to none of them, and he had no particular choice. What was to be done? It was certainly a very peculiar case. It was proposed, therefore, that the interesting, though difficult question, be settled according to their custom "in like cases made and provided," by lot. Accordingly the names of all the fair candidates for the contemplated honor and happiness were placed in some appropriate vessel, and then, with great gravity, one was drawn out. The name written upon the successful ticket was Bethiah L——.

The young missionary was satisfied. But will the young lady consent? Aye, "that's the question." When Bethiah was informed of the liberty which had been taken with her name, and of the result, she was up to her elbows in suds—a pretty plight for a young lady to be in, to receive a matrimonial offer! However, she got through her washing, considered the question, gave an affirmative answer, was married, and returned with him to his rustic house among the untutored Indians of the West. The match proved eminently happy.

Bethiah was a very tall girl. When jesting with her companions, she had frequently said that she would never marry a man who was not as tall as herself. After her engagement, the girls were solicitous to know whether she was about to adhere to her resolution. They were both accordingly measured, and he was found to be a few inches the tallest. In the course of a few years an interesting young family was seen in that rustic home, than whom very few have risen higher on the earth.

The above facts were received from an aged member of the Moravian Church, who was intimately acquainted with the couple, and had repeatedly heard them relate the circumstances or their marriage with great good humor.

JOB DODGE, OR THE STORMY DAY.

It was a half drizzling, half stormy day in the middle of November, just such a day as puts nervous people in a bad humor with themselves and everybody else. Dodge was brooding over the fire immediately after breakfast. His wife addressed him as follows:

"Mr. Dodge, can't you mend that front door-latch to-day?"

"No," was the answer.

"Well, can't you mend the handle of the water-pail?"

"No."

"Well, can't you put up some pins for your clothes in the chamber?"

"No."

"Well, can't you fix the north window, so that the rain and snow will not drive in?"

"No, no, no," answered the husband sharply. He then took his hat, and was on the point of leaving the house, when his wife, knowing that he was going to the tavern, where he would probably meet some of his wet-day companions, asked him kindly to wait a moment. She got her bonnet and cloak, and said to her husband, "You're going to the tavern, with your leave I will go with you."

The husband stared.

"Yes," said the wife, "I may as well go as you; if you go and waste the day at the tavern, why shall I not do the same?"

Job felt the reproof. He closed the door, hung up his hat, got his hammer and nails, did all his wife had requested, and sat down by the fire at night, a happier and better man.

FRESH AIR.

The celebrated Dr. Darwin was so impressed with the importance of good air, that, being very popular in the town of Derby, once on a market day he mounted a tub, and thus addressed the listening crowd: 'Ye men of Derby, fellow-citizens, attend to me! I know you to be ingenious and industrious mechanics. By your exertions you procure for yourselves and families the necessaries of life; but if you lose your health, that power of use to them must cease. This truth all of you know; but I fear some of you do not understand how health is to be maintained in vigor—this then depends upon your breathing an uncontaminated air; for the purity of air becomes destroyed where many are collected together; the effluvium from the body corrupts it. Keep open, then, the windows of your workshops, and as soon as you rise open all the windows of your bed-rooms. Inattention to this advice, be assured, will bring diseases on yourselves, and engender among you the typhus fever, which is only another name for putrid fever, which will carry off your wives and children. Let me again repeat my serious advice—open your windows to let in the fresh air at least once a day. Remember what I say; I speak now without a fee, and can have no other interest but your good in this my advice.'

AMERICAN ANTIQUITIES.

We heard, says the Journal of Commerce, an anecdote related of a distinguished American clergyman who visited Europe not long ago. Some English gentlemen were remarking that we had no antiquites in America. 'You are mistaken, sir,' said the divine. 'How so? What have you in America?' 'Sir, we have the eternal antiquities of God;' and forthwith the American commenced a list of mountains and rivers and waterfalls, and forests, and other of the 'antiquities of God,' which entirely overwhelmed the listeners. Perhaps no country in the world has a list to compare with this. Our forests stand as they stood before the conquest of England by the Normans, and the same trees have scattered their annual foliage upon the earth from which they sprang, in one long succession of centuries. But it is not the forest and mountain alone to which we look for antiquity. We have the almost imperishable monuments of a noble race among us. Their burial-grounds are in our fields, and on our hill-sides; their bones moulder beneath the foundations of our homes. They have left their names on our rivers and our promontories—and the stranger who visits America, when he asks the name of the first headland, will hear that of a noble race, and from time to time listen in pleasant silence to the musical sounds of their unforgotten tongue.

CATS IN ENGLAND.

Cats, I believe, are the only animals here which are not subject to taxation. They form a feature in every domestic circle, however limited its pecuniary means. In a city where all animal food is so dear, there is little waste, and therefore the sale of cat's meat is a regular business, and procures a living for a great many people. The cat's meat man goes around with his barrow in the mornings and evenings, and it is curious to observe the cats, when they recognize his call, running out to the curbstone to await his approach. Tortoise shell cats, like dogs and birds, are an article of sale in several of the markets. Some pets are highly valued. It was only a day or two ago I noticed a reward of £5 for the restoration of a stray cat of the Angora breed. While waiting for an omnibus, in Camden Town, a day or two since, I was admiring a fine cat, like a young leopard, which some children were playing with, and casually inquired what price they would take for it; and upon their replying that it was not for sale, a fine little girl, about ten years of age, looked up into my face and said, "if you want a cat, sir, our lodger has got one she would like to sell." I asked her to be candid and tell me why she wished to part with it, and she replied, "the fact is she is such a thief that she could not keep her any longer." [Com. Adv.

A Mississippi Platform.—In the south-western part of Franklin county, Miss., there is a platform or floor of hewn stone, neatly polished, some three feet under ground. It is about 180 feet long and 80 feet wide. It extends due north and south, and its surface is perfectly level. The masonry is said to be equal, if not superior, to any work of modern times. The land above is cultivated, but thirty years ago it was covered with oak and pine trees, measuring from two to three feet in diameter. It is evidently of very remote antiquity, as the Indians who reside in the neighborhood had no knowledge of its existence previous to its recent discovery. Nor is there any tradition among them to form any idea of the object of the work, or the people who were its builders. There is also a canal and well connected with it, but they have never been explored. A subterranean passage may be underneath. Further exploration may throw some light upon its origin.

A White Man sold to a Negro—The Tables Turned.—Under this head we notice a case that recently occurred at Detroit. There is a law in this territory, that provides for the selling of idle and dissolute persons at public auction. At one of the sales a negro bought a white man, and ordered him to follow his master, and the order was obeyed. But the poor black took his servant to the steamboat, and paid his passage, and restored him to his freedom, satisfied with sending him out of the Territory.

VARIETY.

In the library of William H. Prescott, at his residence, are two swords, crossed above the arch of an alcove. One belonged to his grandfather, Col. William Prescott, who commanded the American troops in the redoubt at Bunker Hill. The other was the sword of Captain Linzee, of the Royal Navy, who commanded the British sloop-of-war "Falcon," then lying in the Mystic, from which the American troops were fired upon as they crossed to Bunker Hill. Captain Linzee was the grandfather of Mrs. Prescott. The swords of these two gallant soldiers, who fought on different sides upon that memorable day—now in possession of their united descendants, and crossed—an emblem of peace, in the library of the great American historian—are emblematic of the spirit in which our history should be written.

A case regarding the ownership of a wagon, the price of which was not estimated to be higher than $30, was recently tried in Windham county, Vt. The witnesses, fees of the defendant's party, amounted to $66,10. Those of the plaintiff were probably quite as much, and four lawyers were employed in the case, whose compensation amounted to a trifle, at least.

The first Post Offie in America was established in 1683, by William Penn, who appointed H. Waldy, of Seakony, Postmaster, with power to supply passengers with horses from Philadelphia to New Castle, or to the falls of the Deleware. A mail went once a week, and its movements were published on the meeting-house door and other public places.

There is a small town not 25 miles from Brandon, says the Brandon, Vt., Whig, numbering about 500 inhabitants, and casting about 106 votes, in which upwards of 200 copies of periodicals and newspapers are received weekly by actual paying subscribers. In that town a little church of less than 100 members, pays its pastor five hundred dollars per annum, besides a dwelling.

Kendall, of the New Orleans Picayune, left Paris, on a tour through Germany in a first-class car, and rode entirely alone, treated with marked respect, but stared at by all the crowds and idlers on the way. When he arrived at Hamburg, he met an old New Orleans friend, and asked the cause of all this. He was told that none but 'princes or fools traveled in first-class cars!'

According to Haller, women bear hunger longer than men; according to Plutarch, they can resist the effects of wine better; according to Unger, they grow older, and are never bald; according to Pliny, they are seldom attacked by lions, (on the contrary, they will run after lions,) and, according to Gunter, they can talk a few.

It is stated in a Liverpool paper, that a discovery has been made which will render the explosion of steam-boilers almost impossible. It is that of a supply pump, which keeps the boiler filled to any required level, whether the engine is at work or not.

A gentleman known for his tardiness, was invited to join a party at Nahant. Contrary to all expectations, he was the first on the ground; and his friends in surprise at his punctuality, burst out into the following lucid apostrophe:—"So you're come first at last; you used to be behind before; I suspect you get up early of late."

The editor of a newspaper at Perth, being challenged the other day by Kassuth, the leader of the Maygar party, coolly replied that any fool might give a challenge, but that two fools were needed for a fight.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., } Principals.
IRA SAYLES, A. M., }

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULATIONS.

1. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.
2. Punctuality in attending all regular Academic exercises will be required.
3. The use of Tobacco, for chewing or smoking, will not be allowed either in or about the Academic buildings.
4. Playing at games of chance cannot be allowed.
5. Using profane language cannot be allowed.
6. The use of any kind of intoxicating drinks cannot be allowed, unless prescribed in case of sickness, by a regular physician.
7. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, cannot be permitted.
8. Gentlemen and ladies of the Institution will not be permitted to visit the rooms of the opposite sex, except in cases of imperious necessity, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.
9. Good order must be maintained at all times, and in all the rooms and halls of the Institution, and in all the intercourse of students with each other.
10. All students are required to retire regularly at the ringing of the bell designated for that purpose, as occasion may require; and to rise at the ringing of the morning bell, also designated.
11. Any room, occupied by students, will, at all times be subject to the visitation of the Teachers of the Institution, who are required to see that the regulations are complied with.
12. Students will be required to keep their own rooms in good order, and to pay all unnecessary damages, either of rooms or of furniture furnished with the rooms.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

GOVERNMENT.

The Government of the students will be in the hands of the Principals, and will be strictly and steadily exercised, and at the same time, strictly parental. The object of our academic government being to secure the greatest possible amount of physical, intellectual, and moral good to the students themselves, regularity and order of exercises, and good and wholesome citizens to society. No unwarrantable means will be made use of to enforce the observance of the above regulations; yet our constant endeavor will be, to make the means resorted to as effective as human means may be.

Parents who place their children in this Institution, and all students who are sufficiently old to understand the necessity of order, cannot be too well assured that the foregoing regulations form the most essential part of the contract between them and us; and that whatever student wantonly violates them, and shows himself incorrigibly determined on pursuing his waywardness, will be expelled from the privileges of the Institution, and will not be permitted to re-enter it again, without special proof of reformation. Nor will an expelled student have any deduction made from full term charges.

Farther, parents are requested not to place money for expenses, in the hands of students who are not old enough to use money with discretion and economy. Either of the Principals, or the Book-keeper of the Institution, will act as fiscal guardian of such students without charge.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

EXPENSES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Board, per term, | | from $14 50 to $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | | 1 50 |
| Washing, | | 2 50 |
| Fuel, | spring and fall, 75 cents, winter, | 1 50 |
| Tuition, | | from $3 50 to 5 00 |
| Lights, | | 1 50 |
| Incidental Expenses, | | 25 |
| Extras—Music on the Piano Forte, | | 10 00 |
| Oil Painting, | | 7 00 |
| Drawing, | | 2 00 |

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, (except the extras above mentioned) need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall, should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchange and losses.

LETTERS TO A YOUNG INQUIRER,

On the Necessity of adopting the Bible as the only Guide in making a Profession of Religion.

[The following letters, enforcing sole reliance on the Scriptures as the only true Guide to Inquirers, Zionward, were written, during last Summer and Autumn, by a father, in a familiar style, to his daughter, who was brought under anxious concern for her soul's eternal welfare, and who experienced the blessed gift of redeeming grace, through hope in Christ Jesus, while absent from her home, at school; and are now published, verbatim, as they were written, believing that their familiar form will prove more satisfactory to some humble Inquirers, than the more stately diction of a theological essay, and save the writer penning a more elaborated disquisition, to present this subject to the readers of the Recorder.—W. M. F.]

LETTER I.

MY DEAR DAUGHTER,—Your letter of the 22d inst., which reached us yesterday, has affected your dear mother and myself profoundly; and while it makes us rejoice, yet we rejoice with trembling. Our hearts are drawn out in gratitude to our heavenly Father, for visiting our dear child with his awakening Spirit; and while we rejoice and tremble, yet we are confident, that if it is the work of the Spirit of God, (which we devoutly trust is the case,) it will have its perfect work. We, therefore, commend you to His care, and direct you to His guidance; having no confidence in the flesh—in any arm of flesh. We trust that you will be led by his Spirit to discern the things which pertain to your eternal peace, and which, likewise, belong to his Kingdom; which is not of this world, nor after the fashion of the world. The laws of that Kingdom you are to learn from the Word of God alone. Have recourse to the Bible and to prayer. Rely, solely, on aid from Heaven, and the Heaven-appointed channel, the Inspired Word, for light. The plan of salvation is there revealed, as if written with a sun-beam, and may be summed up in a few words.

Man is a sinful, fallen creature, having lost the image of his Maker, in which he was created, by reason of the transgressions of our common parents, whereby we inherit a corrupt, depraved nature, which, so soon as we begin to act, leads us astray, manifests an enmity against Heaven, and proves, by our own individual conduct, that we desire not to have God to rule over us; and thus forfeit all claim to Divine favor, and become aliens to the commonwealth of Israel—helpless, condemned, outcasts, in the sight of a holy and righteous Sovereign. And if left in that state of nature, none might hope for redemption—for salvation, but the wrath of God would abide upon him. Yet God, in his great mercy, while yet we were in our sins, sent forth his Son, made of a woman, made under the law, to redeem them that were under the law, that they might receive the adoption of sons. HE is the propitiation for our sins. He is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth. There is none other name under Heaven, given amongst men, whereby we must be saved. On Him was laid the iniquity of us all; and with his stripes we are healed. Blessed be His name! he has opened a fountain in the house of David for sin and uncleanness; that all are invited to come and partake of its cleansing power; being fully assured, that whosoever seeketh, shall find; whosoever knocketh, it shall be opened unto him. And that we knock not in vain, nor seek in vain, the quickening Spirit is sent, by our kind father, to teach us, and lead us unto true and unfeigned repentance; for that is the first condition of the opening of the Kingdom unto man. Finding (which is the first step towards restoration) that we are undone creatures, and manifest a genuine, godly sorrow for our rebellion against high Heaven, and are led by the Spirit to the Rock which is higher than ourselves, who has promised that He will in no wise cast off any sorrowing soul, we sue for mercy, and we never sue in vain, for He careth for our souls. He only requires us to exhibit a desire, a HOLY DESIRE, to have him to rule over us—to become subjects of his Kingdom, and submit to his holy laws. He requires us, while yet he constrains us, to take the first step, to seek compliance to the first condition to acceptance, repentance; and He is near us and round about us, to keep and save, in his own time and his own way. If He suffers us to go mourning all the day, and to pillow our heads in tears during the watches of the night, it is that we may taste more keenly of the horrors of sin—that we may have a true and abiding sense of its heinousness—that we may abandon it and forsake it forever, He strengthening us—that we may see our helplessness, and fly to the refuge set before us in the Gospel. It is when we realize that sinfulness and that destitution in ourselves, to its proper extent, and find that we are dependent solely and wholly on the atonement of Christ—the perfect righteousness he wrought out—and that it is through his merits alone that we can be justified in the sight of an offended God, that He reveals himself to the bowed down, as the one altogether lovely—the precious, bleeding Lamb, which taketh away the sin of the world. And none, no not one, who has looked unto him, in this light, has been or ever will be sent away in despair. He will reveal himself as the Lord of truth and salvation. He will bind up the broken heart as soon as he discovers the truly contrite spirit. He will, then, rescue the sinner, and raise him out of the miry clay and the horrible pit, and put a new song into his mouth, even praises unto the Lamb, which taketh away the sin of the world.

Plain as the plan of salvation is made by the Word of Truth, that the wayfaring man though a fool need not err, and uniformly as it is expounded by most evangelical Christians, yet there is so much of man mingled with the different systems of religion, that it behooves every one, quickened by the Spirit of God, to search out His will, and only to receive the law at his mouth. The books you are reading, (Baxter's Call, and Doddridge's Rise and Progress,) are very good books. There are others alike good—Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress, Stennet on the Parables of the Sower, and Romaine on Faith—all excellent books and worthy of being read; and so far as they open the workings of the heart under conviction, they may be profitable; but they are never to take the place of the New Testament. From that sacred book you are to learn all your duty, and not to take it at second hand, from earthly vessels. Before the canon of Scripture was completed, which was not till, at least, two hundred years after the introduction of the New Dispensation, when the oral teachings of inspired men was the only source of instruction, then, when persons were pricked by the Holy Spirit, and converted to God, they were baptized immediately, and added to the church; but since those infallible men have passed away, and the written word has been placed in our hands, which is able to make us wise unto salvation, we are required, not to pin our faith to the sleeve of any man, but rather to search the Scriptures, to see whether these things be so—to prove all things, and hold fast to that which is good. It will, therefore, become your bounden duty to apply yourself to the faithful study of the Scriptures, to gain clear and distinct views of the obligations it imposes upon you, before you think of attaching yourself to any church, lest you do damage to the Master, by cleaving to human systems, instead of clinging steadfastly to the simple institutions of the great Head of the Church; for, unfortunately—(and I do not say it in reproach, for no one deplores it more than myself)—human imperfection has marred and perverted much of the primitive simplicity of the Gospel system, and human frailty has been so much mingled with the organization of Christian churches, that I can scarcely name one free from it. The responsibility, and it is a dread responsibility, rests with the individual and his Maker, in making a profession of religion, and in forming a church connection. It is therefore unwise—not only an unwarrantable haste, but an absurdity—for persons, having arrived at years of maturity, to attach themselves to any particular interest, without previous impartial investigation—without having studied, thoroughly, patiently, and prayerfully, the Word of God; determining to receive his instruction and none other. Though issuing from a bad man, yet as the actions of wicked men are often presented to us in the Scriptures for our instruction and admonition, that of Balaam, is most appropriate to this point: "If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the Word of the Lord my God, to do less or more." Num. 22: 18.

Such is the foundation, and the only foundation, upon which we must start, in searching out the will of God, our Father and Sovereign, if we wish to attain to the truth, the unadulterated truth, as it is in Christ Jesus; otherwise we will become engulphed in a labyrinth of error, and entangled in the meshes of prejudices which, ever after, may shut out all truth and improvement. Should the Lord be pleased to open your eyes, effectually, to behold the beauty of holiness, and speak peace to your troubled heart, (which may He in great mercy vouchsafe,) praise him by an entire dedication of all your powers to his service; but let those powers be first directed to finding out his will, by a most diligent, most profound study of his Word.

I may write to you more on this subject, and shall have an opportunity, before long, of conversing with you freely, in person. May the Lord bless and comfort you, is the constant prayer of your affectionate Father.

PRAYERS FOR THE DEAD.—In the Catholic Journal published in this city, we notice occasionally a list of what they call "Devotions for the Week," setting forth the various fasts and feasts to be observed, so that the faithful may not neglect them through forgetfulness. The following is a specimen:—

"Thursday is the day of All Souls—a day celebrated throughout the Catholic world for the devotion of the faithful to the relief of souls in Purgatory. Who is it that has not some relative or friend, deceased, perhaps long since, and for whom, through unpitying neglect or false principle, little has been done in prayers or alms; and who may therefore be yet languishing in the Purgatorial prisons? Even such as have no such friends for whom the Church can pray as having died in her communion, should be mindful of the many souls that die neglected and forgotten. How many poor Catholic soldiers have fallen in the wretched Mexican campaign, for whose relief no catafalque has been erected, and no masses sung by the citizens of the country for which they fought? The Government that sent them there, after a little while left them without other chaplains than some strolling, preaching, militia captains. They certainly had little help in the hour of their agony. Our heart bleeds, and our eyes fill, as we remember some of the poor fellows at the time of their leaving New York for the field of service—with what devotion they sought the aid of the priest before they sailed, and with what faith and gratitude they accepted medals of the blessed Virgin and other objects of devotion! Germans, Frenchmen, Swiss, Italians, and all other Catholics, consider it a duty, publicly and privately, to practice devotions for the souls of soldiers who have fallen in behalf of their country. We humbly commend this object to the prayers of the faithful of this country."

BREVITY OF LIFE.

BY FRANCIS QUARLES.

Behold
How short a span
Was long enough of old,
To measure out the life of man!
In those well-tempered days, his time was then
Surveyed, cast up, and found but three-score years and ten.

Alas!
And what is that?
They come, and slide, and pass,
Before my pen can tell thee what.
The posts of time are swift, which having run,
Their seven short stages o'er, their short-lived task is done.

Our days
Begun, we lend
To sleep, to antic plays
And toys, until the first stage end:
Twelve waining moons, twice five times told, we give
To unrecovered loss—we rather breathe than live.

We spend
A ten years' breath
Before we apprehend
What 'tis to live, or fear a death!
Our childish dreams are filled with painted joys,
Which please our sense awhile, and waking prove but toys.

How vain,
How wretched, is
Poor man, that doth remain
A slave to such a state as this!
His days are short, at longest; few, at most;
They are but bad, at best; yet lavished out, or lost.

They be
The secret springs
That make our minutes flee
On wheels more swift than eagles' wings;
Our life 's a clock, and every gasp of breath
Breathes forth a warning grief, till time shall strike a death.

How soon
Our new-born light
Attains to full-aged noon!
And this, how soon to gray-haired night!
We spring, we bud, we blossom, and we blast,
Ere we can count our days, our days they flee so fast.

They end
When scarce begun;
And ere we apprehend
That we begin to live, our life is done.
Man, count thy days; and if they fly too fast
For thy dull thought to count, count every day thy last.

THE FOUR WORDS.

"Four little words did me more good, when I was a boy, than almost anything else," said a gentleman the other day. "I cannot reckon up all the good they have done me; they were the first words which my mother taught me."

"Indeed; what were the four little words?" said I.

He answered me by relating the following story:

My father grafted a pear tree; it was a very choice graft, and he watched it with great care. The second year it blossomed, but it bore but one pear. They were said to be a very nice kind of pear, and my father was quite anxious to see if they came up to the man's promises. This single pear, then, was an object of some concern to my father. He wanted it to become fully ripe; the high winds he hoped would not blow off the pear; and he gave express directions to all the children on no account to touch it. The graft was low and easily reached by us. It grew finely. "I think that graft will meet my expectations," said my father many times to my mother. "I hope, now, there is some prospect of our having good pears."

Every body who came into the garden, he took to the graft, and every body said, "It will prove a most excellent pear."

It began to look very beautiful; it was full and round; a rich red glow was gradually dyeing its cheeks, and its grain was clear and healthy.

"Is it almost ripe? I long for a bite," I cried, as I followed father one day down the alley to the pear tree.

"Wait patiently, my child; it will not be fully ripe for a week," said my father.

I thought I loved pears better than anything else; often I used to stop and look longingly up at this. Oh, how good it looks, I used to think, smacking my lips, I wish it was all mine.

The early apples did not taste as good; the currants were not as relishing, and the damsons I thought nothing of in comparison with this pear. The longer I stopped under the pear tree, the greater my longing for it, until I was seized with the idea of getting it. Oh, I wish I had it, was the selfish thought that gradually got uppermost in my mind.

One night, after we were in bed, my brothers fell asleep long before I did; I tossed about, and could not get to sleep. It was a warm, still, summer night; there was no moon; no noise except the hum of numberless insects. My father and my mother were gone away. I put my head out of the window, and peeped into the garden. I snuffed pleasant smells. I traced the dark outline of the trees. I glanced in the direction of the pear tree. The pear tree, then the pear! My mouth was parched; I was thirsty. I thought how good a juicy pear would taste. I was tempted.

A few moments found me creeping down the back stairs, with neither shoes, stockings, or trousers on. The slightest creaking frightened me. I stopped on every stair to listen. Nancy was busy somewhere else, and John had gone to bed. At last I fairly felt my way to the garden door. It was fastened. It seemed to take me ages to unlock it, so fearful was I of making a noise, and the bolt grated. I got it open, went out, and latched it after me. It was good to get out in the cool air. I ran down the walk. The patting of my feet made no noise on the moist earth. I stopped a moment, and looked all around, then turned in the direction of the pear tree. Presently I was beneath its branches.

Father will think the wind has knocked it off; but there was not a breath of air stirring. Father will think somebody has stolen it—some boys came in the night and robbed the garden—he'll never know. I trembled at the thought of what I was about to do. Oh, it will taste so good, and father never will, never can know it. He never would think I took it. On tiptoe, with my hand uplifted and my head turned upward, I beheld a star looking down upon me through the leaves. "THOU GOD SEEST ME!" I could not help saying over and over again. God seemed on every side. He was looking me through and through. I was afraid to look, and hid my face. It seemed as if father and mother, and all the boys, and every body in town, would take me for a thief. It appeared as though all my conduct had been seen by the light of day. It was some time before I dared to move, so vivid was the impression made upon my mind by the awful truth in those four words "Thou God seest me." I knew he saw me. I felt that he saw me.

I hastened from the pear tree; nothing upon earth at that moment would have tempted me to touch the pear. With very different feelings did I creep back to bed again. I laid down beside Asa, feeling more like a criminal than anything else. No one in the house had seen me, but oh! it seemed as if everbody knew it, and I should never dare meet my father's face again. It was a great while before I went to sleep. I heard my parents come home, and I involuntarily hid my face beneath the sheet. But I could not hide myself from a sense of God's presence. His eyes seemed everywhere, diving into the very depths of my heart. It started a train of influences, which, God be praised, I never got over. If I was ever tempted to any secret sin, "Thou God seest me," stared me in the face, and I stood back restrained and awed.

The gentleman finished; his story interested me greatly. I think it will interest many children. I hope it will do more than interest them—I hope it will do them much good.

"Thou God seest me." These four little words are from the Bible. Hagar uttered them. She fled in anger from her mistress, Sarah, and went into the wilderness. An angel met her by a fountain of water. The angel bade her return to her mistress, and told her some things in her life, which Hagar thought nobody knew but herself. "Thou God seest me," she exclaimed. Then she knew it was the angel of God, for he alone could look into the most secret things.

Children, learn these four small words. Impress them upon your heart. Think of them when you lie down, when you get up, and when you go by the way; when alone or when with your companions, both at home and abroad, remember "Thou God seest me."

THE CAVE OF MACHPELAH.

We now went to visit the most remarkable place in the city, viz., the cave of Machpelah. As we approached it, a number of Mussulmans, who guessed our intentions, placed themselves immediately before the entrance, to prevent us from entering; for neither Christian nor Jew is permitted to see the inside of this sacred spot, where the ashes of the patriarchs moulder. When we asked why we were not permitted to enter, they replied—"Only believers are permitted to visit the holy sepulchres." They said that Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph, were buried there. We told them that Joseph was buried in Shechem; but they answered with a sneer—"We must know better than you." The cave is surrounded by a wall, forming a parallelogram of 200 feet long, 105 broad, and 60 high. This wall was erected, according to all accounts, by Solomon; it is built in the same style as the walls of the temple in Jerusalem. Though I understand very little of architecture, yet, in a country like this, where every ruin and every stone excites the interest of the traveler, one gets familiar with the style of building of different ages. I may, therefore, mention here, that the stones of this wall are leveled like all the stones of the ancient buildings which we see in Jerusalem, only that the stones of this wall are in their original position, whilst those of the ancient wall of the temple of Jerusalem are no more so; which any one can perceive by the exercise of a very trifling degree of observation, as they do not fit together as they originally did; which proves the fulfillment of our Saviour's declaration—that not one stone shall be left upon another. The walls of the temple which we now see in Jerusalem, have subsequently been built, though the materials of the ancient walls have been made use of, which has made some travelers erroneously suppose them to be the remnants of the wall built by Solomon. The Mahomedans told us that this wall of the cave of Machpelah was erected by the spirits under the command of Solomon; and they may well say so, if they compare their wretched hovels with this piece of antique masonry. The Christians, in the time of the crusades, had built a church here, which is now converted into a mosque. We now turned our steps towards the Jewish quarter, but first visited the tomb of Abner, the son of Ner, which is situated in the midst of the town, and is also in the custody of the Mahomedans. Christians and Jews are, however, permitted to visit it, by paying twopence each to the Turk who keeps the key. We entered, and descended about twenty steps into the cave; the vault is neatly kept, and before the tomb is a curtain, which the Jews have put there. [Ewald's Jour.

ANCIENT MUSIC.—In 1714, the Rev. John Tufts, of the West parish of Newbury, says the Boston Courier, published a small book on music, entitled, 'A very plain and easy introduction to the art of singing psalm tunes, contrived in such a manner as that the learner may attain the skill of singing them with the greatest ease and speed imaginable. Price sixpence, or five shillings a dozen.'

Small as this book must have been, to be afforded for sixpence, it was a great novelty, it being the first publication of the kind in New England, if not in America. As late as 1790, there were not more than 4 or 5 tunes known, in many of the congregations in this country, and in some not more than two or three, and even those were sung altogether by rote. These tunes were York, Hackney, St. Mary's, Windsor, and Martyrs. To publish at this time a book on music, containing the enormous number of twenty-eight tunes, was a daring innovation on the old and time-honored customs of the country! and the attempt to teach singing by note, thus commenced by Mr. Tufts, was most strenuously resisted for many years by that large class of persons, every where to be found, who believe that an old error is better than a new truth.

KINDNESS.

Blessed be the hand which prepares a pleasure for a child; for there is no saying where and when it may again bloom forth. Does not almost every body remember some kind-hearted man, who showed him a kindness in the quiet days of his childhood? The writer of this recollects himself at this moment, as a barefooted lad, standing at the wooden fence of a poor little garden, in his native village; with longing eyes he gazed on the flowers which were blooming there quietly in the brightness of a Sunday morning. The possessor of the garden came forth from his little cottage—he was a woodcutter by trade, and spent the whole week at his work in the woods. He was come into his garden to gather a flower to stick in his coat when he went to church. He saw the boy, and breaking off the most beautiful of his carnations—it was streaked with red and white—gave it to him. Neither the giver nor the receiver spoke one word; and with bounding steps the boy ran home; and now, here at a vast distance from that home, after so many events of so many years, the feeling of gratitude which agitated the breast of that boy expresses itself on paper. The carnation is long since withered, but it now blooms afresh. [Jerrold.

RELIGION MAKES MEN COMFORTABLE.

A wild Fingo Caffre was traveling through Hankey, a missionary station in South Africa, and sat down to rest for a few minutes upon the step of the door of the chapel. It was getting near the time of evening service, and several of the Christian natives were standing about, looking clean and neatly dressed. The Fingo looked round on every thing with great amazement. "How do all you people get food?" he asked. It was a good man to whom he spoke. He answered to the Fingo—"Do you not think I look as if I were comfortable, and had enough to eat?" "Yes," said the Fingo. A little child came by. "Do you not think that child looks well fed?" asked the Christian native. "Yes," said the Caffre. "If you will come to this place of worship to-morrow," said the Christian, "you will see a great many persons as well fed as I am, and better clothed." The Fingo rose from his seat, looking astonished; and, as he marched off, he lifted up his eyes and pointed his right hand to heaven, and said—"It is always so where that God is worshiped." Yes, it is religion that makes people comfortable.

SPIRITUAL DISCERNMENT.

Wilberforce, the chief of England's philanthropists, and Pitt, the prince of her statesmen, were friends. The former was an eminent Christian, but at the period of which I am speaking, the latter, though a communicant in the Established Church, was destitute of grace. He had frequently conversed with him on experimental piety, but hitherto had gained no satisfactory evidence, either of Pitt's conversion or Divine illumination. Earnestly desiring the salvation of his distinguished friend, he at length invited him to hear his minister, Rev. Mr. Cecil, preach. The invitation was accepted, and after a short time both were seated in the sanctuary. The man of God entered. The service commenced. He preached a very faithful sermon on Christian experience. Both listened with attention and apparent reverence. Anxious to learn how his friend had felt and profited under the discourse, he inquired of him how he liked the sermon. "O," said he, "it was all Chinese to me! I could not understand it."

THE DYING MAN IN A HOSPITAL.

The Christian minister is often suddenly called to the bedside of dying men, who implore that spiritual aid which in health they have neglected and despised. Recently a colporteur in New Orleans was invited to visit a young man, in one of the hospitals of that city, who was dying with yellow fever. He was suffering intensely, and in his paroxysms of pain he expressed his apprehensions. He was unprepared and afraid to die. "Pray for me," he exclaimed, "I wish my sins forgiven." When asked if he had a mother, he replied that he had, and that she resided in New York. "Have you a Bible?" was another inquiry. "Yes," said he, "I took one with me when I left home. I have always carried a Bible, but I have not read it." When he was referred to the mercy of Christ, and the thief on the cross, he could not understand the meaning. He was ignorant of the story, and its application. And he thus died; and after death comes the judgment.

BUNYAN'S LAST WORK.—It is a fact worthy of notice, that the last work of the numerous publications which proceeded from the prolific pen of Bunyan—a work which was not wholly printed off when he died, was the work entitled, "Acceptable Sacrifice—or the Excellency of a Broken Heart." On this fact Robert Philip remarks: "Thus he ended his own pilgrimage as he began it, by the sacrifice of a broken and contrite spirit. But how differently was it presented at last from what it was at first! Its first writhings and roarings at the altar were terrific; but its last quiverings were as gentle as they are humble, and its last flames like those of Manoah's sacrifice, fit for an angel to ascend upon into heaven." ## A HINT FOR A PROTESTANT DOCTOR.

At the Baptist Anniversaries held in Rochester several weeks ago, the Rev. Dr. Cote, of the Grande Ligne Mission, made some interesting statements in regard to the prospects of that mission, and the views entertained by the members of it. He stated, among other things, that Baptist sentiments had made considerable inroads there, and that he himself had come to regard "infant sprinkling as a tradition of the Romish Church." This remark, being made public through the medium of the Baptist papers, roused the indignation of the editor of the New York Observer, and he came down upon the Doctor quite furiously, setting forth that the Grande Ligne Mission was for a long time supported by Pedobaptists, and that it indicates a great want of Christian courtesy for one of the missionaries now to characterize their distinguishing doctrine as "a tradition of the Romish Church." To this Dr. Cote has replied through the N. Y. Recorder, and from his reply we clip the following paragraph :—

"The greatest crime of which I am accused, is that I have said that 'infant sprinkling is a tradition of the Romish Church.' The editor of the Observer must know, that the statement with which he thus reproaches me is common to the whole body of the Baptist denomination, who look upon infant sprinkling as unscriptural, and as having no other foundation than the tradition of the Church of Rome. He must also know, that a great number of the members of the Pedobaptist churches have considered in times past, and do still consider, infant sprinkling in the same light. Could it be that when he read what I was reported to have said on the subject at Rochester, the assertion actually made by me, and here repeated, was a new sound to his ears ? Has he never known, that as surely as a Pedobaptist Protestant minister enters into a controversy with a Pedobaptist Romish priest, this latter one calls upon the Protestant to prove infant sprinkling from the Bible ? Has he never observed, that when the Protestant minister has toiled in vain to win the victory by proving infant sprinkling from the Bible, his antagonist, in a few words, shows that the Church of Rome had established by her own authority that peculiar rite ? Is the Observer ignorant that Luther, the great luminary of the 16th century, candidly said, that from the New Testament it was impossible to prove that infant sprinkling was an institution of Jesus Christ ? Is he not aware that Neander, who is considered the most faithful and enlightened modern sacred historian, if not the greatest scholar in ecclesiastical history, the Christian churches have ever seen, uses the following language—'As to your question on infant sprinkling, it cannot possibly be proved that it was practiced in the Apostolical Age ?'"

These statements and references Dr. Cote seems to regard as a justification of his assertion, that "infant sprinkling is a tradition of the Romish Church." We are not inclined to dispute the point with him ; on the contrary, we are very much of his way of thinking about the matter. And since the Doctor is so averse to Romish traditions, and so ready to quote against them the authority of distinguished writers, we are inclined to call his attention to one of his own practices, which we regard as a Romish tradition, and to quote a little from his favorite authors upon that subject. Dr. Cote and his coädjutors, we are told, are quite strict in their observance of the first day of the week, and do not hesitate to call it the Sabbath, and represent its desecration as a breach of the fourth commandment. Now we venture to assert, that such a doctrine is not taught in the Bible, but is only a tradition of the Romish Church ; and in proof of this position, we will quote three of the witnesses upon whom Dr. Cote relies to prove that infant sprinkling is a tradition of the Romish Church.

Our first witness shall be Martin Luther, whom Dr. Cote calls "the great luminary of the 16th century." Speaking of the traditions of the Romish Church, in the Augsburg Confession, drawn up by Luther and Melancthon, he says :—

"We teach that traditions are not to be condemned which have a religious end, . . . namely, traditions concerning holy-days, the Lord's Day, the Feast of the Nativity, Easter, &c."

Our second witness shall be Dr. Augustus Neander, "who (according to Dr. Cote) is considered the most faithful and enlightened modern historian, if not the greatest scholar in ecclesiastical history, the Christian churches have ever seen." In his "History of the Christian Religion and Church," p. 186 of the Philadelphia edition, he says :—

"The festival of Sunday, like all other festivals, was always only a human ordinance, and it was far from the intentions of the apostles to establish a Divine command in this respect, far from them, and from the early apostolic church, to transfer the laws of the Sabbath to Sunday."

Our third and last witness shall be one of those "Pedobaptist Romish Priests," to whom Dr. Cote refers as pressing their Protestant antagonists so hard in the discussions about Romanism. In a book written by one of them, called "An Antidote, or Treatise of Thirty Controversies," and intended as a reply to the writings of the Protestant Doctors Fitch, Whitaker, Field, and others, the author uses the following language :—

"The Word of God commandeth the seventh day to be the Sabbath of our Lord, and to be kept holy ; you Protestants, without any precept of Scripture, change it to the first day of the week, only authorized by our traditions. Divers English Puritans oppose against this point, that the observation of the first day is proved out of Scripture, where it is said the first day of the week, Acts 20 : 7, 1 Cor. 16 : 2, Rev. 1 : 10. Have they not spun a fair thread, in quoting these places ? If we should produce no better for purgatory, and prayers for the dead, invocation of the saints, and the like, they might have good cause indeed to laugh us to scorn ; for where is it written that these were Sabbath days in which those meetings were kept ? Or where is it ordained that they should be always observed ? Or, which is the sum of all, where is it decreed that the observation of the first day should abrogate or abolish the sanctifying of the snventh day, which God commanded everlastingly to be kept holy ? Not one of those is expressed in the written word of God."

Here, then, Dr. Cote, you have the assertion of Luther, that the Lord's Day is traditional—of Neander, that the festival of Sunday is only a human ordinance—and of an eminent Romish author, that the keeping of the first day of the week is "only authorized by our traditions." Without wishing to burden you with subjects for consideration, or in any respect to take undue liberties, we beg the privilege of urging these quotations upon your attention, and of expressing a hope that, having begun to throw off the shackles of Romish tradition, you will not stop until you find yourself entirely free.

MISSIONARY.

The readers of the Recorder have been furnished with a very interesting letter from Mrs. Carpenter, and also with some extracts from the journal of Bro. C. By way of keeping our brethren informed of the progress of the mission, and of its necessities, we give a few more extracts. It will be seen that our missionaries are making steady progress in the acquisition of that most difficult language, and that they will soon be able to proclaim in the Chinese tongue the unsearchable riches of Christ. From Bro. Carpenter we quote as follows :—

By taking a retrospective view occasionally, we can perceive that we have made some advancement. Latterly we have given considerable attention to the written character. Bro. W. and I, in connection with a class, have learned seven hundred words, their form, sound, tone, and signification. Besides these, we have been studying the spoken language in the character. In this way we have learned perhaps three or four hundred more. The Chinese do not write many books in the spoken or familiar style. But the teachers are able to take any book and turn it into the colloquial style. This is much more diffuse than the Mandarin, and many words are used merely for their sounds. But most of the words have the same meaning as in Mandarin. Generally, however, or at least very frequently, the pronunciation is different, and frequently the form is abreviated. I have completed "Chang and Yueb," a well written tract in the form of a dialogue on experimental religion. It was written by the former Mr. Milne. Our teacher has put it into the colloquial style, and we have committed a part, and got the whole so that we can read it readily and understand it. And we have drilled so much on it that very many phrases and sentences are familiar. The greater part we have studied in the character. At first we wrote the sounds in the Roman character. I have now commenced the New Testament, and feel much interested in it ; for while I am getting a knowledge of the character, I am at the same time learning the idiom of the language, and how to express intelligibly to the Chinese the great truths we came to teach. The whole business of acquiring this language is an up-hill business ; but I see nothing but what will yield to such patient and persevering effort as the gospel in its fullness is adapted to prompt. Indeed, the love of gain will prompt some to encounter and overcome these difficulties. It would be a shame if the love of Christ would not do as much. If any thing can prompt to diligent effort, it seems to me that the sight of these millions of idol-worshipers, moving in one solid phalanx down the broad way that leads to death, is adapted to do it. It is true, their minds are blinded. They do not distinctly see a better way. And they are confirmed in their dark and darkening notions, by the reverence they entertain for their ancestors, who, from time immemorial, have done as their children now do. But,

Shall we whose souls are lighted,
With wisdom from on high ;
Shall we, to men benighted,
The lamp of life deny ?

No ; but by the grace of God we will lift it up, "till the day dawn and the day star arise in their hearts." These heathen are not to be taunted for their idolatry, by us who, with so much greater light, are possessed of so little living faith. No doubt when they shall behold the messengers of the Prince of Peace stand before them with credentials clear, there will be found amongst them those who will kiss the Son and willingly take his yoke upon them. Till then let us labor and pray, forasmuch as we know that our labor is not in vain in the Lord.

It will be remembered, that our brethren of the mission expected to be able to preach publicly in the language of the country, in two years from the time of their leaving home. Those two years are nearly expired. It will also be remembered, that the house which they occupy in Shanghai, contains a large room, capable of being fitted up for a chapel. According to their estimate, about 100 or 125 dollars would be necessary to defray the expense of fitting it up. It is hoped that this very necessary, but moderate expense, will not be forgotten by the friends of the mission, when forwarding their contributions. Bro. C. says :—

"I also stated [referring to a former letter] that we wanted $100 to fit up our chapel room and courts ; and $25 for doing off rooms. But perhaps all this will be on its way hither before this letter will reach you." The Board cannot permit themselves to doubt, that our denomination will see the necessity of sustaining the China mission vigorously and liberally. Every one will see, that besides the mere expense of supporting their families, our missionaries must have able teachers, as well as the means of issuing tracts, and of doing many other things for the advancement of the cause, all of which will require money. It may be estimated that not less than 1,500 dollars per annum will be required to sustain the mission, and perhaps more. But we are sure that the resources of the denomination are abundantly sufficient for it. The Board has just made its fourth remittance ; and in order that it may be prepared for any exigency, it is hoped that our churches will continue to forward their offerings, and that new contributions will be made soon. ## PRACTICE vs. PROFESSION.

Bigotry is disgusting in any body, and most of all in those who profess to hate it and be free from it. It is, however, not unfrequently manifested by such persons to a degree hardly equaled by any others. If we mistake not, illustrations of this may be found even among those who have been loudest in their advocacy of "evangelical alliances," and similar expedients to make the world believe that their charity reaches to every body. They desire union and alliance, but they must have them in perfect harmony with their own peculiar notions, or they bolt at once. The N. Y. Observer has recently given a specimen of this desire for union. A Baptist missionary, in a public address, told his audience in what light he regarded infant sprinkling ; whereupon the Observer took him in hand, and gave him a most unbrotherly and unmerciful castigation, setting forth that such remarks, "in these days of evangelical alliances and Christian union," were "as foreign from the spirit of the times as from the spirit of the gospel." In reading the article, we were reminded of the man who was so bent upon peace that he "would have it if he had to fight for it." The editor of the Baptist paper of this city has some comments upon the subject, which contrast strongly with the spirit manifested by the editor of the Observer. We quote the following paragraph, because it shows the difference, and states a significant fact, which we commend to the attention of those who desire to know how things work "in these days of evangelical alliances" :

"Making less pretensions than others to Christian charity, Baptists certainly, so far as the observation of our life has furnished testimony, have not been behind their neighbors in the practical exercise of this grace. And adverting here to our own observation, we may add :—We came to our present post prepared to coöperate with Christian brethren of other denominations in any thing which pertains to the common salvation,—our vocation has been exercised in the very period of 'evangelical alliances,'—and yet it has been our fortune to find the coöperation of the Baptist press, in numerous matters of common interest, unsought, if not even repelled,—and the same treatment precisely extended to the denomination to which we belong,—all this by those who are shocked at our 'close communion,' and are fast friends of 'evangelical alliances.' We could give some curious illustrations of these matters, but we doubt whether the exposure of the infirmities of brethren tends to edification, and we leave the correction of them to the work of time and grace."

PETITION OF GERMAN SEVENTH-DAY BAPTISTS.

We give below the form or petition prepared by our German Seventh-day Baptist brethren for presentation to the Legislature of Pennsylvania at its approaching session. They earnestly request the English Seventh-day Baptists who reside in Pennsylvania to send petitions to the Legislature from their respective communities, in such form as they may think proper. This should be attended to immediately and thoroughly.

To the Honorable the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in General Assembly met :

The Memorial of the undersigned, members of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination, residing in the County of          respectfully represents :

That the observation of the seventh day of the week (commonly called Saturday) as the Sabbath, is a prominent article of their Faith, and has always been religiously and conscientiously adhered to by them—and never, until lately, have they been disturbed or molested for not observing the first day of the week as the Sabbath.

Among the earliest settlers of Lancaster Co., were large numbers of members of this sect—and they and their children have continued to reside there for upwards of a century, in the peaceful enjoyment of the Rights of Conscience. Others have lived in Franklin County for upwards of seventy years ; and no one ever dreamed of enforcing against them the provisions of the Act of 1794, until the summer of 1845—when, in consequence of a prosecution, instituted without their agency, for the disturbance of a religious meeting at Snow Hill, many members of this denomination, were time and again prosecuted, and compelled to pay fines and costs ; and, in some instances, undergo imprisonment, for performing secular duties on Sunday. In Bedford county, also, the members of this Church have been repeatedly subjected to prosecutions, fines, and costs, on the same account. These prosecutions have, in almost every instance, been instituted upon the information of individuals, whose lives manifest but little regard for religion and the sanctity of the Sabbath, and who seem to be actuated more by a spirit of persecution and intolerance, than by any love of the Christian Faith.

Your memorialists, believing that the Constitution of the United States, and of this State, guaranteed to them the right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience, appealed for redress to the highest judicial tribunal of the Commonwealth—and they regret to add, that they appealed in vain. The Act of 1794, under which their brethren were proceeded against, was decided to be within the spirit and meaning of the Bill of Rights ; declaring that "all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God, according to the dictates of their own consciences ;" and that "no human authority can, in any case whatever, control or interfere with the rights of conscience."

By appealing to your honorable bodies, they mean no reflection whatever on the judicial tribunal of the State ; on the contrary, they have ever entertained the highest respect for the constituted authorities of Government. But inasmuch as the existing laws compel them either to observe a day which they cannot conscientiously regard as the Sabbath, or subject them to fines and imprisonment, they humbly and respectfully ask for the enactment of a law, to exempt them from the provisions of the first section of the act, entitled "An Act for the prevention of vice and immorality," passed the 22d day of April, 1794.

If the Legislature, in a law for the relief prayed for, shall deem it proper to enforce the observance of the Seventh Day by those professing to believe it to be the true Sabbath, your memorialists will be perfectly content.

THE OPIUM TRADE IN CHINA.—A letter from Rev. J. L. Shuck is published in the English Baptist Magazine, in which he enlarges on the great injnry done to China by the opium trade, which, he says, was never in a more flourishing condition than at present. He declares that some of the most ancient, wealthy, and respectable families in Shanghai, have by opium been brought to tears, anguish, and destitution. "I regard opium," he adds, "as a greater obstacle to the introduction of the Gospel into China, than the three false religions of China—Confucianism, Taouism, and Buddhism combined." The East India Company, it is said, grow opium expressly for the Chinese, and are the real authors of the mischief. Thus the nominal Christians of England are counteracting the efforts of Christian missionaries from all parts of the world.

WELCOME NEWS.—In these times of general religious declension, it is cheering to hear of occasional revivals. Within a few days we have learned incidentally that there is an interesting state of feeling in the church at De Ruyter, N. Y., and that three persons were baptized on the Sabbath before last. At Shiloh, N. Jersey, also, we learn that things are improving, After the Annual Meeting held there in October, a series of evening meetings was commenced, in connection with visiting from house to house, which has resulted in a revival of the church, and the hopeful conversion of some souls.

UNIVERSITY OF WISCONSIN.—The new State of Wisconsin has made broad and liberal provision for the general and thorough education of its youth. The Legislature has taken the preliminary measures for the establishment of a University, the Regents of which, as we learn from the Milwaukie Gazette, met at Madison recently. Steps were taken by them for the purchase of a site near the State Capitol at Madison, and it was decided to open a Preparatory Department the present winter. Mr. John H. Lathrop, now Chancellor of the Missouri University, has been chosen Chancellor or President of the proposed University of Wisconsin.

WESTERN COLLEGES.—We learn from a notice in the Puritan, by Rev. Emerson Davis, D. D., that the Collegiate Education Society has raised nearly $12,000 in Eastern Churches ; and that $9,500 more have been given by individuals in Connecticut for permanent endowments ; also $10,000 by Hon. Thomas Williams, for the support of a professorship in Beloit College, in Wisconsin,—making a total of more than $30,000 the last year at the East for the benefit of Western Colleges.

MISSIONARIES FOR CALIFORNIA.—The steamship Falcon, which sailed from New York on the 1st instant, took three missionaries for California, viz : Rev. C. Wheeler, of the Baptist Home Missionary Society, and Messrs. J. W. Douglas and S. H. Willey, of the Pedobaptist Home Miss. Society. They expect to cross the Isthmus by land, in time to meet the steamship California on the Pacific coast, and go by her to the place of their destination.

ILL-HEALTH OF A MISSIONARY.—Mr. Dean, the Baptist Missionary at Hong Kong, China, writes home, under date of July 24, that on account of ill health he had not pretended to preach for two or three weeks, and had done as little talking as possible. He says : "The Doctor speaks discouragingly, but I trust that a trip of a few weeks to the north will enable me to resume the duties which for some weeks have been virtually suspended. A slight cough, and night sweats, have taken away a good share of the strength the hot season left me. I have just returned from a fortnight's rest at Macao, but without the benefit I had anticipated. The Notes on Matthew are printed as far as chapter 23d, and I have the first copy completed, and shall endeavor to send it all to the printer before I leave for Fuchau and Shanghai."

A MISSIONARY IN TROUBLE.—The recent unfortunate insurrection in Ceylon, (says the Philadelphia North American,) has resulted in the implication of the Rev. Mr. Gainer, a Baptist missionary, who has been arrested and thrown into prison. The insurrection spoken of was caused by the oppressive taxation to which the native populace are subjected. Mr. Gainer is connected with the English Baptist Missionary Society.

☞ E. P. Larkin requests his correspondents to address him at Shiloh, N. J.

MISSIONARIES AT SHANGHAI.—A letter from Shanghai, China, recently published in the Christian Reflector and Watchman, says that there are now in that city missionaries connected with five different denominations. The London Missionary Society, the Church of England Missionary Society, the Missionary Society of the Episcopal Church in the United States, the Missionary Society of the Sabbatarians, and the Southern Baptist Convention, have each their representatives, engaged in the study of the language, in printing, or in distributing Bibles and tracts, and preaching. A veteran missionary, connected with the American Board of Foreign Missions, is now at Shanghai, engaged in the translation of the Bible. The Mission of the Church of England, the Episcopal Mission, and the Baptist Mission, each expect soon to erect a chapel. In the monthly Concert, all the missionaries unite. "It is a pleasant sight, in this heathen land, to see some twenty or thirty thus collected to implore a blessing on their labors. When all these missionaries shall be employed in breaking the bread of life, and all the various appliances be set in motion, an amount of moral power will be exerted, which must be productive of great good."

MISSIONARIES IN INDIA.—An English gentleman, writing from India, says that there are now in that country, of European missionaries, three hundred men—a staff wonderfully increased within the last seven years, and holding forth still greater hopes of a farther extension. These three hundred Europeans have, of native agents, catechists, and native ministers of various grades, (excluding the schoolmasters,) assisting them, of Hindoos preaching the gospel to Hindoos, one thousand three hundred and four men. They have of schoolmasters also assisting them, though many of them not directly, in the dissemination of the gospel, sixteen hundred men. The number under the charge of the various missionary societies, of those who have renounced heathenism and professed Christianity, is now ninety thousand. Thirty-five years ago, American missionaries were not allowed a footing on the shores of India, by the British East India Company, from fear lest the intellectual elevation of the natives might interfere with the commercial interests of the Company.

THE JEWS IN RUSSIA.—The Emperor of Russia has recently issued a ukase creating a Council of Rabbis, the members of which will be chosen by the Government from a list of the candidates elected by the grand Jewish communes of the empire. It will be the duty of this Council to decide all questions relative to the laws and customs of the Jewish worship, the function of the Rabbis, and the appeals which may be made from sentences of divorce pronounced by the synagogue councils. It will sit a t St. Petersburg, and will hold a yearly session of two months.

DESTITUTION OF THE BIBLE IN KENTUCKY.—Rev. George W. Robertson has been employed by the Shelby County Bible Society, during the past year, to supply the county with the Bible. He has gone through about three fourths of the county, and reports that he has found one hundred and twenty-three families who had no copy of the Word of God in their houses. This is one of the best supplied counties in the State, and if such destitution be found in it, what may be expected in frontier counties ? Verily there is work for Christians to do in this State.

COSTLY SCHOOL-HOUSES.—As an evidence of the attention Massachusetts is bestowing upon popular education, take the following account of Mr. Mann, late Agent for Common Schools in that State, and now a member of Congress :—

"On the 10th of April last, I attended the dedication of a school-house, in Boston, which had cost seventy thousand dollars. Another was dedicated in Boston a few weeks since, at which it was stated by the Mayor, that the cost of the city school-houses, which have been completed within the last three months, was two hundred thousand dollars. A school-house has just been dedicated in Cambridge, which, with two others, have cost twenty-five thousand dollars. A most splendid one was dedicated in Charlestown, lately, by the Mayor, and city government, and clergy. Gov. Briggs went this season forty miles, to Newburyport, to dedicate a school-house that cost twenty-five thousand dollars."

THE SLAVE TRADE.—The public not long since was shocked by the announcement of an awful tragedy in the jail of Coventry, Kentucky. A husband and wife, on their way to the southern market, about to be torn from their only child, buried a knife in its heart, and then slew themselves. Who can imagine the intensity of the agony which drove them to such a deed as this ? Two other instances of a similar kind, not indeed so horrible, but still lamentable, have just fallen under our notice.

The Rockville (Md.) Journal of Sept. 30th, says :

"A negro man belonging to Mr. Philip Stone, who resides near this place, chopped his hand off with an axe on Wednesday last. He stated that he was induced to do so from a fear that his master would sell him. He had run off a few days previous, and had just been brought home.

The probability is, that he had a wife or family in the neighborhood, and resorted to this dreadful expedient to avoid the anguish of being separated from them.

The other case we find briefly related in the Richmond (Va.) Whig :—

"An inquest was held before Coroner Wicker yesterday evening, on the body of Simon, a slave belonging to a gentleman in Surry county, who was brought to the city for sale, and was in the care of a gentleman of this city, who on yesterday about sunrise voluntarily threw himself down a well in the yard, and was drowned. Verdict, voluntary suicide."

The words we have italicized throw light on the cause of this tragedy.

Has the negro no heart ? Is he not susceptible of home affections ? How can we help abhorring a system which thus tramples upon them in cold blood, and treats men like brutes.—[National Era.

CONGRESS—OPENING OF THE SESSION.

The Thirtieth Congress reässembled on Monday, Dec. 4th, for a session constitutionally limited to ninety days.

The SENATE organized at noon, the President pro tem, Mr. Atchison, of Mo., in the chair. Mr. Douglass gave notice of bills for Territorial Governments in Nebraska, Minesota, New Mexico, and California. Mr. Cameron gave notice of a bill for taking the next Census. Messrs. King, Turney, and Davis were appointed a Committee to join the House Committee to wait on the President, and inform him of the organization of the Senate, and to state that it was ready to receive any communication he might have to make.

The HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES was called to order at noon, the roll read, and 178 members answered to their names. Horace Greeley and Esbon Blackmar, the two members elected to fill vacancies, appeared, and took the usual oaths. A message was received informing the House that the Senate was organized, whereupon the House appointed the usual Committes to wait on the Senate and the President. A question was raised upon receiving a member from the Territory of Wisconsin, and the matter was referred to the Committee on Elections. The House agreed to a motion for two chaplains, of different denominations, but the election was postponed. Notice was given of a bill asking for the right of way and for a grant of public lands for a railroad between the Upper and Lower Mississippi. After the selection of seats by the members, the House adjourned.

—The President's Message was probably sent in to Congress at noon of Tuesday. As we usually go to press about that time, and delay would only enable us to give a hasty and imperfect abstract of the Message, we conclude to defer the whole matter till next week.

The N. Y. Tribune of Tuesday morning contains the following suggestions about matters at Washington :—

It is supposed that the President will urge the Missouri Compromise line as a settler to the Wilmot Proviso.

The expenses of the army during the War seem to be computed by the Admistration people at $60,000,000. Additional expense of the navy $3,000,000, exclusive of appropriations for other purposes.

The following facts and figures are given about the Post Office Department :—

Gross revenue from all sources.

| | |
|---|---|
| Year ending 30th June 1846 | $3,487,199 35 |
| 1847 | 3,945,893 31 |
| 1848, including the appropriation of $200,000 for service rendered Government | $4,361,077 85 |

Expenditures.

| | |
|---|---|
| Year ending 30th June 1846 | $4,084,296 82 |
| 1847 | 3,971,310 62 |
| 1848 | 4,326,850 27 |

The expenditure of 1848, has been increased by the readjustment of the commissions allowed to Postmasters, and by the sum paid to the Bremen mail steamers.

A DISTRESSING CASE OF HYDROPHOBIA.—A melancholy case of death from hydrophobia, says the Kingston British Whig, took place in this city on Sunday evening, the 29th of Oct. last. The unhappy victim, Mr. Duke, of the Commissariat Department, had been bitten about three weeks previously by a strange cat, but not suspecting the animal to be in a rabid state, he omitted mentioning the circumstance until too late to render human assistance of any value. From Friday morning, the 26th, to the moment of his death, he neither ate, drank, nor slept—was perfectly sensible of his fate, and in the vain hope of averting it, made use of every possible effort to overcome the strong repugnance he felt against water; but the sight of this, or of any other fluid, produced a sensation which he described as if undergoing suffocation from drowning, his whole frame becoming fearfully convulsed; and on one occasion, when attempting to introduce a small quantity of moisture into his mouth, which he suggested might be done by means of a syringe, the shock was so great as to make him spring involuntarily from the floor, and strike his head against the ceiling, about ten feet high. What marks this case with a character peculiarly distressing, is, that the deceased has left a widow with six small children, without a relation in all Canada, or means to defray the expense of her husband's funeral.

SINGULAR RETURN OF LOST MONEY.—Thirteen years ago, Mr. Truman Enos, one of the oldest and most esteemed citizens of Norwich, New York, lost somewhere between that place and Utica, a pocket-book containing $234. After diligent search, advertising, &c., he was unable to obtain any trace of the missing money. A short time before, he had been stripped by fire, debts, &c., of about $10,000, and the loss of this additional sum then appeared peculiarly unfortunate. Of course he had long since given up all expectation of recovering the lost property. But he was surprised on Saturday morning, the 28th ult., by receiving a letter, dated and mailed in New York, enclosing a one hundred dollar bill, and stating in effect, that the writer and a companion, thirteen years before, had found the missing pocket-book in the road near Utica—that they divided the contents between them—that his companion has since died—that he forwarded one hundred dollars, and that he intended to pay in his full half of the principal, ($117,) and the interest on it, amounting to one hundred more. He also stated, that perhaps he ought to pay the whole amount, with interest, but that he would pay the one-half at all events. The writing is evidently disguised, but appears like that of a business man.

SUMMARY.

On the afternoon of November 26th, while Mr. James Platner, a highly respectable citizen and sheriff elect of Otsego county, was trying a horse attached to a wagon, the animal became unmanageable, ran against the curb-stone, and threw Mr. Platner with great violence upon the pavement. He was taken up in a state of insensibility. Doctors were immediately called, when it was discovered that Mr. P.'s neck was broken, and although alive, no hopes were entertained of his recovery.

The proprietors of the Exchange Hotel, Springfield, were held liable for the loss of a trunk, stolen or lost from the coach which is used to bring guests from the depot to the hotel, at a term of the Court of Common Pleas, held at Greenfield, Mass., during the past week. The jury brought in a verdict for the full value of the trunk ($114) and costs. The decision of the Court is a new one, and the ruling has been excepted to by the defendant's counsel.

It is proposed to hold an Editorial Convention in Indianapolis some time during the approaching winter. The Indiana State Journal very justly remarks : "There is much need of something to restrain the low personal abuse indulged in by some of the fraternity ; and if it can be done through the influence of a convention, we are for it at once. The attempts already made on the subject have not been very successful."

The City of Rochester, wishing to signalize Thanksgiving Day by some noble act, a contribution was made, some thousands of chickens, pies, &c., were purchased, and under the direction of the ladies of the city, distributed among the poor, whereby many who never knew before what Thanksgiving Dinners meant, enjoyed a good one, and were very thankful.

A letter from Christiana, in Norway, states, as a fact positively determined, that the Lieut. Generalship of the Kingdom of Norway is to be suppressed, and that the country is to be governed, from and after the first of January next, by a Viceroy. This charge, it is said, is to be conferred on the Prince Royal.

The Boston Chronotype says that the ship Sweden, Capt. Nott, recently arrived at Boston from a voyage round the world. The S. had been absent 429 days, during which she visited 5 ports, and sailed 43,600 miles. She was at sea 354 days—thus sailing on an average 123 1-6 miles per day.

The St. Louis Union of November 17th says that for several successive days and nights a man was seen lying near the lime kiln on the bank of the river, in the northern part of the city—yesterday morning he was taken to the hospital, apparently in a dying condition. He is a discharged soldier, named Thomas Williams ; his home is in Herkimer county, New York.

The Boston Chronotype says that some gentlemen of that city have originated a society designed to communicate medical education, particularly in regard to nursing, midwifery, and the treatment of diseases of women and children, to females. The society proposes to establish in Boston a Female Medical Institute and a Maternity Hospital.

The Chronotype says that Mr. Dominie Dassance, of East Foxboro, was found wedged in between the axletrees of a cart loaded with wood, and a tree, dead. It is conjectured that as Mr. Dassance was driving the team, perceiving that the wagon was likely to come in contact with the tree, he sprang forward to turn the oxen, but stumbled and fell, and rose up on the very instant to be caught in the manner found, which caused instant death.

Minesota has elected a representative to Congress, who will claim his seat from the Territory of Wisconsin. The bill establishing the State of Wisconsin did not repeal the old law governing the Territory, consequently the settlements not embraced within the State Law, are still the Territory of Wisconsin, and fully entitled to a representative in Congress.

The receipts of the Croton Water Board for the first six months of the present year, were $222,255 27. It is proposed that the water rates shall be a tax collected of the landlords, and be a lien on their property, leaving it to them to make them a part of the rental.

A package containing nine thousand two hundred dollars in bank notes, addressed to Mr. G. Curtis, Cashier to the Bank of Commerce, New York, by the Merchant's Bank, Providence, was recently stolen somewhere between Providence add New York.

The death of Lyne Starling, one of the original proprietors of the soil on which Columbus, Ohio, stands, is announced in the Journal of the 22d inst, aged seventy years. He was one of the richest and most liberal men in the State. The Medical College at Columbus was endowed by him and bears his name. He leaves no children.

A descendant of the Mohican tribe of Indians died in New York last week, at the age of one hundred and seven years. Her mother lived to be one hundred and five years old. Their united ages was two hundred and twelve years.

The St. Louis Union of November 17th says that on the previous Saturday a Mr. Morris, the proprietor of a foundry in Galena, in a fit of mental derangement, took a revolving pistol and shot two men—one his brother-in-law—and then blew out his own brains, expiring immediately.

Mr. Hughes, a revolutionary soldier, in the 107th year of his age, was taken to the polls in Rockbridge county, Va., at the late election, by a friend, in a carriage drawn by four dun horses. There were several voters in Massachusetts over 90.

Henry Hull, of Stormville, Dutchess county, New York, has in his hands a legacy for the orphan children of Samuel and Lucy Poster, Lucy White before marriage, whose whereabouts are now unknown.

The Barnstable Patriot states that Miss Betsy L. Knowles has been appointed Post*master* at Orleans, in place of Matthew Kingman, Esq., deceased.

Counterfeit fives on the Farmer's Bank at Mina, Chautauque county, badly executed, the engraving being very coarse, are in circulation.

A letter to the N. Y. Tribune, dated at San Francisco, California, says that Thomas J. Farnham died there on the 13th of September, after a severe illness of four weeks. He was formerly Principal of an Academy in Jefferson County, N. Y., afterward a lawyer in Illinois; whence he made the overland journey to Oregon in 1840. He remained there but a short time, returning by way of the Sandwich Islands and California. His account of the journey is one of the best ever written. He returned to and settled in California in 1844-5, and resided there thence to his death. He leaves a widow (late Matron of the Sing Sing State Prison) and two promising sons.

The N. Y. Tribune, of December 1st, says that the ship Hurriet Newell, Captain Edward Lockwood, arrived at this port yesterday in 26 days from Limerick, Ireland, with two cabin and fifty-nine steerage passengers ; a portion of the latter being, as we learn from the London Illustrated News of the 4th, the Government informers and witnesses in the late State trials of Smith O'Brien, Meagher, and others, for treason and sedition, for whom a farther residence in Ireland was deemed unsafe; so they have been sent out here at the expense of the Crown.

During a circus performance at Lafayette La., on Sunday the 15th ult., not less than 300 persons were in attendance. Heavy rains had preceded the performance, rendering the ground soft. The great weight caused the posts which maintained the seats to slide, so that a row, containing several hundred persons, came down with a sudden and tremendous crash. A child had its thigh broken, another an arm fractured ; Mr. Rogers had three ribs broken ; besides several contusions sustained by other individuals.

A mammoth tooth, weighing seven pounds and a quarter, has been discovered in Mount Holly, Vt. It was dug up while making excavations in a hill, for the Rutland and Burlington railroad. It was found imbedded in coarse gravel, ten or fourteen feet below the surface. The gravel bed lay between two steep parallel ridges of rock, forming what appears to have been anciently the bed of a river.

The New York Evening Post says that during the sixteen months that have elapsed since the "Home for the Friendless" was established in this city, more than five hundred adults have been sheltered, fed, and provided with temporary employment, and nearly four hundred children received, placed in school, and cared for, until they could be placed in good families in the country.

The number of slaves shipped from Africa at the present time, is said to be nearly equal to what it was on an average from 1788 to 1805—about 85,000 per annum—and the mortality still greater, almost double. The cruizers on the coast seem to have no effect in checking it. The encouragement of slave-grown sugar in England, has much to do in its prosecution.

We learn from the Boston Advertiser, that the King of Denmark has directed the Comet medal, founded by one of his predecessors, to be awarded to Miss Maria Mitchell, of Nantueket, for her discovery of the telescopic comet of the 1st of October, 1847. This is the first instance in which the Comet medal of the King of Denmark has been awarded to a lady.

A State Convention of the Free Soil party is to be held at Columbus, Ohio, on the 29th of December, to perfect a permanent organization of the party throughout the State. The Convention is to be a delegated body : each county being entitled to one delegate, and one more for every five hundred Free Soil votes at the late Presidential election.

There are two papers of widely-extended circulation in Kentucky in favor of the abolition of slavery in that State—the Louisville Courier, and the Examiner, published in Louisville, are out and out Abolition prints, and it is said that the Louisville Journal and Democrat will take the same side.

The Independent, is the name of a new Orthodox Congregational paper to be published in New York. The responsible editors are Rev. J. P. Thompson, of the Tabernacle Church, Rev. Dr. Bacon, of New Haven, and Rev. R. S. Storrs, of Brooklyn. Mr. Joshua Leavitt will supply the news and statistical matter.

A number of boats belonging to Uncle Sam were recently sold at the Brooklyn Navy Yard at immense sacrifice. Several which had cost upward of one hundred dollars each, were sold for about seven or eight dollars only, and a life boat for which one thousand two hundred dollars was paid, was sold for twenty dollars.

Mrs. Nixon, of Medina, Orleans county, who was riding to Albion with her husband last week, called at the drug store for morphine to relieve a toothache. The lad gave her strychnine, a fatal poison. She died almost immediately after applying it.

The steamboat Monedo exploded on the Arkansas river on the 15th, eight miles below Little Rock. One was killed and four or five deck hands were badly scalded. The captain and clerk escaped unhurt. The cargo was saved.

Hon. Ela Collins died suddenly of appoplexy on Thanksgiving day, at Lowville, Lewis Co., N. Y., where he had resided since 1808. Gen. Collins had represented his county in the Legislature, in the Constitutional Convention of 1821, and in Congress. In 1814 he commanded a regiment of militia in the vicinity of Sacketts Harbor. The present representative in Congress from that District, and Lieutenant Collins, of the U. S. Army, are sons of the deceased.

Mr. Ray Marsh, of Buffalo, offers one thousand dollars reward for the recovery of his daughter, Amarillius Ann Marsh, aged eighteen years, who left her father's house in that city, on the 17th inst., supposed to have been enticed away by some villain. She is described as being small in stature, spare face, acquiline nose, blue eyes, light hair, and easy, graceful manners.

The Little Rock (Ark.) Gazette says that on the 8th of November, the steamboat Moneida, when about twelve miles below that place, exploded one of her boilers, causing great damage and loss of life. One man was killed and five badly scalded, or otherwise injured, three of whom, in the opinion of the physicians, cannot survive. They were all employed as hands on the boat. There were no passengers on board.

Two persons convicted of robbing the President of the Chester County Bank have been sentenced by a Philadelphia court to undergo an imprisonment of two years and eleven months in the Eastern Penitentiary, pay a fine of ten thousand dollars, and restore the stolen money.

There was a sort of flood in Buffalo last week occasioned by a strong west wind, which drove the water across the creek and as far up town as the railroad depot. Canal boats floated through the streets, and it is feared that much damage was done.

On the 21st of November a young man in Carthage, Jefferson county, fell from the staging of a new factory 71 feet upon solid craggy rock, which was covered with about eighteen inches of running water, and he received no other injury than the breaking of an ancle.

MARRIED,

In Shiloh Meeting-House, on Thanksgiving Day, Nov. 23d, by Eld. G. M. Langworthy, Mr. GILBERT F. RANDOLPH to Miss PHEBE S. DAVIS, both of Shiloh. Also, at the same time and place, Mr. MICAJAH AYARS, of Shiloh, to Miss SARAH JANE WOODRUFF, of Carltown.

DIED,

In Verona, N. Y., November 27th, 1848, of consumption, Mrs. BASHABA WILLIAMS, wife of Robert Williams, aged 65 years. Sister Williams was a member of the Seventh-day Baptist Church in Berlin, with which she united in early life, and from that time down to her death, (which was more than forty years,) she gave evidence that she was a true disciple of Christ, and we trust she has gone to reap the reward of the righteous. C. C.

Near Shiloh, N. J., Oct 28th, of croup and inflammation, MARY JOSEPHINE, daughter of Ebenezer Davis (deceased) and Mary T. Davis, aged 2 years, 5 months, and 6 days.

Farewell, thou lovely babe, farewell—
The rose of life has ceased to bloom;
That form, but yesterday so fair,
Now sleeps in the lonely tomb.

Thy infant voice, dear babe, no more
Shall greet thy tender mother's ear;
Thy smiles of innocence and love
Her widowed heart no more shall cheer.

But oh! thy spirit's winged its flight
Far from earth's transitory bliss;
'T is gone, by guardian angels borne,
To taste eternal happiness.

Then cease, fond parent, cease to mourn—
No pains shall there disturb her peace;
Sweet raptures tune her gentle tongue—
Yes, raptures that shall never cease. M. T. D.

PROSPECTUS OF THE EDINBURGH QUARTERLY MAGAZINE OF MOAAL AND INTELLECTUAL SCIENCE.

Volume I. for 1848—American edition.

GEORGE COMBE AND ROBERT COX, EDITORS.

THE many and earnest desires expressed by the lovers of Phrenology on this side of the Atlantic, and the hope of still further advancing this great cause, has induced us to publish an American edition of this profound and

SCIENTIFIC QUARTERLY.

Its character and merits need but little comment, further than that it emanates from some of the ablest minds in England and Scotland, and has been before the public more than twenty years.

GEORGE COMBE,

The distinguished phrenological writer, is its principal contributor and virtual conductor. This work embodies all the new discoveries, together with all of interest which appertains to Phrenological Science.

MAGNETISM

It also advocates, showing its adaptation to medical science, to the relief of human suffering, and to its other various and important applications.

It also urges, with great ability and pre-eminent success,

HUMAN RIGHTS,

Showing the bearings of this science of mind to legislation, moral and political government, as well as to individual self control and intellectual cultivation.

The first number will be embellished with a beautiful portrait of Mr. Combe, and subsequent numbers by those of other distinguished individuals. Each number will contain 96 pages, and will be issued quarterly on the following REDUCED TERMS, invariably in advance :

"LOOK OUT WHILE THE BELL IS RINGING!"

BY GEO. W. BUNGAY.

With lungs of fire, and ribs of steel;
With sighing valve, and groaning wheel;
With startling scream, and giant stroke;
With showers of sparks, and clouds of smoke—
The iron steed the train is bringing;
So look out while the bell is ringing!

The gazing, gaping crowds stand back;
Will ye be crushed or clear the track?
Now all aboard and off again!
The drones behind can't reach the train;
They stumble where the switch is swinging,
So look out while the bell is ringing!

Just so the engine of reform,
Rolls on through sunshine and through storm,
O'er kings and sceptres, crowns and thrones,
Through sleepy crowds of idle drones;
'T is freedom's song the mass are singing,
So look out while the bell is ringing!

The slave will doff his yoke and chain,
The drunkard will not drink again,
The soldier throw his sword away,
We see the dawn of that bright day,
Glad news the harnessed lightning bringing;
So look out while the bell is ringing!

A RUNAWAY SLAVE TO HIS MASTER.

Our readers already know something about Frederick Douglas, the colored man who ran away from his old master, Thomas Auld, of Maryland, and whose freedom was afterwards paid for by his English friends. We are sure they will be interested in the following farther particulars about him, which he gives in a letter to Mr. Auld:

I have often thought I should like to explain to you the grounds upon which I have justified myself in running away from you. I am almost ashamed to do so now, for by this time you have discovered them yourself. I will, however, glance at them. When yet but a child, about six years old, I imbibed the determination to run away. The very first mental effort that I now remember on my part, was an attempt to solve the mystery, Why am I a slave? and with this question my youthful mind was troubled many days, pressing upon me more heavily at some times than at others. When I saw the slave-driver whip a slave-woman, cut the blood out of her neck, and heard her piteous cries, I went away into the corner of the fence, wept, and pondered over this mystery. I had, through some medium, I know not what, got some idea of God, the Creator of mankind, the black and the white, and that he had made the blacks to serve the whites as slaves. How he could do this and be good, I could not tell. I was not satisfied with this theory, which made God responsible for slavery, for it pained me greatly, and I have wept over it long and often. At one time, your first wife, Mrs. Lucretia, heard me singing, and saw me shedding tears, and asked of me the matter, but I was afraid to tell her. I was puzzled with this question, till one night, while sitting in the kitchen, I heard some of the old slaves talking of their parents having been stolen from Africa by white men, and were sold here as slaves. The whole mystery was solved at once. Very soon after this, my aunt Jinny and uncle Noah ran away, and the great noise made about it by your father-in-law, made me for the first time acquainted with the fact, that there were free States as well as slave States. From that time I resolved that I would some day run away. The morality of the act I dispose of as follows: I am myself; you are yourself; we are two distinct persons. What you are I am. You are a man, and so am I. God created both, and made us separate beings. I am not by nature bound to you, or you to me. Nature does not make your existence depend on me, or mine to depend upon yours. I cannot walk upon your legs, or you upon mine. I cannot breathe for you, or you for me; I must breathe for myself, and you for yourself. We are distinct persons, and are each provided with faculties necessary to our individual existence. In leaving you, I took nothing but what belonged to me, and in no way lessened your means of obtaining an honest living. Your faculties remained yours, and mine became useful to the rightful owner. I therefore see no wrong in any part of the transaction. It is true, I went off secretly, but that was more your fault than mine. Had I let you into the secret, you would have defeated the enterprise entirely. but for this I should have been really glad to have made you acquainted with my intention to leave.

You may perhaps want to know how I like my present position. I am free to say, I greatly prefer it to that which I occupied in Maryland. I am, however, by no means prejudiced against that State as such. Its geography, climate, fertility and products, are such as to make it a very desirable abode for any man; and but for the existence of slavery there, it is not impossible that I might again take up my abode in that State. It is not that I love Maryland less, but freedom more. You will be surprised to learn, that people at the north labor under the strange delusion that if the slaves were emancipated at the south, they would all flock to the north. So far from this being the case, in that event, you would see many old familiar faces back again at the south. The fact is, there are few here who would not return to the south in the event of emancipation. We want to live in the land of our birth, and to lay our bones by the side of our fathers; and nothing short of an intense love of personal freedom, keeps us from the south. For the sake of this, most of us would live on a crust and a cup of cold water.

Since I left you, I have had a rich experience; I have occupied positions which I never dreamed of as a slave. Three out of the ten years since I left you, I spent as a common laborer on the wharves of New Bedford, Massachusetts. It was there I earned my first free dollar. It was mine. I could spend it as I pleased. I could buy hams or herring with it, without asking any odds of anybody. This was a precious dollar to me. You remember when I used to make seven or eight dollars, and even nine dollars a week in Baltimore, you would take every cent of it from me each Saturday night, saying that I belonged to you, and my earnings also. I never liked this conduct on your part—to say the best, I thought it a little mean. I would not have served you so. But let that pass.

After alluding to the wonderful change which freedom has wrought in his condition, and the new and unexpected delights and higher life it has opened to him, he thus continues:—

So far as my domestic affairs are concerned, I can boast of as comfortable a dwelling as your own. I have an industrious and neat companion, and four dear children—the eldest a girl of nine years, and three fine boys, the eldest eight, the next six, and the youngest four years old. The three eldest are now going regularly to school—two can read and write, and the other can spell with tolerable correctness words of two syllables. Dear fellows! they are all in comfortable beds, and are sound asleep, perfectly secure under my roof. There are no slaveholders here to rend my heart by snatching them from my arms, or blast a proud mother's dearest hopes by tearing them from her bosom. These dear children are ours—not to work up into rice, sugar, and tobacco, but to watch over, regard, and protect, and to rear them up in the nurture and admonition of the gospel—to train them up in the paths of wisdom and virtue, and, as far as we can, to make them useful to the world and themselves.

Oh! sir, a slaveholder never appears to me so completely an agent of hell, as when I think of, and look upon my dear children. It is then that my feelings rise above control. I meant to have said more with respect to my prosperity and happiness, but thoughts and feelings which this recital has quickened, unfit me to proceed farther in that direction. The grim horrors of slavery rise in all their ghastly terror before me, and the wails of millions pierce my heart and chill my blood. I remember the chain, the gag, the bloody whip, the deathlike gloom overshadowing the broken spirit of the fettered bondman, the appalling liability of his being torn from his wife and children, and sold like a beast in the market. Say not that this is a picture of fancy. You well know that I wear stripes on my back inflicted by your direction; and that you, while we were brothers in the same church, caused this right hand, with which I am now penning this letter, to be closely tied to my left, and my person dragged at the pistol's mouth, fifteen miles, from the Bay side to Easton, to be sold like a beast in the market, for the alledged crime of intending to escape from your possession. All this and more you remember, and know to be perfectly true, not only of yourself, but of nearly all the slaveholders around you.

At this moment, you are probably the guilty holder of at least three of my own dear sisters, and my only brother, in bondage. These you regard as your property. They are recorded on your ledger, or perhaps have been sold to human fleshmongers, with a view to filling your ever hungry purse. Sir, I desire to know how and where these dear sisters are. Have you sold them? or are they still in your possession? What has become of them? are they living or dead? And my old grandmother, whom you turned out like an old horse to die in the woods—is she still alive? Write and let me know all about them. If my grandmother be still alive, she is of no service to you, for by this time she must be nearly eighty years old—too old to be cared for by one to whom she has ceased to be of any service; send her to me at Rochester, or bring her to me at Philadelphia, and it shall be the crowning happiness of my life to take care of her in her old age. Oh! she was to me a mother and a father, so far as hard toil for my comfort could make her such. Send me my grandmother! that I may watch over and take care of her in her old age. And my sisters, let me know all about them. I would write to them, and learn all I want to know of them, without disturbing you in any way, but that, through your unrighteous conduct, they have been entirely deprived of the power to read and write. You have kept them in utter ignorance, and have therefore robbed them of the sweet enjoyment of writing, or receiving letters from absent friends and relatives. Your wickedness and cruelty committed in this respect on your fellow creatures, are greater than all the stripes laid upon my back or theirs. It is an outrage upon the soul—a war upon the immortal spirit, and one for which you must give account at the bar of our common Father and Creator. * * *

VOLCANIC IRRUPTION IN JAVA.

A correspondent of the Boston Journal gives a thrilling description of a recent irruption of the burning mountain of Kloeb, in the island of Java. It occurred on the night of the 16th of May. The first symptoms were a tremulous motion in the vicinity of the mountain, then several reports like distant cannonading, and then the flame burst forth, followed by streams of burning lava, stones and ashes,—a sight, once seen, never to be forgotten. So sudden was the irruption, that no steps could be taken by the inhabitants of the villages in the neighborhood to escape the impending danger. Shortly after the flame burst forth, there came down the sides of the mountain, streams of lava, mixed with red-hot stones, and mud, carrying everything it met in its progress to the river. Huge trees, rocks, villages, animals, were all swept before it; and when this mass reached the river, it caused wide-spread ruin.

A portion of the stream from the crater fell into the river Konto, residency of Malang, and the water in the river instantly rose fifteen to twenty feet, by which the village of Kesembon had thirty acres of rice fields flooded, and the grain instantly killed. In this village five men lost their lives; besides these, sixteen belonging to an adjoining village, (Sambia Redjo,) were missing.

Down this river, (the Konto,) some trees of large size, as also dead buffaloes, both wild and tame; tigers, and the dead bodies of the villagers, floated in great numbers. Before this stream of lava the fish in the river were driven, and boat-loads were taken from the surface of the water, not yet dead, but floating on the surface, evidently endeavoring to get air; thousands on thousands were taken by the natives, and probably as many more went out to sea.

At Blitar, in the residency of Keirie, there were several government coffee gardens, containing seventy thousand trees, and about twelve hundred and fifty acres of rice fields, by the overflowing of the river laid under water, and the coffee trees and rice completely ruined. Forty-three buffaloes, and one old woman, who were not able to get away in time, were drowned.

In the district Sari, in the same residency, three villages, containing forty-five houses, were washed away. Some of the inhabitants, together with horses, buffaloes, sheep, &c., were drowned; and ten thousand coffee trees, and ninety acres of rice fields, overflowed and destroyed. In the district Recirie, we learn that six villages were destroyed, and eleven lives lost. Besides the above, there have been doubtless many lives lost of which nothing is yet known by the authorities.

SINGULAR HABITS OF MENAGERIE BEASTS.

A writer in a Cincinnati paper, describing a midnight visit to the animals of Raymond & Waring's menagerie, in their winter quarters in in that city, with Driesbach, the famous keeper, says: "It was a sight worth walking ten miles. We found, contrary to assertions of natural historians, an elephant lying down. It has always been asserted that these animals sleep standing. The different caged animals were reposing in the most graceful and classical attitudes. The lion and the tiger, the leopard and the panther, were lying with their paws affectionately twined about each other, without regard to species and nativity. In cages containing more than one animal, it is a never-failing custom for one to keep watch while the others sleep. The sentry is relieved with as much regularity as in a well-regulaled camp of soldiers, although not probably with as much precision in regard to time. The sentinel paces back and forth, and is very careful not to touch or do anything to arouse his comrades. Occasionally he lies down, but always with his head toward the front of his cage, and never sleeps until he is relieved. This singular custom, Her Driesbach informs us, since his connection with the menagerie, he has never known violated. Thomas Cart, who is the oldest showing master in the United States, confirms the statement.

EXPORTING WIVES.

From the time of Romulus down to the present day, the difficulty of inducing females to emigrate to new regions has been felt. Romulus stole wives for his countrymen, and in 1620 women were exported to Virginia from England. "The enterprising colonists," says Holmes, "being generally destitute of families, Sir Edward Sandys, the treasurer, proposed to the Virginia company to send over wives for the planters. The proposal was applauded, and ninety girls, 'young and uncorrupted,' were sent over in the ships that arrived this year, and the year following sixty more—handsome and well recommended to the company for their virtuous education and demeanor. The price of a wife, at first, was one hundred pounds of tobacco; but as the number became scarce, the price was increased to one hundred and fifty pounds, the value of which, in money, was three shillings per pound. This debt for wives, it was ordered, should have the precedency of all other debts, and be first recoverable." Another writer says, that "it would have done a man's heart good to see the gallant young Virginians hastening to the water-side when a ship arrived from London, each carrying a bundle of the best tobacco under his arm, and each taking back with him a beautiful and virtuous wife."

A Postillion in Luck.—Madame Cinti Damoreau, the celebrated French vocalist, who traveled in this country some years ago, tells a very good story of one of her traveling experiences in France.

She was traveling in a post-chaise, and the postillion, who rode on one of the horses, took so many glasses of eau-de-vie, to fortify his stomach against the cold, that he became 'non seipse,' or, in other words, extremely tipsy. His great coat lay on the back of one of his horses, and after sliding out of place from the jolting of the animal, fell into the road. The postillion noticed it, dismounted, picked it up, and laid it on his horse. 'I'm in luck,' said he, with a hiccup; 'I've found a great coat.' A little while afterwards the same accident happened to the coat. The postillion picked it up. 'I've found another coat,' said he. The circumstance was repeated a third time. 'Indeed,' said the postillion, 'this road is full of overcoats. However, I've got three besides my own, and I'll not get off again.' With these words he rode on to Marseilles, without finding another surtout, but unluckily he lost his own.

Kindness to the Horse.—The Turkish horse is a mixed offspring from the Arabian and the Persian breeds, and from some kindred varieties. It is as gentle and tractable as the Arabian, but neither so fleet nor so vigorous. Busbequies, who went as ambassador to Constantinople in the 17th century, says:—"There is no creature so gentle as a Turkish horse, nor more respectful to his master, or the groom that dresses him. The reason is, because they treat their horses with great lenity. The countrymen in Pontus stroke them, bring them into their houses, and almost to their tables, and use them even like children; and the grooms frequently sleek them down with their hands, and never use a cudgel to bang their sides but in cases of necessity. This makes their horses great lovers of mankind; and they are so far from kicking, winching, or growing untractable by this gentle usage, that you will hardly find an ill-tempered horse amongst them."

Business First, then Pleasure.—A man who is very rich now, was very poor when he was a boy. When asked how he got his riches, he replied, "My father taught me never to play till all my work for the day was finished, and never to spend money till I earned it. If I had but half an hour's work to do in a day, I must do that the first thing, and in half an hour. After this was done, I was allowed to play; and I could then play with much more pleasure than if I had the thought of an unfinished task before my mind. I early formed the habit of doing every thing in its time, and it soon became perfectly easy to do so. It is to this habit that I owe my prosperity." Let every boy who reads this, go and do likewise, and he will meet with a similar reward. [Anecdotes for Boys.

Ice.—The intrinsic value of ice, like that of metals, depends upon the investigation of an assayer. That is to say, a cubic foot of Lower Canada ice is infinitely more cold than a cubic foot of Upper Canada ice, which contains more cold than a cubic foot of Wenham ice, which contains infinitely more cold than a cubic foot of English ice; and thus, although each of these four cubic feet of ice has precisely the same shape, they each, as summer approaches, diminish in value; that is to say, they each gradually lose a portion of their cold, until, long before the Lower Canada ice has melted, the English ice has been converted into lukewarm water.

Large, moderate-sized, and small, Hands.—To large hands belong the spirit of minutiæ and of detail; Frederick I of Prussia, surnamed the King Corporal, had large hands. The poets say the same of Moses; and Domitian, whose hands were enormous, amused himself by killing flies. To moderate-sized hands belong the synoptic spirit—that is the conception of the details of the whole: such were those of Walter Scott, Montesquieu, Tasso, Racine, Corneille, Wast, Leibnitz, &c. A subtle and disputatious spirit is connected with small hands having delicate fingers. [M. D. Arpentigny.

VARIETY.

The largest scythe manufactory in the world is located at North Wayne, Me., about sixteen miles from Augusta. It is owned and carried on by Reuben B. Dunn. About one hundred hands are employed in the various departments. Twelve thousand scythes are annually manufactured, to produce which are required, 450,000 lbs. of iron, 65,000 lbs. of steel, 1200 tons of hard coal, 10,000 bushels of charcoal, 100 tons of grnid-stones, and half a ton of borax. The last article is used in the process of welding.

The Scientific American describes a new invention for the accommodation of passengers in railroad cars. A large dial is placed in each car, with the names of different places upon it, and a pointer to indicate the place arrived at. A gong is so made with the machinery as to sound whenever a stop is made.

In the town of Lunnenberg, Worcester county, Mass., containing a population of 1,275, there are living fifty persons, whose aggregate ages amount to 3,939 years, averaging over 78 years each. Two of them are between ninety and ninety-five years. Seventy-five persons, or 1-17th of the whole population, are seventy years of age and upwards.

Mr. Lanfrear, of Monson, a man aged about seventy-five years, was crossing the railroad track with a horse and wagon, about two miles from the Palmer (Mass.) Depot, on Thursday afternoon, when a train struck him and killed him instantly; his horse was also killed, and the wagon stove in pieces, by the collision. Mr. L. is said to be somewhat deaf, which is probably the reason why he failed to hear the coming train in season to avoid it.

The Albany Evening Journal says that a number of enterprising colored men in this and other States, have in contemplation to establish themselves in a neighborhood in the town of Florence, Oneida County. They have contracted for 100 village lots, containing one-quarter of an acre each, with the privilege of 25 acres each additional, in the immediate vicinity.

"As well might the farmer have the Venus de Medicis placed in his kitchen for a wife," says the Rev. Henry Coleman, in one of his agricultural lectures, "as some of our fashionable women. Indeed, it would be much better to have Lot's wife standing there, for she might answer one useful purpose; she might salt his bacon.

Iron bedsteads are becoming very extensively introduced. Their peculiar neatness of construction, great durability and cheapness will go far towards bringing them into general use. The posts are cast in various fanciful designs and patterns, and a neat wire net-work supercedes cords or canvass.

The Pittsburg Mercury says, "If you want to make a sober man a drunkard, give him a wife who will scold him every time he comes home, then storm at her son Bill, kick Tom over the skillett handle, dab Ned over the mouth, and then drive them all into the kitchen with a broomstick.

If every man patronized the press as well as Colonel Pratt does, printers would have little to complain of. The Pratsville Advocate says that he now takes eight dailies, thirty weeklies, and seventeen periodicals, the expense of which is some $150 per annum.

It has recently been found that the leaves of pine apple contain an extremely fine, and silken fibre, easily seperated by heating and washing. The ultimate fibres are finer than those of cotton or linen, applicable to the same purposes.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY

W. C. KENYON, A. M., }
IRA SAYLES, A. M., } Principals.

As isted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board. and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULATIONS.

1. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.
2. Punctuality in attending all regular Academic exercises will be required.
3. The use of Tobacco, for chewing or smoking, will not be allowed either in or about the Academic buildings.
4. Playing at games of chance cannot be allowed.
5. Using profane language cannot be allowed.
6. The use of any kind of intoxicating drinks cannot be allowed, unless prescribed in case of sickness, by a regular physician.
7. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, cannot be permitted.
8. Gentlemen and ladies of the Institution will not be permitted to visit the rooms of the opposite sex, except in cases of imperious necessity, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.
9. Good order must be maintained at all times, and in all the rooms and halls of the Institution, and in all the intercourse of students with each other.
10. All students are required to retire regularly at the ringing of the bell designated for that purpose, as occasion may require; and to rise at the ringing of the morning bell, also designated.
11. Any room, occupied by students, will, at all times, be subject to the visitation of the Teachers of the Institution, who are required to see that the regulations are complied with.
12. Students will be required to keep their own rooms in good order, and to pay all unnecessary damages, either of rooms or of furniture furnished with the rooms.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

GOVERNMENT.

The Government of the students will be in the hands of the Principals, and will be strictly and steadily exercised, and at the same time, strictly parental. The object of our academic government being to secure the greatest possible amount of physical, intellectual, and moral good to the students themselves, regularity and order of exercises, and good and wholesome citizens to society. No unwarrantable means will be made use of to enforce the observance of the above regulations; yet our constant endeavor will be, to make the means resorted to as effective as humun means may be.

Parents who place their children in this Institution, and all students who are sufficiently old to understand the necessity of order, cannot be too well assured that the foregoing regulations form the most essential part of the contract between them and us; and that whatever student wantonly violates them, and shows himself incorrigibly determined on pursuing his waywardness, will be expelled from the privileges of the Institution, and will not be permitted to re-enter it again, without special proof of reformation. Nor will an expelled student have any deduction made from full term charges.

Farther, parents are requested not to place money for expenses, in the hands of students who are not old enough to use money with discretion and economy. Either of the Principals, or the Book-keeper of the Institution, will act as fiscal guardian of such students without charge.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

EXPENSES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Board, per term, | | from $14 50 to $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | | 1 50 |
| Washing, | | 2 50 |
| Fuel, | spring and fall, 75 cents; winter, | 1 50 |
| Tuition, | | from $3 50 to 5 00 |

LETTERS TO A YOUNG INQUIRER,

On the Necessity of adopting the Bible as the only Guide in making a Profession of Religion.

LETTER II.

My Dear Daughter,—I have been so much engaged of late, that I have not had leisure to sit down to write to you again, as you requested, on the important subject which through grace now so deeply interests you. Your letters afford your dear mother and myself unspeakable pleasure, and our spirits are drawn out continually in profound gratitude to our Heavenly Father, for the comfortable assurance of a well-grounded hope He has vouchsafed unto you. It is cause for devout gratitude and unceasing praises, for so great, so good, so unmerited an exhibition of sovereign mercy, in turning you from darkness to behold the glorious light of the blessed Gospel, and in speaking peace to your troubled mind.

To us—to all your friends—this change appears to be a genuine work of grace—pure, sovereign grace. Much of the religion, the professed religion, of the world, is, unfortunately, but the religion of man—the manufacture of man, and tends to and centers entirely in man and man-made systems. That is the natural tendency and the certain result of all such professions. The fountain impure, the streams are tainted—the foundation sandy, the building totters and falls. Every power has its own laws. The religion of "an arm of flesh" has its tendency and its end in man-service—in conforming to "the commandments of men." A religion from on high, on the same principle, must be in subjection to, and be controlled by the laws of grace. If, then, this change (which we trust and truly trust) is the genuine work of grace, you must, it is your bounden duty to, repel the devices of the evil one, in his insidious efforts to rivet the clogs of human systems on your free spirit, and place yourself in a position to derive all the benefits and all the permanent advantages it secures to every child born of the Spirit—namely, to understand all the relative laws of that mysterious, omnipotent Power, which has called you into newness of life. This is to be learned, and only learned, from the Author and Finisher of our faith, as declared unto us in his revealed Word—the code of His laws. They cannot be found in man; however good, however pure. Frailty is mingled with his purest intentions, and imperfection and perverseness tincture his best works. Were it not for this sad state of things, tradition would have been sufficient to carry out all the purposes of God our Father; but He being fully aware how weak and unstable would be his Truth committed to earthen vessels, to human guidance, found it actually necessary to engrave the law—the fundamental, the eternal law, of his kingdom, on tablets of stone, with his own finger; and, likewise, to have his "better covenant"—the Gospel—committed to writing, that it might be disseminated through all generations, to every nation, tongue, and kindred, and become the heir-loom of every family—that all might drink of the living waters of eternal life, pure from the Fountain, without any admixture of impurities, or contaminated by the poison of sect. Notwithstanding all this benevolence of design and guardian care, man, more ambitious of propagating his own fancies, than "the principles of the doctrine of Christ," has to a great degree left the Fountain of Truth, and has hewn out cisterns, broken cisterns, which can hold no water; and thus they do despite to the spirit of grace, and bring reproach on the cause they profess to espouse, and at the same time excite distrust in the whole system of revelation.

Last Sunday morning I went to hear ——, at his particular request, he having informed me, that he had written a sermon with unusual care, on religious education, in contrast with a mere secular education, or an education not imbued with Christian principles. I eagerly embraced the opportunity to attend, for, as my great ambition has been to give you a good education, I am now doubly interested in seeing that you have not only a good literary education, but a pure Biblical training also; therefore, the occasion opened deep interest to me, which I could not on any account lose; but to my utter astonishment, instead of being a sermon on religious education, it was a sermon on church education; and instead of appealing to the Scriptures to establish his positions, the Church Catechism, the Articles of Faith in the Prayer Book, the Homilies, and the Collects, were adduced!

In this way is the Gospel stream made turbid, and the Gospel trumpet made to give an uncertain sound; not only by the ——, but by almost all sects, who seek more to proselyte to their own "doxy" than to the glory of God; and it is thus that thousands, leaving the Fountain of Truth, to lean on "an arm of flesh," are suffered to become enveloped in "so great delusion as to believe lies."

Now, my dear child, that you may be delivered from this gross error, and escape that dreadful thraldom, I take up my pen, and, as opportunity may permit, will point out to you some of the rocks and shoals lying beneath a treacherous surface, on which you may founder and make shipwreck of your faith, if you are inveigled by the Arch Enemy, to leave the oracles of God, and can become so stupified by the letheon of name or party, as to prefer human systems to the unmutilated Truth of God. I do not assume that most persons design to entail error, and are purposely thus perverse; but herein lies the difficulty: Most persons, as soon as they experience the first monitions of grace, attach themselves to frail human teachers, and corrupt human systems. In this day, that is almost universally the case; and thus all the prejudices and all the bigotry, all the schisms and all the divisions, prevailing among professed Christians, are strengthened and perpetuated. This, emphatically so in the present age, has, to a great extent, thus obtained in every age of the church; and what should have been beacons to succeeding generations, (mankind being so prone to imitation, and so averse to investigation,) the systems of the "arm of flesh" are perpetuated century after century, until we have but few, comparatively, who make any preliminary investigations into "the principles of the doctrine of Christ," or have any purely scriptural foundation for their profession, but take all their profession, ther faith, and their practice, at second hands—at leaky, broken cisterns. Human nature is the same in all ages, and this frailty of human nature was seen to some extent even in the days of the Apostles, among the professed disciples—instead of adhering to the plain Truth, the unsophisticated truth, they attached themselves to men, and clung to party. There were the Paulites, the Apollians, and the Kephites—"some for Paul, some for Apollos, and some for Cephas"—which the Apostle Paul promptly repudiated and condemned. And thus it is, that mankind, in the present day, attach themselves to men and man-made systems; and thus it is they perpetuate heresies, schisms, and divisions. This evil has waxed stronger and stronger in every succeeding age. It is the rock on which myriads break and perish—leaving the Fountain of Living Waters, and hewing out cisterns, broken cisterns, which can hold no water.

I have not time, nor space, at present, to detail many of these evils, serious, grievous evils, growing out of this disloyalty to the "King of Kings"—from not seeking continually "the law at his mouth." I can glance but at one, in this communication—the prejudices it excites against the Word of Truth, when that word conflicts with their system of belief. Having once espoused a human standard, they force all truth, even the plainest and most explicit commandments of their Lord and Judge, to conform to that system—that confession of faith—that creed—that covenant—that discipline; and contort the clearest and most conclusive positions of Divine Truth, to sustain and subserve party interests. They put on party spectacles, and measure with a sectarian rule; that nothing can be seen, nor any thing be estimated, except as it is presented in the denominational mirror, and as it quadrates with the denominational plummet. So much is this the case, that those who are the most obnoxious to the charge, are some times constrained to admit it, though they do not forsake it; and thus much damage is done to Scriptural Truth by pertinacious adherence to church dogmas, imbibed from men without investigation. And what is the worst of the matter, they not only twist the truth to serve party purposes, but insist and persist in forcing their own crude prejudices on others. They condemn all other systems than their own, as false—unchurch all others who do not sing to their "doxy," and virtually erect the bed of Procustes, a tyrant who laid all persons that fell within his grasp on a bed exactly suited to himself, and if their length exceeded that of the bed, he cut off their limbs, and if they were shorter, he had them stretched to make them equal to it. Cruel and infamous as this may appear, the same is done, every day, in the so-called Christian Church.

My dear child, I wish you to avoid all these errors, and sore evils, and thereby avert much perturbation of spirit and much inconsistent deportment in your Christian walk through life. To do this, you must base all your principles on the foundation laid down in the Scriptures, and in the Scriptures only. To do this, you must make the Holy Scriptures the sole man of your counsel—the lamp to your feet, and the light to your path. Make it your constant, unprejudiced, prayerful study. And that you may not commit the too common error of bringing a sense to the Scriptures, (the sense a particular church entertains,) but take a sense from the Inspired Word, and be influenced by it, is my great design in thus admonishing you at this time, when you may be disposed to embrace the views of others, whose Christian deportment you may highly and justly venerate, and whose whole profession you may regard as founded on truth. The Scripture is the only basis of revealed truth; but as that truth is differently interpreted—nay, contorted and perverted—every one professing to have tasted of the goodness of the Lord, ought to turn to Him, read thoroughly, and diligently digest, His revealed Word; first to come to an understanding of "the principles of the doctrine of Christ" before they think of looking at it to devise a system of theology or establish a church connection—of attaching themselves to a particular system and a particular interest—putting on the sectarian spectacles of any church. After having studied it as a system of principles and science, and having become deeply imbued with its most prominent principles—love and obedience—then, and not till then, are we prepared to estimate its requirements. How absurd would it be for a person, who has never studied Natural Philosophy, or Astronomy, on taking up a treatise on either of these sciences, to adopt one of the numerous theories of the populace, from mere hearsay, or from the influence of party disciples, and make that theory the basis of all the rationale of obscure phenomena, before he is prepared to test its truth. Religion, or rather the religious systems of men, have their theories—churches have their theories, and oft-times conflicting theories, which, as a church member, you are obliged to espouse and maintain; and these theories are as various as their systems are diversified; and some times are as false as they are opposite. You, therefore, see, that it would be just as absurd, nay, much more so, for any to attach themselves to any human theory of religion, or church interpretation of the Scriptures, in advance of having examined them thoroughly for yourself. It is the very way to wed a bundle of prejudices. Satan could not devise or desire a better invention to drive scriptural truths out of the world, divide the flocks, and perpetuate error and schism. I do not desire that any one, even my dear child, should embrace my predilections, my tested principles, unless they should find them to be true—founded and grounded on the truth—from a faithful and unbiased examination of the Scriptures; much less do I desire you to embrace the errors and prejudices of others, however good and specious may be their systems, without putting them to the severest scriptural scrutiny. The last office I should ever undertake, is to dictate or impose a system of religious belief upon any being. That is a matter between each individual and his Maker. My duty is to advertise you of errors. It is for you to examine the Sacred Oracles in reference to them—to prove all things, and be fully persuaded in your own mind. You are not amenable to me—the Word is to judge you in the last day. The admonition from on high is: "Buy the truth, and sell it not." To the Word of Truth, and to the Church of the Living God therein revealed, and which can only be found therein, I wish to direct you. Seek His mind and His will, in that revealed Word. First imbue your spirit deeply, by prayer and meditation, looking to the Head of the Church for wisdom to discern the truth, and cherish a willing, obedient, plastic disposition, to be moulded by His truth—with pure love and perfect obedience to the will of the Master, and with a firm determination to have Him, and Him alone, to rule over you, and you will be safe—founded and reared on the Rock of Ages. After you have attained to that great eminence—that desirable "standing point," then, and not till then, can you be prepared to ask, understandingly, "Lord, what wilt thou have me to do?" But until you attain to that grace, you cannot escape being burdened with the errors of tradition and heresy, sown thick and deep, in the professing church. When this has been fully attained, and you have read the Scriptures with an eye single to this end—namely, to learn love and obedience—then you may commence a second examination, to discover what duties it imposes upon you. More on that point hereafter.

Your affectionate Father.

GOD IS HERE!

Kneel my child, for God is here!
Bend in love, but not in fear;
Kneel before him now in prayer;
Thank him for his constant care;
Praise him for his bounties shed
Every moment on thy head;
Ask for light to know his will;
Ask for love thy heart to fill;
Ask for faith to bear thee on,
Through the might of Christ, his Son:
Ask his Spirit still to guide thee
Through the ills that may betide thee;
Ask for peace to lull to rest
Every tumult of thy breast;
Ask in awe, but not in fear;
Kneel, my child, for God is here!

SERAMPORE MISSION.

We find in the Misssonary Hearld, the organ of the English Baptist Missionary Society, a letter from Mr. Denham, at Serampore. For the picture which it presents of the mode of conducting the out-door work of the mission, and the view which it gives of the difficulties that meet the missionary there, it will be perused with deep interest. It seems that the missionaries of infidelity have not been slack in their work.

"Our out-door work has been followed up lately without interruption, and I trust with God's blessing. We have had many interesting and stormy interviews with the people in the surrounding villages. The other evening, myself and two young men went to a village a few miles up the river. As we were strangers, we made our way through a number of trees to the road which led to the bazaar, looking for a place and an opportunity to speak. We moved slowly on, looking at the articles exposed for sale. A respectable man standing at the door of one of the native shops, said to me, "Are you in want of any one, sahid?" "Why do you ask?" said I. "Because yonder is the magistrate's house," replied he. "I do not want the magistrate, I want you!" "Me!" "Yes, you." After a few preliminaries, we began to open the great question. He called for a seat to be brought for me, and a host of people came around; nor did we leave until the night had set in upon us. It was a very interesting evening. Jesus and his great salvation was explained to them, and the attention and the questions put to us were more than ordinarily encouraging. Do you ask, is it always so? Indeed it is not! We sometimes meet with great opposition, especially from the brahmans and the conceited young men, students at the Government colleges and schools. For you must know the Bible is excluded, and the masters forbidden to speak of Jesus and Christianity in Government schools. These young men at times give us a great deal of trouble.

Take the following as a specimen. At another village, called Chattra, in the neighborhood of Serampore, myself, and a good young man, one of the college students, met with a number of these under affecting circumstances. We had left our boat and ascended the ghat steps, where a young female, apparently about twenty-two years of age, was laid to die; her aged mother, her brother, and a brahman, repeating the muntras before her. I went towards her, and looked at her haggard countenance and sunken eyes, but she turned from me. I asked her mother what was her disease, and why she was placed there in the evening air on the damp ground?

"We have brought her here to die," pointing to the river, "Gunga is holy—this is our custom; she will go to heaven."

"She is very ill," said I, "but she is a young woman, and may recover."

Taking her hand, I said,

"She has no fever, her pulse is good; with proper treatment she would recover."

The wretched beings around her, the brahmans, of whom by that time there were several, began to murmur.

"She cannot live," said they.

"No, not if you place her here. Is this your religion? Would you treat a dog as you are treating this poor woman? Remember, it is not the less murder because it is your custom."

A crowd now assembled, and discussion commenced in real earnest. Many listened with great attention, and owned that they should be glad to see many such barbarous customs swept away. Seeing we were gaining ground with the common people, two or three Hindoo college students began to question us, quoting Paine's Age of Reason, for infidel Europeans have put these books in circulation among the native youth. My Hindoo friend was speaking, and I perceived they would puzzle him. I therefore re-commenced, met the question, and did not spare them.

"I have another question or two," said one of the students. "You have said your sacred books correspond with the principles of modern science; you will allow me to test their accuracy. If the principles of the Newtonian philosophy be correct, the stars are centres of systems like our own, fixed, revolving on their axis in the heavens; but the opening of your book contradicts those well-sustained mathematical facts. How am I to understand the astronomical phenomena of the second chapter of Matthew's gospel?"

It is true we do not often meet with questions like these, still it may serve to show you what at times we were called to contend against in the market-place, and which we must answer, or be laughed down.

"Where are you studying?" said I.

"At the Hindoo college."

"What books are your astronomical text-books? Herschell? Mrs. Somerville?"

"We have read Herchell's Introduction," said they.

"Have you a copy of Herschell at home?"

"No."

"Will any of you call on me to-morrow; you know me—you know where I live? I will convince you that there is no inconsistency here, and give you a table of similar stars, so that I think you will never ask that question again. But that you may not think I wish to evade your inquiry, I will make it as plain and simple as I can."

I then quoted in substance Herschell's words, chapter 12, sections 593 to 598. The tables were now turned. They had put a weapon into our hands, and we showed them that we knew how to use it. The admission was made in the presence of the people, that the objection had no force against the gospel. The students were silenced, and with the people listened quietly, received books, and begged us to come again. As we returned, we looked at the poor woman, and spoke to those about her. But the brahmans are a hardened class. The fee is all they care about. At midnight, no doubt, she was put into the river, or burned. These things may shock you; alas, they are too common about us. Not a week passes but they occur. Remember that these people are British subjects equally with ourselves.

TIMELY INTERPOSITION.

Dr. Waugh was exceedingly kind to, and was always accessible by, young men studying for the ministry; and by them he was beloved to a degree amounting almost to a species of idolatry.

When any one was about to be examined by ministers, as to his progress in his studies at either of the Dissenting Theological Institutions in the neighborhood of the metropolis, he was delighted beyond measure when he ascertained that Dr. W. was to be present. And well the student might, on such occasions, wish the presence of the Doctor; for he had in many instances interposed with effect on their behalf, when treated with unnecessary roughness by others. No man, perhaps, was more rigid and severe, I should indeed say positively cruel, in his examination of the students of divinity, than the late Rev. Matthew Wilkes. On one occasion, four or five years previous to Dr. Waugh's death, he had badgered and brow-beaten a young man to such a degree, that he was scarcely able to answer the plainest question. "Man," said Mr. Wilkes, "you'll never be fit for the ministry. You seem to know nothing at all. Can you tell me the difference between Moses and me?" "Hoot, toot, Mr. Wilkes," interposed Dr. Waugh, unable any longer to remain a silent spectator of such harsh treatment; "Hoot, toot, Mr. Wilkes, ye should na' put such a question as that to the lad; but, if ye like, I'll tell ye the difference between Moses and you: Moses was the meekest of men."

The answer was felicitous in the highest degree; all present, except Mr. Wilkes, enjoyed the witticism. Mr. Wilkes put no farther questions to the young man; and those which others put were answered in a very satisfactory manner.

REVISION OF THE CHINESE SCRIPTURES.

It will be remembered, says Dr. Macgowan, that at a series of meetings held at Hongkong, about four years ago, in which all the missions in China were represented, arrangements were made for a new revision of the Sacred Scriptures. In accordance with the original design, Committees are now in session at Shanghai, to compare their labors and to decide on controverted points. Owing to this circumstance we met with missionaries from the southern ports, who had been for several months at the still unfinished work of revising. An unhappy difference of opinion exists as to the proper term for Theos. The word Shangte, which literally means a Supreme Ruler, the designation of an idol, finds an uncompromising advocate in Dr. Medhurst and his colleagues. On the other hand, all the other missionaries to the Chinese, to a man, object to Shangte as the name by which the one true and living God shall be known in China. At Ningpo no missionary under any circumstances would be willing to use this term for the sacred name of God. Formerly some of them spoke to the people of Shangte as the Creator of the world; they were told, "Oh, we have a Shangte—more than one of them;" and it was found impossible to give an explanation which they could understand. It is much the same as if the early Christians had borrowed Jupiter as the name for God. The term which the majority prefer is Shinge, a god or spirit. It is generally used in a low sense, and, perhaps, has other serious objections, but it is unquestionably the best, and must eventually prevail. Anxious to see the Chinese in possession of a translation of the Bible, which might be regarded as a standard, the Baptists united with their Pedobaptist brethren in the original plans for the proposed revision; but as it was evident that no other term than "washing ceremony" would be employed by our friends to express bapto, and as we could agree to no word which would not clearly signify immersion, it was thought best that each should pursue an independent course and bring out separate versions. It seems likely that the Pedobaptists will have two versions, differing, however, only in the term for God.

PLOUGHING AND SOWING IN THE EAST.

Ploughing.—Of late years much light has been thrown upon the agricultural operations and implements of ancient times, by the discovery of various representations on the sculptured monuments and painted tombs of Egypt. As these agree surprisingly with the notices in the Bible, and, indeed, differ little from what is still employed in Syria and Egypt, it is very safe to receive the instruction which they offer. This has always been a light and superficial operation in the East. At first the ground was opened with pointed sticks; then a kind of hoe was employed, and this, in many parts of the world, is still the substitute for a plough. But the plough was known in Egypt and Syria before the Hebrews became cultivators. (Job i. 14.) In the East, however, it has always been a light and superficial implement. At first it was little more than a stout branch of a tree, from which projected another limb, shortened and pointed; this being turned into the ground made the furrows, while at the farther end of the larger branch was fastened a transverse yoke, to which the oxen were harnessed. Afterwards a handle to guide the plough was added. Thus the plough consisted of—1, the pole; 2, the point, or share; 3, the handle; 4, the yoke. The Syrian plough is, and doubtless was, light enough for a man to carry with one hand; it was drawn by oxen, which were sometimes urged by a scourge, (Isaiah x. 26; Nahum iii. 2,) but oftener by a long staff, furnished at one end with a flat piece of metal for clearing the plough, and at the other with a spike for goading the oxen; this ox-goad might be easily used as a spear. (Judges iii. 31; Samuel xiii. 21.) Sometimes men followed the plough with hoes to break the clods: (Isaiah xxviii. 24,) but in later times a kind of hammer was employed, which appears to have been then, as now, merely a thick block of wood, pressed down by a weight, or by a man sitting on it, and drawn over the plough-field.

Sowing.—The ground having been ploughed as soon as the autumnal rains had modified the soil, was fit, by the end of October, to receive the seed; and the sowing of wheat continued, in different situations, through November and into December. Barley was not generally sown till January and February. The seed appears to have been sown and harrowed at the same time; although it was sometimes ploughed in by a cross furrow. The Egyptian paintings illustrate the scriptures by showing that the sower held the seed in a basket with one hand, and scattered it with the other, while another person filled a fresh basket. We also see that the mode was what we call "broadcast," in which the seed is thrown loosely over the field. Mat. xiii. 3, 8.

RELIGIOUS NEWSPAPERS.

A correspondent of the Christian Chronicle thus discourses on the subject:—

"As religious papers are made up now-a-days, every family may, in the course of a year, find something that is worth to them ten times the amount of their subscription, and consequently they are made richer by the knowledge which such a paper has imparted to them. Nor is the spiritual benefit derived from it of less importance. It comes to them glowing with thrilling instructions, teaching the science of living well, and of happy dying, and encouraging them to be zealously affected always in a good cause. It comes to them with good news from a far country—telling them of the triumphs of the Redeemer's Cause, which to the child of God is as waters from deep mountain wells to thirsty souls. And finally, there is something to please and instruct the minds of all classes, ages, and conditions.

"I do not envy that family's prosperity, nor highly prize their piety, who do not feel enough interest in a religious paper to take and pay for it—especially if they can afford to take a secular paper. And yet I doubt not that many families can be found—and professedly religious too—who take from one to four secular papers, and yet give not a copper to sustain a religious paper. Shame on such worldly-minded Christians! They can never be better than mere dwarfs in religion."

Changes in Man's Life.—About five years ago, says a Philadelphia paper, we saw a man light his cigar with a twenty-dollar note of the Farmer's and Mechanic's Bank. At that time he was full of life, and in the possession of real estate in the city of Philadelphia valued at $80,000. Alas! what changes doth Time make—on Saturday last this foolish man was seen begging alms in our public streets. He looked wretched, was ghastly pale, and miserably clad.

CHEAP POSTAGE.

It is less than three years since our Government ventured upon the experiment of reducing the rates of postage. The result, thus far, has been quite as favorable as the most sanguine friends of the measure anticipated. According to the Report of the Postmaster General, presented to Congress last week, the income of the Department is now equal to its expenses, notwithstanding the vast amount of matter carried without charge. If barely reducing the rates of postage about one-half, and partially abolishing the franking privilege, has increased the amount of business so as to enable the Department to pay all expenses, and leave a surplus on hand, instead of drawing from the public treasury as heretofore, what might we not expect if the rates were still more reduced, and the franking privilege entirely abolished? Facts developed in this and other countries, prove beyond doubt, that a much greater reduction than has yet been made, would be perfectly safe, and indeed highly politic. It is nearly nine years since the English government reduced postage throughout the country to a uniform rate of about two cents; and although the measure was opposed at the outset, there is not now a man in the realm who denies its advantages, or would on any consideration favor a return to the old system. Such, we have every reason to believe, would be the effect of a thorough reduction of postage in this country. At any rate the experiment ought to be tried.

The people are nearly all in favor of cheap postage and the abolition of the franking privilege. Only the politicians, who know the facilities they have heretofore enjoyed from a free use of the mails, oppose it. Just as soon as the people take the matter in hand, and make their real wishes known, we shall have what deserves to be called "cheap postage." Let them not delay, then, to express their wishes, and to insist upon their being granted.

The objection usually urged to reducing our postage to the standard adopted in England, is altogether an economical one, and one which will not stand the test of examination. We are told that the length of our mail-routes, and the spareseness of our population, would never allow us to carry the mails so cheap as they can be carried in England. But figures show that the annual expense of our Post-Office Department is less than that of Great Britain by nearly a million of dollars—this difference being occasioned, to a considerable extent, by the great simplicity and economy with which our public service is performed when compared with the English. There is little room to doubt, therefore, that by abolishing the franking privilege, our letter postage might be reduced to the standard adopted in England, and still enable the Post-Office Department to support itself. But even if it should require some assistance for a few years, what would that be in comparison with the advantages which would be secured by the cheap postage system.

SUNDAY LAWS—SWEDISH AND AMERICAN.

"The clergy in the General Diet of Sweden, have proposed to insert the following clauses in the penal code now under discussion:—1. Any person declaring hatred to God, or blaspheming His holy Word and Sacraments, shall be punished with imprisonment and hard labor for life. 2. Any person turning into ridicule Divine service, or any act of worship whatsoever, shall be punished with five years' imprisonment at least, and a fine proportioned to his means. 3. Any person abjuring the orthodox Evangelical faith, or inducing others to do so, or propagating heresies, shall be condemned to perpetual exile, and lose all civil, political, and social rights. 4. Any person partaking of the communion without confession, or in spite of ministerial prohibition, shall pay a heavy fine, and be imprisoned for a period proportioned to the gravity of the case. 5. Every species of labor is forbidden on Saint's days and Sundays, from six o'clock in the morning till nine at night, except in cases of urgent necessity. During this period, shops must be closed, and no sales can be made. The penalty for every infraction of this regulation shall be a fine or imprisonment. 6. If any one commits any crime or offence on a Sunday or a Saint's day, or on the day on which he has communed, that circumstance shall be considered as an aggravation, and shall involve an augmentation of the penalty by one degree."

☞ The above paragraph is going the rounds, and some of the editors who have copied it express surprise that the propositions it contains should be made in this day of civil reform and religious freedom. If their eyes were half open to the strange things of a similar character which are now taking place in this country, they would perhaps be less surprised. When Puritanism was in the ascendant, many States of this Union were abundantly provided with laws very like those which are here proposed; and according to them, men were punished for blasphemy, heresy, and Sunday-desecration, precisely as the General Diet of Sweden would have them punished. But in process of time, the multiplication of religious sects, and the dissemination of better views in relation to religious liberty, rendered these laws comparatively inoperative. Still some of them were allowed to remain on the statute books, and were occasionally enforced, when their enforcement would promote a sectarian end, or gratify a revengeful disposition. Recently, however, a formidable attempt has been made to revive one of those laws, and enforce it in all its rigor, wherever suitable tools can be found. Old statutes against labor on Sunday, which have been a dead letter so long that almost every body had forgotten their existence, are disinterred, and made the instruments of persecuting upright and conscientious men. And this under the cloak of religion, and in a land which makes greater boasts of religion and religious freedom than any other land in the world! Would it not be well, in such circumstances, for those who express surprise at what is transpiring in Sweden, to open their eyes upon what is transpiring in their own country—here at home? They might thus see something to modify their surprise, and perhaps to check their unreasonable boasting over others.

There is one feature of this proposition of the Swedish Diet, which we commend to the special attention of such advocates of our Sunday laws as desire to be consistent with themselves, if they are not with the Scriptures; and that is, that it puts Sundays and Saint's days on a level. It is well known, to those who have thoroughly investigated the subject, that the early ecclesiastical and civil laws for enforcing the observance of Sunday, very generally enforced the observance of Saint's days also. Now, unaccountable as it may seem, it is nevertheless true, that some of the most strenuous modern advocates of Sundays are notorious for their hatred of Saint's days; and while they would enforce by law the keeping of the Sundays, they would not on any condition keep a Saint's day, but would prefer, if any thing is done in the case, to have their desecration enforced! It strikes us, that if they must enforce by law the keeping of Sundays, they would better manifest their consistency by enforcing in the same way the keeping of Saint's days also.

HOME MISSIONS.

The prosperity and success of the different denominations of Christians in America and other lands, depend much upon the interest they take in home or domestic missions. Only about twenty-five years have elapsed since the Seventh-day Baptists commenced missionary operations, in sending the gospel to their scattered brethren in the West. The result has been all that we could have expected from the money appropriated and the labor bestowed. For a few years past, but little has been done in this department of labor; not for want of means, for they are daily increasing, but our attention has been directed to other channels of Christian enterprise, and by neglecting this we have done wrong and injured ourselves. The foreign mission is an enterprise that demands our attention, and by engaging in that work we have done only what we ought. But we may be assured, that our foreign mission will not continue long to live and prosper, unless we pay proper attention to our churches at home. Who ever knew a stream to rise higher than its fountain? In our churches at home, our foreign missionaries are to be raised and qualified for the field. Literary attainments, and a speculative knowledge of theology, will never qualify them for the work of saving souls. They must be men of piety, burning zeal, and an ardent temperament, to be successful in the work. And where can such men be found? Not in our large, wealthy, fashionable churches, but in the little flocks, who labor to maintain an existence, and in so doing learn that God's church is not a place for rich drones, but a vineyard where all must labor. The largest proportion of our active churches now in existence, are indebted to the labor of missionaries in years past for their present strength and prosperity. The foreign mission must be sustained by the churches at home; hence there must be an increase of strength and zeal for this work. Some of the feeble churches must depend for their prosperity upon the home mission, and by this instrumentality others are to be raised up in our Western States.

We cannot expect the foreign mission to prosper, unless piety is maintained in our churches at home; and piety will produce corresponding fruits. Pretended love, zeal, prayers, and upright deportment, will all be powerless, unless we can feel for the perishing around us, and do for their rescue according as God has prospered us. Covetousness brings upon the church a withering curse. A covetous member in the church is an Achan in the camp. No members of the church should be allowed to let the year pass without doing some thing to maintain the institutions of the church; and, as to the amount, let them be their own judges, remembering always, that "he that sows bountifully shall reap bountifully."

We have young men and women among us, who are desirous at some future day to engage in a foreign mission. But who is there ready and willing to go out in this land, and hunt up the scattered sheep in the wilderness, and gather them into the fold? This work must be done. God requires it at our hands. It is not enough that we sustain those who are now there, but we must "pray the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest." The field is large. This land of the Pilgrims is our parish. God has promised it to his Son for an inheritance, and the uttermost parts of the earth for his possession; and with him we are heirs, and joint heirs. A little leaven of God's truth may be found in all the Western States and Territories; and will these young men, who have felt the word of God like fire shut up in their bones, linger around the school-rooms, the work-shops, or the farms, trying thus to appease conscience, and neglect to go out and gather in the ripening harvest? Would to God they were aroused, and constrained to take their knapsacks, and their staves if need be, and turn their backs upon the places of their childhood, and thus willingly range the valleys, ascend the mountains, and face the pelting storm, to win a bride to Christ. The lack is in the churches. For the increase of faithful laborers, let us pray, and consecrate ourselves, yes, our all, to this important work. Whenever we are ready, the means will be furnished to our hands. God will never suffer the church to go beyond himself.

We have sent missionaries into different parts of the West in years past, but their labor has been more as travelers on an exploring expedition, than as permanent missionaries. Though their labor has been blessed, and they have done much good, yet more would doubtless have been accomplished could they have remained as permanent, established missionaries. Brother Davison has gone, having the confidence of the churches, expecting to live and identify himself with the people of the West, and from his labors we hope for much good.

LETTERS FROM ILLINOIS—NO. 1.

SOUTHPORT, Peoria Co., Illinois,
21st of 11th mo., 1848.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

As I have been little more than two weeks in the State of Illinois, I suppose it is time to let my brethren know my whereabouts and intentions. At present, I can only give them a general outline of my impressions, and information respecting the prospects of the mission, and the advantages this part of the State offers for emigrants, as I purpose to write nothing but sober truth, and that obtained from the best sources of information within my reach. Although I have met with fewer adventures than happen to some western travelers, I have seen a thousand things to animate and interest me. I have rode through as fine sections of country here as the sun ever shone upon, and been delighted with the sight of smiling farms, rich with the sear crop of ungathered corn, and the green and promising crop of wheat covering all the ground like a beautiful meadow in spring, some fields of which contain one hundred and more acres. I speak the sober truth, when I say, I never have seen a country in my life where I felt more at home than since I have been a sojourner on these Illinois prairies. It seems to me that there is almost every thing here to make me like the country, except the want of Seventh-day Baptist churches; and I think there is a good prospect of having these soon. I had very strong prepossessions in favor of Iowa and Wisconsin when I first landed in Illinois; but I see so many advantages here over what can be had there, that I have decided to remain in this part of the country. My reasons will appear, if the Lord permit, in future letters addressed to the Sabbath Recorder. Meanwhile, if any of our friends wish to correspond with me, they can address me, post-paid, at Farmington, Fulton Co., Ill. There is a mail from Peoria to that place three times a week—i. e., on second, fourth, and sixth days; and returns on third, fifth, and seventh days. The charge for a passenger is one dollar each way.

For the information of any young men who may wish to come to this section, I will say, that such can come at any time that suits them. Inquire for Dennis Saunders, and some of us will immediately find them a home. A nephew of mine came in last week, and in three days after his arrival three different persons offered him work at ten dollars per month and found; another gentleman offered him eleven dollars per month and found; and another offered him the use of a team to gather his corn, and would give him every eighth bushel for his wages. In Peoria shelled corn is worth 20 cents per bushel. If any families wish to come, it would be well to inform us some time beforehand, as it is difficult to find house-room; but we can erect a shanty for them with a little notice, and we are willing to do all in our power thus to accommodate them. Improved land can be hired for the season in any quantity. The usual terms are, the tenant has two-thirds of the crop, and the landlord one-third. I would recommend this way to immigrant farmers the first season, and then they may look out and buy to suit themselves. All kinds of mechanics are in great demand. I wish to remove my family to Farmington as soon as the state of the rivers will make it prudent. Many particulars respecting these things must be reserved to future letters.

I find abundant field for gospel labor. I have preached every Sabbath day, and every first day, since I have been here, and on some other occasions, and I expect to do so through the winter. The first Sabbath we had twenty persons, all Sabbath-keepers; the next Sabbath twenty-four, all Sabbath-keepers. Within Fulton and Peoria counties, I believe there are twelve families of Sabbath-keepers, several unmarried men, and two or three females in first-day families, who likewise keep the Sabbath. And I am told that there are several first-day people who hold opinions very favorable to our people. Indeed, I have become acquainted with one or two such persons. Then I am informed of several families who have determined to come here next season. I have not seen a resident of these two counties sick since I have been here; more blooming health, in children, adults, and old people, I have never seen in any country. Nor do I see any thing in the nature of the country to it make otherwise. My own health and vigor has sensibly improved since I have been here. The climate appears to me exactly like that between Trenton and New Brunswick in New Jersey. On the whole, I am convinced that in no part of the west can the Missionary Association lay out its efforts to more advantage than here. I am sanguine in my expectations of gathering a large church here in a few years. Illinois will have as rich a population as the United States can have in any other agricultural district of the same extent. I have not found a man, woman, or child, in these two counties, who wishes to leave this part of the country. There are those who wish to change their locations, but I believe in every instance it is to take up some more advantageous situation, which they think they have discovered since they chose their present location. With the ordinary blessing of Divine Providence, and the common favors of our Redeemer towards the churches gathered in his name, I think that but two or three years of help to us will enable us to raise an interest here that will not only support itself, but be able to aid other interests that I trust will arise.

S. D.

THE CALIFORNIA MISSIONARIES.—We have already announced the sailing of the steamship Falcon for California, with a company of missionaries on board. Two of these missionaries are from the American Home Mission Society, one from the American Baptist Home Mission Society, and one from the Presbyterian Board. They go first to Chagres by steam, about 2,500 miles; thence across the Isthmus of Panama, 36 miles; and then take the steamship California to San Francisco, 3,500 miles. The distance from N. Y. to S. Francisco, across the country, is about 3000 miles. But the difficulties and hardships of the journey are such as few wish to encounter. Hence the longer route is preferred. A year and a half ago, a missionary destined for Oregon, sailed in a ship for the Sandwich Islands, and thence by a chance vessel to his field of labor. Now he might go all the way by steam, or, if in a hurry, might steam it to Chagres, cross the Isthmus of Panama 36 miles, and thence steam it to Oregon. California is now only about thirty days distance from New York.

CHURCHES AND SUNDAYS AT THE WEST.—A correspondent of the New York Recorder, writing from Indiana, makes the following suggestion relative to the Baptist churches at the West, which certainly deserves serious consideration:—

"The ratio of Baptists to the population in this State, is more than twice as great as in Ohio. They have too many churches in Indiana, and too FEW Sabbaths—661 churches, gives one for every seven miles square in the State; but oh, how feeble, and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked, they will remain, until they remember every Sabbath day to keep it holy. Monthly Sabbaths are a curse to Western churches."

A MISSION CHURCH.—Mr. Lord, Baptist missionary at Ningpo, China, writes under date of Oct., 31st, 1847: "Had a meeting to-day for the purpose of organizing ourselves into a Christian church. After a short religious exercise, a part of which was occupied in remarks upon the nature and design of such an institution, we set our names, (four of us) to the articles and covenant which had been previously prepared. We then proceeded to celebrate the ordinance of the Lord's Supper. The occasion was one of deep and solemn interest, and I trust also it was one of profit to us all."

BRITISH PERIODICAL LITERATURE.—Under this head our readers will find in another column the advertisement of Leonard Scott & Co.'s Republications. All the works included in their list are of a sterling character, and too well known to need recommendation. They are issued in a style, and with a degree of promptness, which merits great praise. Now is the time to subscribe for them, and so commence with the new year.

WOODWORTH'S YOUTH'S CABINET for January is just published, and is really a beautiful number. It opens with a highly-finished steel vignette—The Child and her Pet Fawn. Then follow thirty-two pages of matter, well adapted to please and instruct the young. For the curiosity of the thing, we have counted the engravings, and find that they number twenty-one, some of which are very good. Publication office, 135 Nassau-st.

"THE INDEPENDENT," is the title of a large and well-printed weekly paper just started in New York to advocate the principle of congregational independence. Its editors are Leonard Bacon, Joseph P. Thompson, and R. S. Storrs, Jr., all distinguished Congregational ministers. Joshua Leavitt (formerly of the Emancipator) is also connected with it. Published for the Proprietors, by S. W. Benedict, at $2 50 per year, in advance.

A temperance lecturer in New York recently said that $40,000 was expended for liquor in that city every Sunday.

THE INDIAN TRIBES.

The following passage from the Report of the Secretary of War, show what the whites have been doing for the Indians in times past, and what the Indians are now doing for themselves. Only think of its being necessary to remove the poor red man from the neighborhood of the whites in order to enforce the necessary measures for his civilization and improvement!

"The removal of the Indians across to the country set apart for them west of the Mississippi River, has separated nearly all those who resided within the limits of the States from the unwholesome influences resulting from a contact with the white population, and afforded the Government an opportunity to enforce the necessary measures for civilizing and improving them."

"The Law of 1847, giving additional authority to prevent the introduction and sale of spirituous liquors in the Indian country, and the stringent regulations adopted by the Department to suppress this pernicious traffic, has sensibly diminished the amount of suffering among the frontier tribes arising from that prolific source of evil; but an effectual check to it cannot be applied unless the States lying adjacent to the Indian country coöperate in the measure, by restraining their citizens from bringing intoxicating liquors within reach of the Indians."

"Among most of the tribes which have removed to and become settled in the Indian country, the blessings of education are beginning to be appreciated, and they generally manifest a willingness to coöperate with the Government in the diffusion of those blessings. The schools already established have an increased number of pupils, and preparations are making for establishing many new ones. Much credit is due to many excellent missionary societies of different Christian denominations for their aid and contributions to sustain and advance the cause of education among the Indians.

"There are sixteen manual labor schools and eighty-seven boarding and district schools now in successful operation among the various Indian tribes, and the number of Indian youth attending them, according to the reports received at the Department, is 3,682—of which 2,650 are males, and the remaining 1,032 are females. The schools are generally in charge of missionary societies, and are well conducted."

CHEAP POSTAGE—POSTMASTER GENERAL'S REPORT.

The leading features of the Postmaster General's Report may be learned from the abstract of the President's Message which we place on our fourth page. There are, also, various suggestions relative to the working of the cheap postage system, and the best manner of carrying it out in future, which will be interesting to the whole people, and are therefore copied. After setting forth at length the doctrine, that the income of the Department ought to be made to meet its expenses, and that the only way to get at this will be to compare the whole revenue with the whole expense, and adopt such a rate of postage as experience shows to be enough to make the one meet the other, the Report says:—

Prior to the passage of the act of 1845, the rates of postage on letters were adjusted according to the number of pieces, making each one a single letter, and different sums paid, according to the distance they were conveyed, as if that was the principal element in estimating the cost. The principle was not entirely abandoned by the act of 1845, though much simplified and improved; while charging by the piece is entirely surrendered, and the more just and equitable mode, by weight, substituted. Experience proved that the rates, prior to the passage of that act, were too high for the purposes of revenue. For a series of years prior to that time, the expenditures regularly exceeded the income, exhibiting an annual average deficiency of about $125,000 for the eight years preceding the passage of the act. These deficiencies occurred while the transportation gradually diminished, within the last four or five years, about 12,000 miles in extent; so that, if the high rates of postage had been continued, the service must have been greatly diminished, or large sums of money drawn annually from the Treasury for its use. * * *

The act of 1845 reduced the rates of postage more than one-half, and substituted the half ounce for a single letter, in lieu of the single piece of paper.

At the close of the first year, 30th June, 1846, the deficiency proved much less than was expected, only amounting to $597,098, and at the end of the second year only to $25,417, while at the end of the third year there was found a surplus of $172,232 beyond the proper expenses of the year, notwithstanding the very great increase in the service in each of the years. This was caused not only by an increase in the revenue, but by a reduction of the expenditures nearly equaling the increase. That, however, exceeded the expectation of the friends of the act.

The increased business in the offices, and the improvement of the revenue under the present rates of postage, leads to the conclusion, that the ten-cent rate may be dispensed with at the close of the present year, if such other modifications of that act as have been suggested in my former reports should be adopted.

* * * *

For the purpose of taxation, the matter conveyed in the mails should be classified as follows:—

First.—Letter postage should embrace all written communications, under seal or not, and each sealed packet or package. This class is composed of private confidential communications, often containing articles of value, partaking more of individual than public interest, requiring more care in their preservation, more labor in stamping, packing, and enveloping, than printed matter, and are always forwarded under lock and key; and should, therefore, be charged at a higher rate. A uniform rate of five cents, for each half ounce or fraction under, and another rate for each additional half ounce or fraction under, would be as low as they could be made consistently.

Second.—Newspapers. This class has always been esteemed of so much importance to the public, as the best means of disseminating intelligence generally among the people, that the lowest rate has always been applied for the purpose of encouraging their circulation. Heretofore, the charge has been made upon each paper, without regard to weight, which is unjust to the publishers, as well as the public; and there is no satisfactory reason why they should not be charged by weight, as well as letters and other sealed packages. This would lead to a discontinuance of the practice of depositing newspapers in the mails before they are dry, which renders them more liable to injury, and their weight is greatly increased from the dampness of the paper. A uniform rate of one cent upon each ounce or fraction under it, would be more just, and probably yield as much revenue as the present rates.

Third.—All other printed matter, of whatever nature or kind, should be rated with double newspaper postage. Letters containing articles of value, upon the application of the writer, should be registered, and a receipt taken for the delivery, and triple letter postage charged. * * * *

If the proposed reductions are to be made, and the Department required to sustain itself, it is indispensable that the franking privilege should be abolished. It is now greater and more exclusively used than at any former period; and as the privilege is enlarged, the abuses under it increase. The immense mass of free matter sent through the mails necessarily requires a higher and more expensive grade of service, to enable the contractors to transport it. It is not unusual for coach service to be demanded, on routes yielding comparatively nothing, for the transportation of public documents and other free matter. Over one route a double daily line of four-horse post-coaches has become indispensable. Some estimate may be formed of the additional expense of transportation from the fact, reported from the city Post Office, that in seven days, from the 6th until the 12th day of August last, inclusive, 450 bags of free matter, weighing 35,550 pounds, averaging daily 5,078 pounds, passed through this office.

Upon inquiry, it appears that, between the 1st of December and the 1st of October last, there were sent from the two houses of Congress, through the mails, about five millions of copies of speeches and other matter, weighing under two ounces, and about one hundred and seventy-seven thousand public documents, beside the letters written by the Members of the House of Representatives; and there remained to be forwarded more than one-half of the public documents ordered to be printed at the last session. Such a mass of matter thrown upon the mails must necessarily add to the cost of transportation, retard the progress of the mails, and produce a great proportion of the failures that are made on the unimproved routes in the newer sections of the country.

[Whether the suggestions for the modification of the law of 1845 be adopted or not, the Postmaster General thinks all matter sent through the mails should be prepaid, and this view he argues at considerable length.]

THE GOLD FEVER.—Marvelous stories are told of the abundance of gold in California, and, as a natural consequence, the gold fever rages to an alarming extent throughout the country. At the latest dates seventeen vessels were lying in the harbor of San Francisco, deserted by their crews, who had gone to the gold regions. In all the principal cities, companies are being formed to proceed to California in search of the precious metal. A large number of persons have gone from New York within a fortnight past, and other expeditions are contemplated. In Baltimore, last week, there were no less than four vessels loading for California. It is said that in the vicinity of the mines, all the necessaries of life command the most extravagant prices, flour selling for fifty dollars per barrel. Of course, with such facts before the people, adventurers enough will be found. But as to the policy of such adventures, we are very much of the opinion expressed in the following paragraph from the Chronotype:—

"That the gold hunting in that region has been remarkably fortunate thus far, is beyond a doubt, though it is equally certain from the principles of human nature that the accounts must be exaggerated. How long it will continue fortunate is another matter. There is no probability that the auriferous region of California differs materially from others previously discovered, and if it does not, the vein of good luck will speedily run low. It must be folly for any one who has the means of a livelihood by his industry here, to pull up stakes for the gold region. It would only be acting over the old story of the dog who dropped his dinner for the shadow of it. For the unfortunates who have nothing else to do, either because they are too rich or too poor, it may do very well to go to California to dig for gold. If they should go and find it plenty, those who stay industriously at home may well content themselves, for they after all will take the most benefit of it. The gold of conquered Peru staid not in Spain. It went to Holland and England."

NO SLAVERY IN CALIFORNIA.—Colonel J. D. Stevenson, who was sent out to California in command of a regiment of United States troops, writes to a friend in Rochester in the following strain:—

"That the territory is of great importance to the United States no one can doubt, as it will be the extreme boundary on the Pacific, of our mighty republic, a boundary, too, that can never be trodden by a slave. Whatever may be the action of Congress on this all-important subject, it can never affect this Territory, for here slaves can never exist as such. The best that can be imported, when their labor comes into competition with the Indian laborer, would not be worth their transportation. Indians can be hired at from four to five dollars per month and their food, which consists of corn and beans only, and they will do as much work in a day as a negro slave. Besides, the whole people of the country are averse to slavery."

CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The doings in Congress last week may be summed up in few words.

On second-day, the Senate and House of Representatives organized, appointed Committees to wait on the President, and after attending to some other unimportant matters, adjourned.

On third-day, the President's Message was read in both branches of Congress. After hearing the Message, and voting to print 10,000 copies of it and the accompanying documents, the Senate adjourned. The House of Representatives, not only heard the Message, and voted to print 15,000 copies, but listened to notices of several bills to be introduced; the most important of which was one by Mr. Goggin "to reduce the rates of postage on letters and newspapers, to establish uniform postage charges, and to correct abuses of the franking privilege," and one by Mr. Greeley "to discourage speculation in Public Lands, and to secure homes thereon to actual settlers and cultivators."

On fourth day there was no quorum in the Senate, and of course no business. The House did little else than elect a Chaplain.

On fifth-day, in the Senate, the death of Hon. Dixon H. Lewis was announced, the usual badge of mourning ordered, and a vote passed to adjourn over till second-day of this week. The House did nothing except to talk a while about what papers to have its debates published in, then hear that Dixon H. Lewis was dead, pass the customary resolutions, and adjourn over till Monday.

HINTS ABOUT THE CHOLERA.

Some two weeks ago a ship arrived at New York from Havre, on board which several cases of cholera, so called, had occurred during the voyage. All the steerage passengers were provided for at Quarantine, and the disease is thus confined there. The Board of Health appointed a Committee, consisting of Drs. John B. Beck, Richard L. Morris, and J. M. Smith, to investigate the matter and report upon it. Their report, after stating the facts, and urging the importance of cleanliness as a protection against the cholera, contains the following suggestions as to the prevention and treatment of the disease:

"Believing that much may be done in the way of prevention, if not cure, of the disease, in case it should unfortunately attack us, the undersigned would offer a few suggestions of a general nature, founded on experience, leaving the application of them to the good sense and discretion of the community at large.

In the first place, they would advise particular attention to clothing. From the nature of the disease, it is evident that much depends upon keeping the body warm, and protecting it from sudden exposures to cold and moisture. Flannel next the skin should be a universal article of apparel; and they would respectfully suggest to those charitable associations which are in the habit of supplying the poor with clothing, to make this an object of special attention. At this season of the year, too, the supply of fuel to the poor should be liberal.

In the second place, the diet should be particularly attended to. The undersigned would not advise any sudden or great changes in the ordinary modes of living, where these modes are temperate, and have been found to agree. Such changes they believe would do more harm than good. From the peculiar nature of the disease, however, it is well known that certain kinds of food are injurious, and, without going into particulars, they will merely state, that all such articles as have a tendency to relax the bowels ought to be avoided. All crude and raw vegetables, as well as violent purgative medicines, are calculated to do mischief. Excesses in eating and drinking cannot be too religiously abstained from.

In the third place, attention to personal cleanliness, by the frequent use of the tepid bath, is particularly recommended.

In the fourth place, the preservation of a calm and composed state of mind is all-important, and may do more than is generally supposed in preventing the onset of this disease. It is the result of experience, that all epidemics are aggravated more or less by mental disturbance, whether in the shape of active panic or low despondency. To the cholera this is particularly applicable. While our citizens, therefore, take every precautionary measure, let them keep up a good heart and dispel all fear.

In the fifth place, with regard to the treatment of cholera, it may be observed that, as a general rule, the disease does not attack so suddenly as to preclude the possibility of calling in timely medical assistance. A relaxed state of the bowels for a longer or shorter period gives notice of its approach. In all cases, therefore, when any disorder of this kind exists, common prudence will suggest the necessity of resorting to medical aid. If this be done in season, the disease may generally be promptly arrested. Where professional aid cannot be immediately obtained, and where simple relaxation of the bowels exists, fifteen or twenty drops of laudanum may be taken, to be repeated in one or two hours, according to circumstances. For young persons and children the dose must be reduced according to the age—at the age say of ten years, five drops; at the age of two or three years, two or three drops.

Where the symptoms are more severe, and the patient is cold, in addition to the laudanum he should be put immediately to bed between blankets, and every appliance in the shape of bottles of hot water, bags of heated salt or sand, frictions, &c., be diligently resorted to. A strong mustard poultice, too, should be applied over the region of the stomach, to remain on until it produces smarting of the skin. In addition to this, a little brandy and water should be given for the purpose of restoring warmth. As in this city no difficulty can exist in obtaining the speedy assistance of a physician, any directions in relation to the after treatment are deemed unnecessary.

THE FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamship Britannia has arrived since our last, bringing foreign dates to November 18th, the day of her sailing.

The most exciting news is from Austria. The despot of that empire has followed up his success in capturing Vienna by many bloody executions. Robert Blum, the Frankfort Deputo, been tried secretly by Court Martial and shot. Krieslaer Ullmayer, a writer of democratic and exciting placards, has been hanged. The poet Kaiser is to share the same fate, and Captain Braun, of the National Guard, who formerly served in the army, has been sentenced to be shot. The Commander of the Academic Legion, Aigner, has committed suicide. The principal leaders have not yet been taken; a blacksmith, who took a prominent part in Latour's murder, has been arrested. The number killed during the siege is now said to amount to six thousand, by far the greatest loss being on the side of the Imperialists. The population arrested with arms in their hands are to be enrolled in different regiments. They are at present confined in the arsenal, and strictly guarded. A body of 30,000 men still remain in Vienna. The Emperor has decided upon fixing his residence at Prague.

The intelligence from Berlin is of the highest importance, as it announces that the King and the Prussian Assembly are at issue, and that military preparations have been made to quell any attempt that may be made by the populace to rise in favor of the latter. The city was surrounded by troops at the last accounts, and a sanguinary struggle was expected.

In Ireland, the poverty and starvation, it is contended by many, will equal the sufferings of the people during the memorable year of 1846. Men even of rank and title are said to be subsisting on yellow meal and the garbage of their gardens. A baronet in the west of Ireland, who had an income of two thousand pounds a year, has been so reduced as to accept the miserable office of collector of poor rates. During the last fortnight the landlord-shooting season appears to have set in in good earnest, and a long catalogue of melancholy events are recorded in the columns of the Irish newspapers.

SUMMARY.

A telegraphic dispatch from Utica, N. Y., dated December 7, says: "Our city has been visited by two disastrous fires to-day. The first destroyed the copper and sheet-iron manufactory f Mr. O'Neill, on Genesee street. Loss about $30,000—partially insured. The other consumed several small buildings on Burchard and Hotel streets, including the Common Council buildings, valued at $3,000. All the city records were destroyed, the only public property saved being the portraits of two of the Mayors."

Mrs. Washington, mother of the present proprietor of Mount Vernon, has recently emancipated a colored man, long attached to the family, and who is now making preparations to embark with his family, consisting of a wife and ten children, to Liberia. In the service of the Washington family he has had good opportunities to amass a snug little fortune, which is to be devoted to securing the comforts of a home, and the advancement of his race, in their new home.

Application will be made to the next Legislsture of New Jersey for the charter of a company with $500,000 capital to construct a Plank Road across N. Jersey, from a point on the Raritan River to a point on the Delaware River. Roads of this description appear to be succeeding admirably in Western New York, and elsewhere; and are a cheap substitute for iron railways. The road is first graded, and then planks about sixteen feet long and three inches thick are laid down crosswise, forming a smooth and substantial road.

The editor of the Skowhegan (Me.) Democratic Clarion says that there are one thousand families in the county of Somerset, who do not take any newspaper, nor scarcely ever read one; whose children are ignorant to a degree bordering upon idiocy, many of whom will grow up to manhood indolent and vicious, and finally end their days in the poor-house or prison.

The Auburn Advertiser publishes a legal notice, signed by a number of the most wealthy citizens of that place, expressing their intention of forming a Company, in pursuance of the provisions of the General Railroad Law, for the purpose of constructing a railroad to connect with the New York & Erie Railroad, at Binghampton.

An operative in the cotton mills of Glasgow, Scotland, gets $1,80 a week, and boards himself. In the cotton factories in Manchester, England, the wages of operatives will average about $2,88 a week. This, as estimated by a writer in the Lowell Courier, is about 33 per cent cheaper than labor in the Lowell mills.

A letter of the 28th ult., dated Christiana, states that a conscript in the Norwegian navy, named Halversten, having objected to serve on the ground that he was a Quaker, and could not participate in military affairs, he was sentenced to receive three times twenty-seven lashes on his bare back, and continues to serve as a cabin boy.

Just previous to the adjournment of the Cherokee National Council, a system was agreed upon, and a law passed for the establishment of, an Orphan Manual Labor School, to be under the control of an Indian Mission Conference of the Methodist E. Church, South. The National Council adjourned sine die on the 13th ult., after hearing a parting address from the Chief, Major Lowrey.

The Indianapolis Journal chronicles the marriage in that city, on the 22d ult., of Carey H. Boutright, Esq., to Miss Margaret Thornton. This is Mr. Boutright's ninth marriage.

The steward of the American ship Childe Harold has been arrested for carrying American papers to Havana, and is now in irons there, with five natives, who have been imprisoned for expressing opinions favorable to annexation with the United States.

The New York and New Haven Railroad is expected to be opened from city to city by the first of January. The Harlem Railroad will be completed to Dover, Dutchess county, by the same date. The former road, in connection with the Housatonic, will afford a continuous railroad communication from New York to Albany.

A company of about one hundred men are about embarking at Boston for California. Each man puts into the concern from $300 to $500, which will be appropriated to the purchase of a vessel and a cargo of goods suitable to the traffic on the Pacific Coast. Arrived at California, a portion of the company will remain by the ship to dispose of the cargo, etc.

Mr. Jones, of Lowell, was met in the streets of Rochester the other night by three ruffians, who attacked and severely beat him, but he finally escaped from them, considerably maimed. He had five hundred dollars in his possession which he had just received at the railroad depot.

A telegraphic dispatch, dated at Charleston, S. C., December 4, says: "The steamer Columbus, from Philadelphia for this port, on Sunday last, ran down and sunk the schooner Missouri, near Edenton. There were six seamen on board, five of whom perished."

The Vermont Legislature, before its adjournment, adopted joint resolutions in favor of prohibiting the extension of slavery—and of abolishing slavery in the District of Columbia, or removing the seat of government to a free State. They were passed unanimously.

The census of Chicago has just been taken, and the population is 20,023.

Mr. Parsons, of Wilmington, Mass., was severely bitten by a rabid dog a few days ago.

BRITISH PERIODICAL LITERATURE.

REPUBLICATION OF

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor, and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Tory, Whig, and Radical—"Blackwood" and the "London Quarterly" are Tory; the "Edinburgh Review" Whig; and the "Westminster Review" Radical. The "North British Review" is more of a religious character, having been originally edited by Dr. Chalmers, and now, since his death, being conducted by his son-in-law, Dr. Hanna, associated with Sir David Brewster. Its literary character is of the very highest order. The "Westminster," though reprinted under that title only, is published in England under the title of the "Foreign Quarterly and Westminster," it being in fact a union of the two Reviews formerly published and reprinted under separate titles. It has, therefore, the advantage, by this combination, of uniting in one work the best features of both as heretofore issued.

The above Periodicals are reprinted in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals, Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

TERMS.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For any one of the four Reviews, | $3 00 | per annum. |
| For any two, " | 5 00 | " |
| For any three, " | 7 00 | " |
| For all four of the Reviews, | 8 00 | " |
| For Blackwood's Magazine, | 3 00 | " |
| For Blackwood and three Reviews, | 9 00 | " |
| For Blackwood and the four Reviews, | 10 00 | " |

Payments to be made in all cases in advance.

CLUBBING.

Four copies of any or all of the above works will be sent to one address, on payment of the regular subscription for three—the fourth copy being gratis.

EARLY COPIES.

Our late arrangement with the British publishers of Blackwood's Magazine, secures to us early sheets of that work, by which we are enabled to place the entire number in the hands of subscribers before any portion of it can be reprinted in any of the American Journals. For this and other advantages secured to our subscribers, we pay so large a consideration, that we may be compelled to raise the price of the Magazine.

☞ Something may therefore be gained by subscribing early.

 Remittances and communications should be always addressed, post-paid or franked, to the Publishers,

THE YOUTH'S CABINET
REV. FRANCIS C. WOODWORTH
EDITOR.

THE Fourth Volume of this juvenile magazine commences with January, 1849. It appears on new type, and a corresponding improvement will be made throughout. Excelsior is the motto both of the editor and publisher. It is their determination that the Youth's Cabinet shall continue to be acknowledged as the best magazine of its class in America. Yearly subscription, same as heretofore, $1 only. Now is the time to subscribe. Specimens sent gratis.

HOLIDAY NUMBER.—The January number, now ready for delivery, is prepared with especial reference to the holidays. It contains the richest and most varied table of contents, and is embellished with a steel vignette—the Pet Fawn—engraved at a cost of $200, besides upward of twenty beautiful wood engravings. Single copies 12½ cents—10 copies for $1. Send on you orders by mail.

BOUND VOLUMES.—Three volumes are now completed and elegantly bound. They are all sold separately or in sets. Price $1 25 per volume.

☞ ONE HUNDRED TRAVELING AGENTS WANTED, in different parts of the Union, to canvass for subscribers and to dispose of bound volumes. The present is the most favorable season for the agency. Gentlemen who apply must forward at the time reliable testimonials as to character and ability, and must be able to furnish some $20, to be invested in bound volumes, which are in great demand. Terms, such as will satisfy any reasonable man, are offered to acceptable agents. Specimens (gratis) and full particulars as to the agency, will be sent, on application, post-paid, to

TRACT ON SUNDAY LEGISLATION.

At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Sabbath Tract Society, held on the 15th of October, the Corresponding Secretary was instructed to offer a Premium of Ten Dollars for the best Tract, not exceeding 16 pages on the subject of Sunday Legislation, showing its anti-Christia and anti-republican tendencies. Manuscripts on the subject are solicited, and may be forwarded to the Corresponding Secretary, Geo. B. Utter, before the 15th day of January, 1849, at which time those on hand will be referred to a Committee appointed by the Board for examination and decision.

COURSE OF STUDY.

The classic course gives full facilities to Students for an advanced standing in College. The Ornamental and Scientific Departments are such as to meet the advancing demands of this educating age. Each member of the school will be required to write compositions, and read or speak select pieces, at stated intervals.

EXPENSES.

| | |
|---|---|
| TUITION, according to studies, | $3, $4, or $5 0 |
| EXTRAS—Drawing, | 1 00 |
| Painting, | $2 00 or 4 00 |
| Tuition on Piano, | 8 00 |
| Use of Piano, | 2 00 |
| Chemical Lectures, and Experiments, | 1 00 |
| Writing, including Stationery, | 50 |
| Study rooms, with stove, chairs, table, and bedstead, | 1 50 |
| Board in private families, per week, | $1 00 to 1 50 |

TEACHERS' CLASSES.

Classes will be formed at the opening of the First Term and middle of the Second Term, to continue seven weeks, with daily lectures and instructions in relation to the duties of those intending to teach, accompanied by a thorough review of the Common English branches. Tuition, $2 50.

AGRICULTURAL AND ANALYTIC CHEMISTRY.

Instructions in this Department, will be equal to any that can be obtained in the State, but will not be fully opened until about the first of January. A circular explaining more fully this Department, will be forwarded to any wishing it, by applying to the Principal, at DeRuyter; or Gurdon Evans, Analytic Labratory, Yale College, New Haven, Ct.

Text books furnished at the lowest prices.

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE.

The Message of the President of the United States was presented to Congress on Tuesday of last week. Its enormous length is a sufficient reason why we should not publish it entire. When we add to this the fact, that its length is occasioned by arguing in detail several questions which have been presented to the people once and again, we are sure our readers will thank us for making the following abstract, instead of giving the whole document:

Relations with other Nations.

I am happy to inform you, that our relations with all nations are friendly and pacific. Advantageous treaties of commerce have been concluded within the last four years with New Grenada, Peru, the Two Sicilies, Belgium, Hanover, Oldenburg, and Mecklenburg-Swherin. Pursuing our example, the restrictive system of Great Britain, our principal foreign customer, has been relaxed; a more liberal commercial policy has been adopted by other enlightened nations, and our trade has been enlarged and extended. Our country stands higher in the respect of the world than at any former period. With all the governments on this continent our relations, it is believed, are now on a more friendly and satisfactory footing than they have ever been at any former period. Since the exhange of ratifications of the treaty of peace with Mexico, our intercourse with the government of that republic has been of the most friendly character.

[Following this allusion to Mexico, one column of the Message is occupied in setting forth the important results of our war with that country; which are, mainly, the demonstration it has afforded of the military strength of this country, and ability of the government to organize a numerous and efficient army upon a sudden call.]

Texas, Oregon, New Mexico, and California.

Within less than four years, the annexation of Texas to the Union has been consummated; all conflicting title to the Oregon Territory south of the forty-ninth degree of north latitude, being all that was insisted on by any of my predecessors, has been adjusted; and New Mexico and Upper California have been acquired by treaty. The area of these several Territories, according to a report carefully prepared by the Commissioner of the General Land Office, from the most authentic information in his possession, and which is herewith transmitted, contains one million one hundred and ninety-three thousand and sixty-one square miles, or seven hundred and sixty-three millions five hundred and fifty-nine thousand and forty acres; while the area of the remaining twenty-nine States, and the Territory not yet organized into States, east of the Rocky Mountains, contains two millions fifty-nine thousand five hundred and thirteen square miles, or thirteen hundred and eighteen million one hundred and twenty-six thousand and fifty-eight acres. These estimates show that the territories recently acquired, and over which our exclusive jurisdiction and dominion have been extended, constitute a country more than half as large as all that which was held by the United States before their acquisition. * * *

Upper California, irrespective of the vast mineral wealth recently developed there, holds at this day, in point of value snd importance to the rest of the Union, the same relation that Louisiana did, when that fine Territory was acquired from France forty-five years ago. Extending nearly ten degrees of latitude along the Pacific, and embracing the only safe and commodious harbors on that coast for many hundred miles, with a temperate climate, and an extensive interior of fertile lands, it is scarcely possible to estimate its wealth until it shall be brought under the Government of our laws, and its resources fully developed. From its position, it must command the rich commerce of China, of Asia, of the islands of the Pacific, of Western Mexico, of Central America, the South American States, and of the Russian possessions bordering on that ocean.

A great emporium will doubtless speedily arise on the Californian coast, which may be destined to rival in importance New Orleans itself. The depot of the vast commerce which must exist on the Pacific will probably be at some point on the bay of San Francisco, and will occupy the same relation to the whole western coast of that ocean, as New Orleans does to the Valley of the Mississippi and the Gulf of Mexico. To this depot our numerous whale-ships will resort with their cargoes, to trade, refit, and obtain supplies. This of itself will largely contribute to build up a city, which would become the centre of a great and rapidly increasing commerce. Situated on a safe harbor, sufficiently capacious for all the navies as well as the marine of the world, and convenient to excellent timber for ship-building, owned by the United States, it must become our great western depot.

It was known that mines of the precious motals existed to a considerable extent in California at the time of its acquisition. Recent discoveries render it probable that these mines are more extensive and valuable than was anticipated. The accounts of the abundance of gold in that territory are of such an extraordinary character as would scarcely command belief were they not corroborated by the authentic reports of officers in the public service who have visited the mineral district, and derived the facts which they detail from personal observation. Reluctant to credit the reports in general circulation as to the quantity of gold, the officer commanding our forces in California visited the mineral district in July last for the purpose of obtaining accurate information on the subject. His report to the War Department of the result of his examination, and the facts obtained on the spot, is herewith laid before Congress. When he visited the country, there were about four thousand persons engaged in collecting gold. There is every reason to believe that the number of persons so employed has since been augmented. The explorations already made warrant the belief that the supply is very large, and that the gold is found in various places in an extensive district of country. * * * *

As it is ascertained that mines of gold, silver, copper, and quicksilver, exist in New Mexico and California, and that nearly all the lands where they are found belong to the United States, it is deemed important to the public interests that provision should be made for a geological and minerological examination of these regions. Measures should be adopted to preserve the mineral lands, especially such as contain the precious metals, for the use of the United States; or if brought into market to separate them from the farming lands, and dispose of them in such a manner as to secure a large return of money to the treasury, and at the same time lead to the development of their wealth by individual proprietors and purchasers. * * * *

That we may the more speedily and fully avail ourselves of the undeveloped wealth of these mines, it is deemed of vast importance that a branch of the mint of the United States be authorized to be established, at your present session, in California. Among other signal advantages which would result from such an establishment would be that of raising the gold to its par value in that Territory. * *

The acquisition of California and N. Mexico, the settlement of the Oregon boundary, and the annexation of Texas, extending to the Rio Grande, are results which, combined, are of greater consequence, and will add more to the wealth and strength of the Union, than any which have preceded them since the adoption of the Constitution. But to effect these great results, not only California, but New Mexico, must be brought under the control of regularly organized governments. The existing condition of California, and of that part of N. Mexico lying west of the Rio Grande, and without the limits of Texas, imperiously demand that Congress should, at the present session, organize territorial governments over them.

[Here follows a lengthy allusion to the "domestic question" of slavery, and a labored effort to show that our internal divisions on account of it are too insignificant to be allowed to stand in the way of organizing territorial governments, and thus preserving the Union of the States "in all its vigor and with all its countless blessings." The President maintains, that as the whole people of the United States contributed to pay the expenses of the war by which the new territory was acquired, no portion of the people, not even slaveholders with their slaves, should be excluded from it. He thinks it is not necessary, in organizing territorial governments, for Congress to legislate upon the subject of slavery, but that the matter should be left to the people of those territories when they assemble to form State Constitutions. To secure harmony, however, he would be willing that the line of the Missouri Compromise should be extended, on the parallel of thirty-six degrees thirty minutes, from the western boundary of Texas, where it now terminates, to the Pacific Ocean.]

Finances of the Country.

The Secretary of the Treasury will present in his annual report a highly satisfactory statement of the condition of the finances.

The imports for the fiscal year ending on the thirtieth of June last, were of the value of one hundred and fifty-four millions nine hundred seventy-seven thousand eight hundred and seventy-six dollars; of which the amount exported was twenty-one million one hundred and twenty-eight thousand and ten dollars, leaving one hundred thirty-three million eight hundred and forty-nine thousand eight hundred and sixty-six dollars in the country for domestic use.

The value of the exports for the same period was one hundred fifty-four million thirty-two thousand one hundred and thirty-one dollars, consisting of domestic productions amounting to one hundred and thirty-two million nine hundred and four thousand one hundred and twenty-one dollars, and twenty-one million one hundred and twenty-eight thousand and ten dollars of foreign articles.

The receipts into the treasury for the same period, exclusive of loans, amounted to thirty-five millions four hundred and thirty-six thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars and fifty-nine cents; of which there was derived from customs thirty-one millions seven hundred and fifty-seven thousand and seventy dollars and ninety-six cents; from sales of public lands, three million three hundred and twenty-eight thousand six hundred and forty-two dollars and fifty-six cents; and from miscellaneous and incidental sources, three hundred and fifty-one thousand and thirty-seven dollars and seven cents.

It will be perceived that the revenue from customs for the last fiscal year exceeded by seven hundred and fifty-seven thousand and seventy dollars and ninety-six cents the estimate of the Secretary of the Treasury in his last annual report; and that the aggregate receipts during the same period from customs, lands, and miscellaneous sources, also exceeded the estimate by the sum of five hundred and thirty-six thousand seven hundred and fifty dollars and fifty-nine cents—indicating, however, a very near approach in the estimate to the actual result.

The expenditures during the fiscal year ending on the thirtieth of June last, including those for the war, and exclusive of payments of principal and interest for the public debt, were forty-two million eight hundred and eleven thousand nine hundred and seventy dollars and three cents.

It is estimated that the receipts into the treasury for the fiscal year ending on the thirtieth of June, 1849, including the balance in the treasury on the first of July last, will amount to the sum of fifty-seven million forty-eight thousand nine hundred and sixty-nine dollars and ninety cents.

[Then comes an argument for the tariff of 1846; the operations of which, according to the President, have been such during the past year as fully to meet the public expectation, and to confirm the opinion heretofore expressed of the wisdom of the change in our revenue system which was effected by it. In concluding this subject, the Message states that on the 6th of July last, the public debt, including that authorized to be negotiated, in pursuance of existing laws, and including treasury notes, amounted to $65,778,450 41. The payment of this debt, at the earliest practicable period, "should be the cardinal principle of our public policy."]

Branch Mint at New York.

For the reason assigned in my last annual message, I repeat the recommendation that a branch of the mint of the United States be established at the City of New York. The importance of this measure is greatly increased by the acquisition of the rich mines of the precious metals in New Mexico and California, and especially in the latter.

Public Lands.

I repeat the recommendation, heretofore made, in favor of the graduation and reduction of the price of such of the public lands as have been long offered in the market, and have remained unsold, and in favor of extending the rights of preëmption to actual settlers on the unsurveyed as well as the surveyed lands.

Indian Treaties.

Within the last four years eight important treaties have been negotiated with different Indian tribes, and at a cost of one million eight hundred and forty-two thousand dollars; Indian lands to the amount of more than eighteen million five hundred thousand acres, have been ceded to the United States; and provision has been made for settling in the country west of the Mississippi the tribes which occupied this large extent of the public domain. The title to all the Indian lands within the several States of our Union, with the exception of a few small reservations, is now extinguished, and a vast region opened for settlement and cultivation.

It is gratifying to find the revenues of the post-office department, under the rates of postage now established by law, so rapidly increasing. The gross amount of postages during the last fiscal year amounted to four million three hundred and seventy-one thousand and seven dollars, exceeding the annual average received for the nine years immediately preceding the passage of the act of the third of March, 1845, by the sum of six thousand four hundred and fifty-three dollars, and exceeding the amount received for the year ending the thirtieth of June, 1847, by the sum of four hundred and twenty-five thousand one hundred and eighty-four dollars.

The expenditures for the year, excluding the sum of ninety-four thousand six hundred and seventy-two dollars, allowed by Congress at its last session to individual claimants, and including the sum of one hundred thousand five hundred dollars paid for the services of the line of steamers between Bremen and New York, amounted to four millions one hundred and ninety-eight thousand eight hundred and forty-five dollars, which is less than the annual average for the nine years previous to the act of 1845, by three hundred thousand seven hundred and forty-eight dollars.

The mail routes, on the 30th day of June last, were one hundred and sixty-three thousand two hundred and eight miles in extent—being an increase during the last year of nine thousand three hundred and ninety miles. The mails were transported over them, during the same time, forty-one millions twelve thousand five hundred and seventy-nine miles; making an increase of transportation for the year of two millions one hundred and twenty-four thousand six hundred and eighty miles, while the expense was less than that of the previous year by four thousand two hundred and thirty-five dollars.

The increase in the mail transportation within the last three years has been five million three hundred and seventy-eight thousand three hundred and ten miles, while the expenses were reduced four hundred and fifty-six thousand seven hundred and thirty-eight dollars—making an increase of service at the rate of fifteen per cent., and a reduction in the expenses of more than fifteen per cent.

During the past year there have been employed, under contracts with the Post Office Department, two ocean steamers in conveying the mails monthly between New York and Bremen, and one, since October last, performing semi-monthly service between Charleston and Havana; and a contract has been made for the transportation of the Pacific mails across the Isthmus from Chagres to Panama.

Under the authority given to the Secretary of the Navy, three ocean steamers have been constructed and sent to the Pacific, and are expected to enter upon the mail service between Panama and Oregon, and the intermediate ports, on the 1st of January next, and a fourth has been engaged by him for the service between Havana and Chagres; so that a regular monthly mail line will be kept up after that time between the United States and our territories on the Pacific.

Notwithstanding this great increase in the mail service, should the revenue continue to increase the present year as it did in the last, there will be received near $450,000 more than the expenditures.

These considerations have satisfied the Postmaster General that, with certain modifications of the act of 1845, the revenue may be still farther increased, and a reduction of postages made to a uniform rate of five cents, without an interference with the principle, which has been constantly and properly enforced, of making that department sustain itself.

A well-digested cheap postage system is the best means of diffusing intelligence among the people, and is of so much importance in a country so extensive as that of the United States, that I recommended to your favorable consideration the suggestions of the Postmaster General for its employment.

[The remainder of the Message is occupied in discussing questions relating to banks, tariffs, the veto power, &c., in lieu of which we presume most of our readers would prefer other matter; and we therefore conclude our extracts, simply saying that we have copied or noticed whatever we regard as of general interest.]

A young man in Boston, born with a hare lip, and without palate, has been fitted by a dentist of that city with an artificial roof of the mouth, palate, and front teeth, not only concealing the deformity, but restoring, or rather creating a faculty of articulation.

HAYDEN'S EARLY LIFE.

Poor, freezing with cold in a miserable garret, he studied by the side of his old broken harpsichord; the ardor of his genius alone left to animate him in contending with the difficulties of the way. At length he was fortunate enough to obtain some lessons in Italian singing from his introduction to the family of a Venetian nobleman, Ambassador at Vienna. The famous Porpora was still retained in his household, and Hayden most eagerly sought his favor, in the hope of obtaining also his instruction. Humiliation, and many a "hope deferred," he had to endure; for Porpora was ill-tempered beyond conception, and although poor Hayden rose early every morning to brush his coat and shoes, and arrange his wig in the nicest order, in expectation of propitiating him, he had seldom more than the polite epithet of "fool" bestowed on him for his pains. And this was the future illustrious author of the "Creation."

At the age of nineteen, his voice breaking, he was expelled from his class at Stephen Church, where he had sung eleven years, and his only asylum was in the house of a wigmaker, named Keller. Unfortunately, his residence there had a fatal influence on his after life; for his host, too desirous seemingly of making ample provision for his young guest, proposed uniting him to one of his daughters, whilst Hayden, engrossed in his studies, having no thoughts of love, made no objection; and afterwards keeping his word with scrupulous honor, the union proved far from happy. On leaving the house of his friend Keller, (we do not know for what reason,) for six long years he endured a bitter conflict against penury so piercing, that often during winter he was compelled to lie in bed for want of fuel and other necessaries. An opportunity at last presented itself of improving his circumstances; for by chance the Prince of Esterhazy, a passionate amateur of music, was present at a concert which very opportunely commenced with one of Hayden's pieces. The delight of the Prince was unbounded, and he immediately appointed the composer sub-director of his orchestra, and he demanded who he was. Hayden, in fear and trembling, advanced, when the Prince exclaimed, "What, is that the little Moor?" (alluding to his complexion.) Then addressing him, added, "Go and dress yourself as my chapel-master. You must never appear again in my presence in the plight you are now. You are too little, and have a pitiful-looking face. Get a new coat and high-heeled shoes, that your stature may correspond with your mind." Hayden was too happy at his appointment to feel much chagrin at his equivocal style of compliment. [Ainsworth.

INDUSTRY.—One day, on my return, I was driven to take shelter from a rain-storm in a little hovel by the roadside—a sort of cobbler's stall. The tenant and his son were upon their work, and after the customary use of greetings, I entered familiarly into conversation with them, as, indeed, I always do, seeing that your cobbler is a man of contemplative faculty; that there is really something of mystery in his craft. Before I had been with them long, the old man found out that he lacked something for his work, and, in order to provide it, he sent his son out on a job of some five minutes. The interval was a short one, but it was too long for his active impatience; he at last became uneasy, shuffled about the room, and at last took up a strap or two of leather, and fell to work upon them. "For," said he, "it will never do, you know, sir, to be idle, not at any rate—I should faint away." . . . The words came home to me. They stung my conscience severely: they were gall and wormwood to me.

PRICE OF A WIFE.—A novel case came up in N. Y. last week, before Justice Timpson, at the Essex Market Police Court, by a German named Bernard Volner, who stated to the Magistrate that he went from this City to New Orleans about three years ago, leaving his wife here, and on returning a few months since, found that his wife had been married again to one Louis Poulson. Upon learning this fact, Volner, as he affirms, called upon the new possessor of his wife's hand and heart, and agreed to relinquish all claim to her favor and affections on condition of Poulson healing the wound he had inflicted by handing over $150, which he promised to do; but after calling upon Poulson many times for the money, without any satisfactory result, he had been compelled to bring his case before the authorities, at the same time expressing his reluctance to prosecute his wife, and that he is perfectly willing to part with her provided Louis will hand over the cash. [Trib.

PLATO.—Several anecdotes of Plato are preserved, which reflect honor on his moral principles and character. Having raised his hand in anger to correct a servant, he kept his arm fixed in that posture for a considerable time. To a friend coming in, and inquiring the reason of his singular conduct, he replied, "I am punishing a passionate man!" At another time, he said to one of his slaves; "I would chastise you if I were not angry." When told that his enemies were circulating reports to his disadvantage, he remarked, "I will so live that no one will believe them." A friend, observing his studious habits, even in his extreme old age, inquired how long he intended to be a scholar. "As long," said he, "as I have need to grow wiser and better."

BUCKWHEAT CAKES.—The griddle on which cakes are baked should never be touched with grease. Firstly, because it imparts a rancid taste to the cakes. Secondly, if a cooking-stove be used, it fills the kitchen, if not the whole house, with the smell of burnt grease—to say nothing of the parade and boasting to one's neighbors, by betraying what we are to have for breakfast. Wash the griddle with hot soap-suds; scour with dry sand, and when heated for use, rub it well with a spoon-full of fine salt, and a coarse cloth. It will then be ready to receive the cakes. After each cake is removed the salt rubbing must be repeated. If the first does not succeed, try it again, and you will ever after follow this advice of an old housekeeper.

In a country church-yard is the following singular inscription: "Elizabeth, wife of Colonel Cheetham, who was married forty-seven years, and never did one thing to disoblige her husband." An extraordinary wife, truly!

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY

W. C. KENYON, A. M.,
IRA SAYLES, A. M., } Principals.

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage.

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical.

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULATIONS.

1. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.
2. Punctuality in attending all regular Academic exercises will be required.
3. The use of Tobacco, for chewing or smoking, will not be allowed either in or about the Academic buildings.
4. Playing at games of chance cannot be allowed.
5. Using profane language cannot be allowed.
6. The use of any kind of intoxicating drinks cannot be allowed, unless prescribed in case of sickness, by a regular physician.
7. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, cannot be permitted.
8. Gentlemen and ladies of the Institution will not be permitted to visit the rooms of the opposite sex, except in cases of imperious necessity, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.
9. Good order must be maintained at all times, and in all the rooms and halls of the Institution, and in all the intercourse of students with each other.
10. All students are required to retire regularly at the ringing of the bell designated for that purpose, as occasion may require; and to rise at the ringing of the morning bell, also designated.
11. Any room, occupied by students, will, at all times, be subject to the visitation of the Teachers of the Institution, who are required to see that the regulations are complied with.
12. Students will be required to keep their own rooms in good order, and to pay all unnecessary damages, either of rooms or of furniture furnished with the rooms.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

GOVERNMENT.

The Government of the students will be in the hands of the Principals, and will be strictly and steadily exercised, and at the same time, strictly parental. The object of our academic government being to secure the greatest possible amount of physical, intellectual, and moral good to the students themselves, regularity and order of exercises, and good and wholesome citizens to society. No unwarrantable means will be made use of to enforce the observance of the above regulations; yet our constant endeavor will be, to make the means resorted to as effective as humun means may be.

Parents who place their children in this Institution, and all students who are sufficiently old to understand the necessity of order, cannot be too well assured that the foregoing regulations form the most essential part of the contract between them and us; and that whatever student wantonly violates them, and shows himself incorrigibly determined on pursuing his waywardness, will be expelled from the privileges of the Institution, and will not be permitted to re-enter it again, without special proof of reformation. Nor will an expelled student have any deduction made from full term charges.

Farther, parents are requested not to place money for expenses, in the hands of students who are not old enough to use money with discretion and economy. Either of the Principals, or the Book-keeper of the Institution, will act as fiscal guardian of such students without charge.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms, as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition (except the extras above mentioned) need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchange and losses.

LETTERS TO A YOUNG INQUIRER,

On the Necessity of adopting the Bible as the only Guide in making a Profession of Religion.

LETTER III.

MY DEAR DAUGHTER,—In compliance with my promise, in my last letter, I resume my remarks, to illustrate the importance of adhering, rigidly, to the Bible, as the only Guide in making a profession of religion; for which task I feel myself ill qualified, at this time, from great prostration, arising from very arduous duties, (as this is my busiest season of the year,) yet I cannot keep you in suspense any longer, when you have assured me, that my former letter was a precious one to you.

If I could thus interest the listless multitude, and be instrumental in exciting the minds of a decimal of the lazy disciples who disgrace their profession, I should consider myself amply rewarded for any labor it might impose upon me—yea, even if it were to require all my time, day and night, I should not give sleep to my eyes, nor slumber to my eye-lids, to accomplish so desirable a consummation. But while this is not my object, still I will endeavor to enlighten you, my dear child, on this subject, that you may enter the field of investigation with some hints on the mazes you may encounter, should you be tempted to turn from the fountain of living waters, to seek revivifying draughts in murky, contaminated streams.

A distinguished writer of our day, Professor Tappan, has very justly remarked, that "a distinction between God's system of truth contained in the Bible, and a system of philosophico-theological doctrines received as a creed, is all important."* It is, my child, all important in many senses, but more particularly in the two following; which I have not time nor space to enlarge upon, but barely to announce the simple propositions, leaving to your own judgment the application. 1st. To God. 2d. To ourselves. Integrity to God's prerogatives demands it, as we are admonished to let God be true, though it make all men liars; and faithfulness to our own high calling demands it, for not any thing is more certain than that, for any dereliction of duty, we shall have to write bitter things against ourselves and entail endless confusion of face—shall have to endure the goadings of a culprit's conscience, if we despise the statutes of the Lord, and yield compliance to the commandments of men. See the predicament of Elder Hawes, in the Christian Contributor, which I send along with this hasty scrawl. God will have a controversy with willful delinquents; and wo unto those who contend with their Maker.

Thus thousands become bewildered—become willful victims to man-made systems of religion. They often become sensible of the difficulties by which they are surrounded, yet they are so blinded by their deep-seated prejudices, and are so trammeled by their crude predilections, or actuated by a pusillanimous desire to please friends, that few, very few, ever manifest moral courage enough to throw off the shackles, and declare themselves on the Lord's side; but continue to wear the fetters of sect; dishonoring both themselves and their Maker. Thus it is that these lamentable and equally dangerous prejudices are engendered and entailed upon our poor fallen race. And instead of serving as beacons to deluded man—man, erring, wayward man, blinks at them all—who, while he knows the right, yet the wrong pursues—and thereby presents one of the strongest instances of the force of prejudice which the whole history of man exhibits.

The prejudices of mankind, not only the crude obstinacy of the ignorant, but the inveterate, determined partialities existing among the more enlightened portion of the community, are the great, and I might almost say, the only obstacles to advancement in morals, science, and religion. Hence our endless theological controversies and philosophical squabbles, arising from blind, wilful adherence to party or sect, against reason and against revelation, for mere party or sect's sake.

Not wishing, my child, to inflict any thing like a recondite disquisition, to unfold this frailty of human nature, and elucidate its psychological bearings; and as a simple illustration of a common-place instance some times serves a better purpose to educe a principle, and may be so on this occasion, I shall adopt that course, as it may save arguing several points to get at my object.

Some years since, I was on a visit to a family in which an intimate female friend resided. Our intimacy was so great, that she thought it no rudeness, or breach of good feeling, to contradict me flatly, and question the veracity of representations, on the most trifling as well as on serious subjects, when they came in conflict with her inveterate prejudices. The next day after my arrival, I accompanied her to church, (Presbyterian,) where I, very unexpectedly, found an eccentric friend, (who has since, in the Eastern States, been styled, "an animated beam of moon-shine,") in the pulpit; who had come to the place, the evening before, on a special mission.

The propositions, in his sermon, he wished to enforce, were peculiar to himself, and were so subversive of all doctrine I had ever heard among that people, that my attention was riveted most intently. I never before nor since found it so completely chained. The sermon was such a strange medley of far-fetched argument, beautiful flights of fancy, and oddity of illustration, that the congregation some times stared in surprise and admiration—anon sported in the fields of imagery, by following his enchanting figures, and then, again, put on the broad grin, by his humor, amounting some times to levity.

On leaving the church, I asked my companion the stereotyped interrogation after hearing a discourse: "What do you think of the sermon?" "O, excellent," she replied; "he is a very interesting preacher." We got parted, jostling through the crowd, and I arrived at the house before her, and was detailing the very strange doctrine I had heard advocated by the preacher. She came in while I was relating it, and interrupted me, by contradicting, positively, what I was asserting—the heads of the discourse, and the points he laid down to maintain; and before I could appeal to her, to inquire whether I had not stated the case plainly, she denied, strenuously, that he had said any such thing, or intended to convey any such impression—that I must have misunderstood him entirely, or willfully designed to misrepresent; and so, throughout the whole discourse, contradicted every proposition I asserted, until she worked herself into such a passion that she could not eat her dinner.

In the afternoon, she went to church by herself, and returned quite inspirited with the idea of a triumph. "I knew you were wrong—I knew you were wrong," she exclaimed before she got the door shut. "I asked Mr. ——, and Mr. ——, two members of the church, (who sat by me, and whose observations on the sermon I had repeated before dinner,) and they both affirm, that the preacher did not say any such thing. He could not have meant so at all," she persisted—"he could not possibly advocate such principles. I also heard that Mr. —— (the stated minister) said, that all he had advanced was perfectly correct."

The next morning I called on the preacher as a mere matter of courtesy. He soon turned the conversation on the sermon in question, and remarked, that "he was gratified that I was present to hear it."

I told him, that "I thought I had never listened more attentively to a sermon than I did to his discourse; but it appears that I was not much benefitted, and that there were many in a similar situation; for there were very few who agreed upon the design and doctrine to be inculcated—that a member of the church, under the same roof where I was tarrying, denied every proposition as I understood it."

"I am not surprised at that," he replied, "though I thought that I had written my sermon with great care and perspicuity."

I then repeated how I understood him. He replied, that he "wished every one present had as clear a view of it, and that all persons could retain so perfect an outline of a sermon."

"If then I am right, sir," I returned, "will you be kind enough to give me the three heads of your discourse exactly as you stated them, and I will write them down—the three general propositions you wished to establish?"

"Why, sir," he replied, "if it will be of any use to you, you may have the sermon itself until to-morrow. Take it with you, and I will call to see you before I leave the place, and get it."

I took it with me to the house, and, on entering the parlor, asked my fair theological disputant: "Will you believe the preacher's own written sermon, were you to see it?"

"O, yes, certainly," was the reply.

"Well, then," said I, "I was to see him, and intended to bring the heads of the discourse on a slip of paper, as he confirmed every word I have asserted; but he thought, as there was some difficulty, I had better bring the sermon, that we might refer to any part of it." I, then, read aloud before the whole family, the heads of the discourse. To this she objected, and said, that "I was only picking out parts, without the connection, which would give a different phase to it."

I then handed the sermon to her, requesting her to read it, and in the evening she might give me her views of it. After the tea-table was removed, she resumed the subject, and told me, that I had entirely mistaken the subject of the sermon, that the preacher did not mean at all what I had asserted and maintained. So we dropped the matter. Next morning the preacher came to see me; and after a few friendly salutations, my fair friend broached the vexed subject.

"I am very sorry, indeed," said he, "that there should be such a difference of opinion in regard to my discourse, and I should think that I had made very bungling work of it, had not my friend, here, given me such good evidence of having received every idea I intended to convey."

"Why, sir," said she, "he asserts that you said so and so," repeating the prominent heads. "Did you intend to convey such ideas?"

"Yes, madam, precisely so," he replied, "and if they are wrong, I should esteem it a kindness for any one to enlighten me on the subject, and convince me of my error."

"O, sir, I cannot say that there is any thing wrong in it, only that it is different doctrine from that I am accustomed to hear."

"That may be," returned the preacher, and here the subject ended.

Our clerical friend took his sermon and his leave of us. After he had gone, she resumed the subject again, and insisted that he did not say, at this interview, what he had said in the sermon; but what he now said was merely out of compliment to me—she was sure that he did not mean at all what he said, for it "was opposed to all the received doctrines and views of their church!"

Here was the secret, the spring of her obstinacy—the fear of shaking the infallibility of her church; (for many Protestants hold as strenuously for the infallibility of their church, or rather, make the views of their church their faith, as the Catholics do;) and touching on this string, I told her that "the preacher did not give those views as the views of their church, but distinctly remarked, in his introduction, that he was a froward child of the church, and what he intended to say were his own peculiar sentiments, and any thing that might be deemed wild and exceptionable, must be charged to himself, and not to the denomination to which he is attached."

"O, that makes all right," she replied. "I was sure that he could not mean, that those views were the doctrines of our church. He is, certainly, a very strange man!"

I was no longer mistaken—no longer misrepresenting—no longer contradicted; but the preacher was a very strange man.

This exhibits the great importance, in endeavoring to overcome error, of discovering the springs of prejudice; and also shows the ease with which it may be overthrown when dexterously touched. Thus prejudice is much like a celebrated champion, mentioned by one of the ancient writers, who stood on a rolling ball, and no one could pull him off it; but a dexterous opponent knocked the ball from underneath him, and down he fell. So, in many of our efforts to combat error and prejudice, we may be foiled in a regular siege, when with a little art we may knock away the ball on which it is supported, and down comes the hitherto impregnable fabric.

The foregoing anecdote may illustrate more forcibly than any philosophical disquisition, my object of exhibiting the error of mankind, generally, in looking at things, and particularly religious matters, through prejudiced lens; for all error arises from our prejudices, the influence and extent of which but few persons are aware of, or are willing to acknowledge. Indeed, but few persons are sufficiently acquainted with themselves—the constitution and workings of their own minds, and the secret impelling motives to action, to detect their own frail propensities, and discover this all-important fact, that man's veneration for established modes of thinking and established forms in society and in the church, induce him, as by instinct, to adopt and pursue, mechanically, the systems which have been venerated before him, rather than investigate and prove. It is not only an easier process, but it saves the trouble of defending. It is popular, and incurs no prejudices. The writer I have already quoted, pertinently remarks: "The man of a sect will always find friends and support in his sect; while a man of the truth is likely to fall between all parties." Herein lies the aversion of man to investigation, and the secret, also, of his submission, in having the clogs of error riveted upon him. But, as it would take a long essay to expound the Philosophy of Prejudices, and apply it, I will endeavor to supply that desideratum by another illustration, occurring in my own intercourse with one of the best men it has been my fortune to become acquainted with—a clergyman of much intelligence, who became afflicted with a cancer on his neck, arising from decayed teeth; which he was advised to have removed as the only means of relief. This he did not like to submit to, as nearly all in his mouth were diseased, though it was the uniform opinion of all the faculty whom he had consulted. Being of Welsh origin, he retained many of their prejudices, and particularly their proverbial propensity for quacking; he tampered with his disease, against all the remonstrances of his friends. He had gotten hold of Morrison's book, written expressly to aid the sale of his pills; which have in several instances been presented by juries, in England, as the cause of death, in those who were gulled into the use of them by the swelling title of Hygenian Pills. I tried, time after time, to dissuade him from trifling with himself, and hazarding his valuable life on such a precarious hope. I endeavored to expose the fallacy of the reasoning of the author—the unsoundness of the discarded notions of pathology which he had assumed—picked out of some obsolete treatise, and which very well suited the prejudices of the people. Yet no representations of this kind had any influence, and I gave him over, a martyr to infatuation, when a slight glance, one day, at the title-page of the book, at his side, gave me a clue to strike the spring of his prejudices. I commenced thus: My friend, you have labored all your days to teach perishing mortals the plan of salvation as it is in Jesus Christ. You have seen many humble disciples of the cross triumph, in death, in that cross, and are happy yourself in approaching your latter end in that belief; while you have known many, who disregarded it, to go down to the chambers of death in the utmost distress, with their own condemnation upon themselves. You are convinced of the truth of it by your own experience, and the concurring testimony of thousands of others. Now, suppose I were to come to you and say: "My friend, you have been entirely mistaken in your theology; I have here a small book, entitled, The Plan of Salvation made plain and easy, that none need fear or tremble; By Thomas Paine, Esquire—Not a Pious Man, but an Infidel. Would you read it? Would you believe it? Would you trust in it?"

"No, sir, certainly not," he replied, "it would carry the antidote with it." "Just exactly so," I retorted, "this book professes to be the Principles of Hygenic Medicine, by a self-assumed Hygenist, without any credentials of being a Physician."

"I am satisfied," he replied, "your argument is sound—I shall have nothing more to do with it."

But it was too late! Before this, I had been arguing for weeks and months without any effect—this thought struck the spring, and dispelled all his empirical delusions. But it was too late!

So, likewise, there are many quacks, dangerous quacks, in religion and religious systems, so-called; and as in medicine, thousands prefer, and cling most tenaciously to, the empiric, so in theology, they flourish the best who obscure the truth the most, and render their worship the most superstitious and idolatrous. Christ Jesus is the physician of souls—the founder of the only remedy and the only system for the maladies of sin;—that remedy is his blood—and the New Testament the only true system which expounds the principles of restoration. The modus agendi HE has given in his own revelation, and has been careful to guard it against any abridgement or amplification. [See Rev. 22: 18, 19.] Man may mar that system, but never mend it. Whenever man leaves the plain and explicit teachings of the Head of the Church, to improve upon His declared will, he becomes a quack—a system-monger—and weds a bundle of prejudices of his own imagining; which, ever after, he strives to fasten upon the community, and is even willing, peradventure, to become a martyr in defense of his fallacies. Every former of a creed is a quack; and every man-concocted system of religion, is a system of quackery. "To the law and to the testimony" is the only prescription for a theological system, or a church government, given in the Book of Inspiration! Happy is he that walks therein. He shall find wisdom, and wisdom's ways are pleasantness, and all her paths are paths of peace.

Giving the foregoing anecdotes, their proper bearing, you will be prepared to understand the obliquity of mental vision we so constantly discover in hide-bound sectarians, and to fathom the inveterate prejudices we ever encounter in trying to overturn error and commend the simple truth as it is in Christ Jesus.

I have one more illustration, and that is directly to the point, which will complete my sketch, though rude it be, which I desire to keep before you as a mirror; wherein you may behold the folly of adherence to extra-scriptural opinions and dogmas, forsooth they are the assumed principles of a party or sect.

At the time the "Discussion on the Sabbath" by "E. W. D." and "Indagator" was being published in the Christian Chronicle, (which you saw at the time,) I happened to get engaged in conversation on the subject with —— ——, a first-day Baptist minister. He was much perplexed and annoyed by the admissions of "E. W. D.," and equally dreaded the legitimate result which must follow the position of "Indagator"—namely, no holy day commanded—which, in reality, was the corner into which he was finally driven. After contending, in vain, to overturn the main position of "E. W. D.," he, —— ——, (the gentleman alluded to,) exclaimed, "Well, it is not Baptist doctrine." "Ahah!" I retorted, "that may be—but is it not Bible doctrine? Is it the Baptist doctrine, that you must put on Baptist spectacles—see all things in the Bible through sectarian lens? Why, Jack Downing must have been as much a philosopher as a wag, to have suggested the 'wunderwurkynge' transformation of the 'Gineral's spectacles.' Alas! alas! for Protestantism, when the doctrines and the institutions of the Bible have to be discerned through sectarian spectacles! Where is the Rule of Faith, the Bible? Where is private interpretation? Where is individual responsibility, if professors are obliged to look through church glasses, and be tied down to the dogmas of party? Shame! shame! on such Protestantism! You disgrace your calling and your church!" He cried, "Peccavi!"—and really looked truly ashamed of himself, as he made several lame attempts to get out of his unenviable predicament.

This is but a sample, and nothing but a common sample, of rigid sectarianism; which might be very profitably illustrated by specific allusions, but that would savor of an invidious and uncharitable spirit, and perhaps would wound the feelings of some of your good friends whom you are among, who probably will expect to see my letters to you. My object is not to attack individuals or denominations. I deal, solely, with generalities, and desire, only, to root out unbecoming prejudices, by driving off the chaff of party from the grains of truth, which lie buried beneath the heaps of error, and which cannot be discerned by reason of the contracted focus of their sectarian spectacles.

There is more truth in the sneer of Infidels than we are willing to acknowledge, if we assume present Protestantism to be the embodiment of the Gospel, or when the remark is applied to the sectarian systems of our day, that "Christianity is a bundle of prejudices." The Gospel is truth—is the tree of life. Sectarian systems are not the Gospel, but the abuse of it. Sects are, in most instances, excrescences growing on the bark of the tree—attached to it, but not of it—having no free, healthy circulation of vitality, energy, from it. They fasten themselves upon the tree—the tree tries to get rid of them—still they fasten themselves to it, to be of it, and yet, it may be, the Lord, in the last day, may say, I never knew you. We have had several false Christs and the world has seen innumerable Anti-Christs. Every Creed, or Confession, or Covenant, departing from the explicit institutions of the Bible, is an Anti-Christ and a fraud.

Sects, generally, have arisen from false teachers, but more particularly from their mingling the tenents of philosophy with the pure doctrines of Revelation; and thereby giving a false gloss to the whole original system of the Master. All historians agree in ascribing the corruptions of Christianity, and the consequent divisions into contending sects, to three kindred sources: 1st. To the influence of Pagan Philosophy; 2d. Opinions as to the Nature of Christ; 3d. Doctrines in regard to the human will and original sin—the latter two being metaphysical controversies, reduces them all to the same category—the influence of metaphysical philosophy. This has been the case from the beginning of the Christian era to the present day. The most learned and best of men, in all ages, have chimed in with the philosophy of the times, and have unwittingly perpetuated the difficulties, by continuing to attempt to reconcile the Christian doctrines with the preconceived philosophical system which they embraced in their preparatory education, or imperceptibly imbibed by association with like spirits; and, thus, all their views become tinctured with human speculations and sectarian dogmas. And the most unfortunate part of the matter is, that Philosophy usurps the province of Religion, and all disciples have to bow to its reveries, and read its mongrel medleys through the glasses of the founder of the sect.

All sects, my dear child, have become system-mongers, and every proselyte has to put on the sectarian spectacles; and, thus it is that false systems are promulgated under the noon-day light of modern Protestantism,—which professes to render man free, with the freedom wherewith the Gospel has made him free. Thus, the blind lead the blind; and man may not hope to attain to the full stature of an enlightened, Bible disciple, until he dash the sectarian spectacles from his eyes, and looks into the Inspired Volume through an independent medium—untrammeled—with impartial, child-like eyes.

I declaim not against Christian association in church capacity, for that is their duty—not against a name to distinguish themselves as a family of disciples—all that is right and fitting—I only protest against the abuses, arising from its perversion, which binds the mind in the bondage of error, excludes the light of truth, and condemns him to the perpetual darkness of party. Neither do I ascribe these sad defects in the professing Christian Church, to the legitimate organization of the primitive pattern; but to the errors of the prevailing philosophy, in each successive age, engrafted upon the Christian system and polluting its pure stream by the fatal confluence—the unhallowed wedlock. Being wise above the written word, has entailed all the difficulty; and this presumption must be cast aside—sundered forever—before the church can emancipate herself from this baneful, destructive thraldom.

Professor Tappan, who is a churchman, yet one who has an unbiased perception to analyze ecclesiastical history, and ingenuousness enough to publish irresistible deductions has very beautifully and pertinently pourtrayed the legitimate sphere and purpose of human philosophy, and, at the same time, has exposed its unwarrantable encroachments on the domain of theology; together with its pernicious tendency to subvert the pure doctrines of the Bible, in his Theses on the Unity of the Church; which you will find in the volume I herewith send to you, running from Th. XV. to XXIV. inclusive—commencing on page 620.

There you will find a graphic, though a lamentable picture—yet true, lamentable as it may appear. That state of things is to be perpetuated, by persevering in the systems which have engendered it, and which now weighs like a mighty incubus on free inquiry, or is to be removed, and only removed, by throwing off the spectacles of party—casting aside all creeds and commentators, and looking, continually, to the true source of light and truth, the pure, ungarbled, unmutilated Word of God.

Ponder well these admonitions. Look before you leap. Give not half a heart to the Lord, but let it be moulded thoroughly and completely by the Word of Truth.

Your affectionate Father.

THE MOTHER'S LAW.

"Forsake not the law of thy mother," is the text of a sermon preached by the Rev. Mr. Robbins, a few months ago, and more recently published, occasioned by the death of the mother of the late Judge Story. The following is an extract from it:—

"It is told to the honor of the late Lord Bacon, that he felt he could never repay his obligations to her who had directed his studies as well as nourished his virtues—that he delighted to speak of her through life, and in his will left the injunction, 'Bury me in St. Michael's church, for there was my mother buried.'

Let it also be told of the great American jurist, whose fame is as pure, and will be as enduring, as that of England's renowned Chancellor, that it was his request also, that the remains of his mother be laid close to his own, at Mount Auburn, that their dust might mingle in the grave, whose hearts had been so tenderly united on earth, and whose spirits should be as one in heaven.

Happy mother, who enjoyed the faithful obedience and abiding love of such a son! Happy son, who enjoyed the discipline and received the blessing of such a mother! Like the good and great of every age, he kept his mother's law, and it led him to honor. She, by her fidelity through the quiet years of his domestic education, helped to weave the crown of his mature and puclic life; and he, by his manly virtues, twined a perennial wreath to adorn her memory."

SUNSET.—I have thought a hundred times says Jean Paul, that if I were an angel, and had wings, and no specific gravity, I would soar just so far upward, that I could see the evening glimmer o'er the edge of the earth, and, at the same time against its motion on its axis, would hold myself always in such a position, that for a whole year long, I could look into the mild, broad eye of the evening. But at length I would sink down, drunk with splendor, like a bee o'er fed with honey, in sweet delirium on the grass.

SERFS OF RUSSIA.—It is generally known, that if a Russian noble buys an estate, he buys the serfs with it. Dr. Baird, in a lecture at N. York on Wednesday evening says—"If the serfs acquire wealth, they still remain in bondage. One of the nobles in Moscow has a serf who is richer than his master, but cannot purchase his freedom because the noble prides himself on the richest serf in Russia waiting at his table. The present Emperor desires to liberate this class, but is opposed by some of the Princes."

There is a devotion that resembles the blaze of a straw; but that which is spiritual resembles the fire on the Jewish altar—kindled from above, and which never expired. It is a stream fed by a living fountain; not a sudden torrent, however wide and impetuous at any one time, produced by the melting of the snow, or a sudden thunder-storm. "The water," says the Savior, "that I shall give him shall be in him a well of water springing up into everlasting life."

SABBATH TRACT OPERATIONS.

The American Sabbath Tract Society was organized in 1843, "to promote the scriptural observance of the Sabbath, in connection with the interests of vital godliness and sound morality." During the first five years of its existence, this object was sought mainly by the preparation and printing of tracts, which were furnished gratuitously for distribution by the missionaries of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association, and were sold at a cheap rate to auxiliary societies and individuals who desired to distribute them in different parts of the country. By this mode of operation, the tracts were quite extensively circulated, and many persons were brought to know and observe the Bible Sabbath. For two or three years past, however, the friends of the Society have felt that they ought not to content themselves with simply furnishing tracts to the missionaries and those who may volunteer to distribute them at their own expense, but that, in addition to this, some more enlarged and direct mode of reaching the public ought to be adopted. Accordingly, at the meeting of the Society in September last, the Board were instructed to employ colporteurs at such points and on such thoroughfares as they might deem most inviting, and thus to secure a more general circulation of the tracts. We are happy to state, for the information and encouragement of the friends of this measure, that the Board have entered upon the work thus laid out for them with a zeal somewhat commensurate with its importance.

The city of New York was thought to be an inviting field, and accordingly a colporteur was stationed there, who has found plenty of business. On the numerous steamboats which leave the city every day for the East, the North, and the South, may be met persons of all classes, bound to nearly every section of the country. A very little observation enables the colporteur, in passing round among these persons, to discover who will be likely to make a good use of his tracts and papers, and to such he tenders them gratuitously. Of course their presentation often leads to conversation, in which the views of both the distributer and the receiver are brought out, and the popular objections to the Sabbath answered. Various, and sometimes amusing, are the expressions which the tracts bring forth. One man is very glad to meet a distributer of Sabbath publications, and bids him God-speed; but soon learning that they are in favor of the seventh day, he shakes his head, expresses doubts of the usefulness of such publications, and concludes by declining to take them, because his mind is already made up, and he don't care to have it unsettled. Another man has always thought the seventh day ought to be kept, and has more than once told his minister so, but he could not induce him to entertain the subject, although he could give no scriptural authority for neglecting the seventh day, or for keeping the first day in its stead; however, he is glad to get some publications on the subject, which he will read and distribute. By supplying such persons, and also the tables of the various boats, publications may easily be sent to the most inaccessible points, where the living witness might never go. And then there are ships sailing every day for distant ports, and often the passengers are glad to get hold of any thing, the reading and discussion of which will break the monotony of the voyage. Thus the city of New York furnishes a field where one can do a great deal of work in a short time.

The villages and towns on the line of the railroad from Boston to Albany, were also thought to afford a good field for tract distribution, and a colporteur was appointed to occupy that field for a while. A third colporteur was directed to visit the towns and cities, west of Albany, on the line of the railroad to Buffalo, not only supplying the residents of those places, but occasionally supplying those who pass through them by the cars. A fourth colporteur has been designated to the southern tier of counties in New York. A fifth has been appointed, whose labors are mostly directed to the State of New Jersey. The Board have other fields of labor under consideration, which they intend to occupy at as early a day as they consistently can.

This sketch is sufficient to show the friends of the Tract Society that their agents are not altogether negligent of the trust committed to them. With a deep conviction of the importance of tract distribution—a conviction grounded upon the promises of God, and the facts which have come to light in years past—they desire to put forth such efforts for the dissemination of the truth as will clear them from guilt in the matter. What the result will be, is known only to God, whose command is, "Cast thy bread upon the waters," and whose promise is, "My word shall not return to me void." In view of such a command and such a promise, they do not hesitate to go forward, confidently expecting to be blessed of God, and sustained by their brethren.

Miss Marietta Smith, the young lady who so mysteriously disappeared from New York a few weeks since, and about whom so much has been said in the newspapers, has been found in Boston. It seems, that upon leaving this city she went to Boston, where she remained one day; then she went to Berwick, Me., where she remained several days in the family of a partial acquaintance; thence she returned to Boston, and commenced learning the dress-making business. It is now said that she left on account of a family difficulty, she thinking that her friends claimed too large a share of her salary for teaching.

CHURCH AND STATE IN FRANCE.

Under the old dynasty in France, the ministers of every denomination recognized by the law, received a partial support from the State treasury. But this order of things has always been opposed by a portion of the Protestants, and they have lately used their utmost endeavors to bring about an entire separation of the Church from the State. The subject was presented to the National Assembly, while deliberating upon the new Constitution; but we regret to learn, that the proposition for separation was not responded to in that body. The clause of the constitution, as reported by the committee, was to the effect that every person should have the right of professing freely his own religion, and that the ministers of the denominations recognized by law should have the right to receive support from the State. M. Leroux moved in favor of the suppression of the provision for the payment by the State of ministers of any denomination. The existing arrangement, which was thus incorporated in the proposed constitution was, he said, founded upon the concordat, which was a creation of hypocrisy, the sole purpose of which was to make of religion a political instrument, and he trusted that the clergy would comprehend, that it was for the interest of the Church as well as of the State, that the relation between them should be abolished. The clergy could not be independent while they were in the pay of the State. There was also a crying injustice in forcing citizens to contribute to the expenses of a denomination to which they did not belong. Every denomination should be supported by the free contributions of its members. Abolish all public salaries to clergy, and give an equal liberty to all sects. Each would then engage more zealously in its own work, and the truth would profit by their emulation. This was the reasoning of M. Leroux, and one might suppose that it would have some effect. If it did not, it was not because it lacked force. M. Coquerel followed him with a statement called forth by one of his observations, to the effect, that the Protestants of France had always contended for precisely that liberty and independence of the State which were the objects of M. Leroux's motion. After remarks from three or four other representatives, the motion was lost.

HOME MISSIONS—NO. 2.

The increasing population of the great West, calls upon us, in common with others, to establish among them ministers of God, who will preach to them the Gospel of Christ. We are aware that the task is not a desirable one. There are many impediments arising to the mind of a young man, who thinks of engaging in the work of the ministry. While inquiring after duty, he links with it his interest, ease, and popularity; and these, all together, sway the mind to the conclusion, that he had better teach, labor, or trade, until, in the providence of God, a call is given him by some of the old churches, where he can live with friends, and in some degree be useful in building up the Church of God. Brethren, shall we not begin to pray, that men may be raised up among us, who will go out, call together, and build up churches, and not wait for churches to call them.

Ever since foreign missions have been established, young men have been more ready to enter upon a foreign field, than to traverse the western wilds. We do not at all wonder at this; we are aware that the home mission is the most of a self-denying work. The Church has never viewed it in this light, but such is our view. Let the Church think and feel right on this subject, and more would then be willing to embark in this heaven-approved enterprise. The foreign missionary begins in his youth to prepare for his future field of labor; and it is generally known, so that in all his preparation he is identified with the Church, and they rejoice with him in view of his future prospects. But the more secluded and unpretending, have none of these encouragements; they live almost unknowing and unknown; and when they engage in the work, they look for a field of labor, and by the dint of effort they succeed in doing something with God's help, and become useful in the world. The foreign missionaries are sure of being amply sustained, and on their starting out, the benevolence of friends is tested in preparing for them an outfit. Previous to their starting, the periodicals give publicity to it, and the field they are intending to occupy. And when they have departed, their names, with the plaudits of the Christian world, are chronicled by the religious, literary, and political press, throughout the nation. This is as it should be. But how is it with the home missionary? He goes to his work with no such encouragements. No public parade; no newspaper gives intelligence of his departure. He goes empty-handed; no boxes of goods or luxuries—no library of books, or bills of exchange upon which to draw. But he goes on a noble errand, and Heaven will richly reward him. The foreign missionary has no fears of being forsaken, or his support being withheld; and if he wishes to abandon the field, his expenses are borne, while he returns to his friends. But in the home mission this is not expected; after a few years their support is withheld for the want of funds, and they turn their attention to agriculture or other employments. The foreign missionary locates with his family; generally, in a city, where he can easily obtain all the comforts of life, and his preaching station is generally in his own house, or near by. The home missionary locates his family in a new settlement, where the conveniencies of life are few and hard to be obtained; and he leaves them among strangers, to see them only occasionally, and then more as a transient visitor than as one of the family. There are men traveling and preaching who do not see their families oftener than once a quarter, and receive for their services not more than one hundred or one hundred and fifty dollars a year. Such ministers I have known to carry in their saddle-bags a peck of beans, a piece of pork, a roll of butter, some groceries, and small articles of dry goods, sixty miles, and glad to get them on such conditions. The foreign missionary is with his children, and has the government of them, until they are of sufficient age to go from home, when they are taken by friends, or by the denomination, and educated for future usefulness in life. They are obliged to part with them, but with the assurance that they are among kind friends. Was it ever thus with any of the home missionaries? Gladly would they part with their children to be thus cared for; but with the rude and wild inhabitants on the field of their father's labor, they must live, until, by their own industry, they obtain a stinted education.

Many a foreign missionary falls a sacrifice to the climate after laboring only a short time in the field; but the widow and her family receive the sympathies of all, and are not turned away empty. Many a young man has been cut down by death in our own country, worn out by over labor, and the denomination or acquaintances have hardly thought of inquiring after those of his family who are left behind.

Brethren have been getting rich, and accumulating for their children, while he who has been spending his time, and strength, and life, to bestow upon them spiritual things, dies poor, is buried in some lonely and secluded spot, and not a monument marks the spot where the man of God lies. These are not fictions; they are sad realities. When, oh! when will we learn to view them in their true light, and engage in the work of home missions with the spirit and energy that would be becoming to Christians professing godliness? Not till then shall we see Zion triumph. W. B. GILLETT.

Protestantism in Italy.—Efforts have been made of late to introduce Protestantism into Italy, and even into Rome itself. That these efforts have been not altogether in vain, may be inferred from the fact, that the Pope has recently taken the opportunity of the centenary of the death of a noted Saint, to make a public declaration of his hostility to Protestantism. The following is his language:—

"It is distressing to see that in our day men have been found audacious enough to attempt to introduce, by thousands and tens of thousands of accomplices, Protestantism into all Catholic Italy, yea, even into the center of Christendom itself. Whilst professing the most ardent love for Italian nationality, they employ in its service an abominable means, directly calculated to destroy it. At the moment when Germany, animated by a similar spirit, confesses that religious differences are the greatest obstacle to the attainment of the end in view, so much so that the very Protestants form projects of union, there are in Italy men who, not afraid to cause an immense religious scandal, as well as political danger, pretend to aim at National Unity by means of the pestilential seed of separation from the unity of the faith. Such is the blindness of passion. Let us pray God to dispel this darkness, and confiding in the divine promises, let us bear in mind that the gates of hell shall not prevail against the Church."

Cheap Postage.—The Cheap Postage Association, recently established in this city, has been actively engaged in preparing for the present session of Congress, and it is expected that petitions and remonstrances will flow in upon that body in such abundance as to make an impression. The most important reforms which they propose are—First, the repeal of the obnoxious measure of the 'retaliation bill' of last session upon foreign letters and newspapers, which bears so heavily upon all classes of merchants and individuals, as well as the newspaper press. Secondly, the abolition of carriers' fees in the principal cities, and the adoption of the principle which has always prevailed in England, of delivering letters as directed at the national postage rate, by carriers employed and paid by the Post-Office Department. Thirdly, the abolition of the pre paid charge of three cents upon transient newspapers, it being a partial tax upon individuals. Great exertions will also be used to urge the entire abolition of the franking privilege, and sufficient statistics will be brought forward in a pamphlet now in progress, to demonstrate, that if these reforms are adopted, postages could be reduced to two cents for all distances, pre-paid, by stamps—would produce a much larger amount than is now collected, and make the Post-Office Department establish new routes in sections of the country that are rapidly rising into importance, which are now without mail facilities.

Greek Chapel in London.—A Greek Chapel for the accommodation of the members of the Greek communion resident in London, is in course of erection, and rapidly advancing to completion in London Wall. There are about thirty Greek commercial houses, and connected with them a considerable number of Greek families in London, for whom this Church accommodation has become necessary.

The Promise Redeemed.—One of our exchanges says, that when Rev. Henry Ward Beecher was invited to leave Indiana and accept the pastoral charge of the Plymouth Church in Brooklyn, one of the arguments used to reconcile his friends there to the loss, was, that he could do more for the West by procuring Eastern aid for their enterprises, than by remaining to engage personally in them. One of these enterprises was Wabash College, of which Mr. Beecher had been a trustee and a principal supporter. Dr. White, the President of this college, recently visited Brooklyn to collect funds for its benefit. One of the first places he went to, was, of course, the Plymouth church. In presenting his case, he reminded them of the above argument, and added, that as they had taken away the corner stone of the college, they were at liberty to repair that damage, by giving ten thousand dollars, which would be sufficient to endow the first Professorship. The church and congregation responded heartily to the call, and several individuals of their number having subscribed $9,780, the rest was made up by a general collection during the services on Thanksgiving day.

Sweden.—We learn from the London Primitive Church Magazine, that the Rev. A. P. Foster, of the Baptist Church in Copenhagen, recently passed over into Sweden on a missionary tour, and baptized five persons, and organized a little church under the care of a brother who had been previously baptized at Hamburg. In speaking of this event, the first instance of a believer's baptism in Sweden, Mr. Oncken says:

"I rejoice exceedingly in the glad tidings which brother Foster conveys to you. I could fain have wished to have been with our brother on the night when the first Swedish believers were baptized into Christ's death; the account brings so forcibly back to my mind the first immersions at Copenhagen, Bremen, and a number of other places to which God called me in his gracious Providence. Let us now pray much for our new Swedish brethren; they will need it, as doubtless they will be called to endure a great fight of affliction ere long. How comforting to know that He, under whose banner they have enlisted, is not only King of Zion, but also King of Kings.

Conscientious, very.—The following fact, illustrating the conscientiousness of Romish priests, was stated by Rev. Mr. King, during his visit at Cincinnatti. We are indebted for it to the Presbyterian of the West:—

"A Roman clergyman in Ireland, with whom he was personally acquainted, recently died. In his will he bequeathed to another priest the sum of one hundred pounds, on condition that he would agree to say masses to that amount, at two shillings and six-pence each, for certain persons from whom he had received that amount to pay for masses for themselves, but for whom he had neglected to say the masses. This will was recorded in court, and thus the fact became known."

The Jews at Vienna.—According to the Ami de la Religion, the Austrian capital swarms with Jews. The new radical print, entitled Wiener Allgemeine Zeitung, is said to be Jewish property, and written almost entirely by Jews. It assails the Romish Church and hierarchy with great bitterness. It is to the influence of this print, and of the party by which it is supported, and with which the so-called German Catholics are accused of making common cause, that the nomination of a Jew to the Vice-Presidency of the National Assembly is ascribed.

English Estimate of Liberian Affairs.—A letter to Anson G. Phelps, Esq., of N. York, dated London, November, 23, 1848, says:—"On the first of December, President Robberts of the Republic of Liberia, wife and sister, expect to embark from England to Africa in a government ship, which is put in requisition by the liberality of the British Government, to convey them home. Their reception here has been most gratifying, and all things pleasantly settled. Their daughter is now with them, but we are to take her back with us tomorrow to "The Elms" boarding school, near Liverpool.

Recompense for Slaves.—It is said that the French Government will pay the late owners of slaves in Guadaloupe, at the rate of about seventy dollars per head, excepting for children under five years, and those above sixty. This will be received by them in ten years, at seven dollars each year.

The North British Review for November, being the first No. of Vol. 5, American Edition, has been issued by Leonard Scott & Co. It contains articles on Juvenile Criminals, the Historical Foundation of the Church of Rome, the Life of Keats, the Authorship of the Letters of Junius, the works of Thomas Reid, Charles Lamb and his Friends, the Castlereagh Papers, and the State and Prospects of Germany.

Three new missionaries for Wisconsin, and one for Alabama, were a short time since commissioned by the Episcopal Board of Domestic Missions.

In the month of November, a single church in New England has paid into the treasury of the American Baptist Missionary Union, five thousand dollars.

The Jesuits who were driven from Rome last spring, and who subsequently sought an asylum at Unwok, in Devonshire, the celebrated mansion of Lord Clifford, have arrived in the United States.

Miss Fleureau, of London, has recently presented to the London Missionary Society, funds to the amount of $31,000, for the permanent support of a Mission in China.

PETITION AGAINST CHAPLAINS, &c.

In the Senate of the United States, on the 11th inst., Mr. Badger presented the following petition or remonstrance, which was read and ordered printed. We publish it, not only as a curiosity, but as significant of the spirit of the times:—

The Ministers and Delegates representing the Churches which compose the Kehukee Primitive Baptist Association, assembled in conference with the Baptist Church at Great Swamp, Pitt county, N. C., the Saturday before the first Saturday in Oct., 1848:—

To the Honorable the Congress of the United States:

Viewing with distrust the rapid strides of priestcraft now being made in the the United States, and dreading for themselves and posterity that worst of all scourges, an ecclesiastical despotism, your memorialists most respectfully beg leave to submit to your honorable body this their memorial, petition, and remonstrance.

1. They beg and entreat that you will, in your wisdom, abolish all laws, provisions, or resolutions, now in force by the authority of your honorable body, "respecting the establishment of religion," whereby Chaplains of Congress, the army, navy, and other public stations, are employed by the General Government to exercise their religious functions, and are paid for their services out of the public treasury, and whereby religious teachers are employed and religious schools established at the expense of Government.

2. Your memorialists respectfully suggest, that the Christian religion is of Divine authority, that it came down from heaven to earth unceremoniously, asking no favors of and begging no emoluments from earthly sanhedrims, senates, principalities or powers; that it came to man contrary to the will of men, of flesh and blood, but according to the will of God, and having made its way to near the middle of the nineteenth century through persecution, and being upheld and supported by God Almighty, needeth not now the aid of human laws for its farther existence or advancement, but will prosper as heretofore, in defiance of human enactments, opposition, or persecutions; and that all attempts to promote the happiness of man by uniting it with human governments, in bygone days, have signally failed, and served but to establish an ecclesiastical despotism, totally at variance with the simple laws, mild reign, and spiritual kingdom of the King of Kings and Lord of Lords, who worketh all things after the pleasure of his own will.

Your memorialists, therefore, for the sake of Christ, the purity of his religion, and the honor of his cause, as well as the happiness and liberty of themselves, those whom they represent, and thousands yet unborn, beg you to legislate no farther on the subject of religion, but entreat you to undo what they humbly conceive had been prematurely, wrongfully, and unconstitutionally done. All ministers should attend the heavenly injunction recorded in the second chapter of the first epistle of Paul the apostle to Timothy, to "pray and intercede for kings, and for all that are in authority;" and this can be done as effectually in the closet or in family prayer, either in America, Europe, Asia, or Africa, for the well-being of the American Congress or its members, as if the minister were in the immediate presence of those for whose special benefit he may intercede, since the Creator and preserver of mankind is an infinite and omnipotent being. And, in conclusion, they suggest that, if ministers cannot preach and pray for the army and navy, for Congress, and the Indian tribes, for the love of Christ, without conferring with flesh and blood, and a salary in filthy lucre, stipulated and agreed upon before services rendered, then they cannot, acceptably to God, do so with this salary; for such constitutes them hirelings to all intents and purposes, in whom there is no dependence, and in whose counsels there is no safety.

Wm. HAYMAN Moderator.
By order: Josh. D. Biggs, Clerk.
Oct. 2, 1848.

An Anti-Slavery Resolution.—The following joint resolution was presented to the Legislature of Indiana on the second day of the session recently commenced:—

Whereas, The people of Indiana regard the institution of Human Slavery as a great moral and political evil, and Whereas, The people of the United States have recently acquired from the Republic of Mexico a large amount of territory, which is now free, and which, in the opinion of this General Assembly, ought forever to remain free; and Whereas, It is the opinion of this General Assembly that Congress possesses the power under the Constitution to prohibit the extension of Slavery into such territory, and that it is right and proper that such power be exercised by Congress. Therefore, be it

Resolved, by the General Assembly of the State of Indiana, That our Senators in Congress be, and they are hereby instructed, and our Representatives requested, to use their influence and vote in favor of the passage of a law providing that there shall be neither Slavery nor involuntary servitude in any of said territory, otherwise than in the punishment of crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

The Boston Chronotype says that the Treasurer of the Committee appointed to solicit funds and conduct the defense of the persons indicted for transporting slaves from Washington, acknowledges to have received from Gerritt Smith, Esq., of Peterboro', N. Y., an additional sum of two hundred dollars for that purpose. This, with the liberal donation of five hundred dollars formerly made by him, forms much the greatest amount yet contributed to that object; and has enabled the Committee thus far to sustain the cause of humanity. As the amount hitherto received is yet much below that required for the successful issue of the trial, it is earnestly hoped that this noble example will be followed by the affluent friends of freedom.

A colporteur in the West writes: "In one small county I found two hundred and fifty families without the Bible. Riding to-day through a rather thickly settled neighborhood, I found seven contiguous families without a copy of the Bible.

General Intelligence.

LAST WEEK'S CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The Senate.

On Second-day, Mr. Douglass reported a bill to make California and New Mexico a State; read twice and laid on the table. A memorial from Mr. Aspinwall was presented to both Houses, asking contract for transporting Government property across the contemplated railroad over the Isthmus of Panama.

On Third-day, nearly forty adverse reports were made from various committees, on petitions, &c., presented at the last session, all relating to unimportant matters, and all were agreed to. A resolution yesterday offered by Mr. Bradbury, setting apart Fifth-day of each week for the consideration of private bills, was adopted.

On Fourth-day, a petition was presented by Mr. Benton, of Mo., from the citizens of New Mexico, praying Congress to legislate in favor of the establishment of a Territorial Government. The petitioners in their prayer protest against the admission of Slavery, and wish the enactment of no slave laws. Mr. Benton said that the petition was reasonable in its character and ought to be granted. Mr. Calhoun declared that the petition was insolent and unreasonable. Mr. Benton rose and replied to Mr. Calhoun very warmly. Mr. Calhoun rejoined in some animated remarks. A flare-up was threatened. Mr. Rusk, of Texas, and Mr. Westcott, of Fla., condemned the petition. Mr. Westcott opposed the petition, and pronounced it an imposture and ungenuine. This view of its character he briefly supported by arguments which he adduced. Mr. Clayton, of Del., said that the petitioners had a right to offer the petition, provided it was not disrespectful. Mr. Calhoun reiterated his previous remark, that the petition was insolent and ought not to be received. Mr. Benton replied with much warmth, and was very dogmatic. Finally the motion to print was put, and the yeas and nays were ordered and decided in the affirmative. Yeas 33; Nays 14. The Petition was then referred to the Committee on Territories, and ordered to be printed.

On Fifth-day, Mr. Benton reported favorably upon the memorial of Messrs. Aspinwall, Stephens, and Chauncy. The bill proposes to contract with them for twenty years for the transportation of Government property and troops across the Isthmus of Panama. The contract is proposed to be made as soon as the railroad is under way. Mr. Benton moved to make the bill the special order of the day for Monday, which was agreed to. Resolutions upon the death of Mr. Sims were received from the House, and after the usual proceedings in such cases, the Senate adjourned over to this week.

House of Representatives.

On Second-day, much time was spent in discussing the best mode of having the debates of the House printed. A resolution was adopted, inquiring of the President the cause of the detention of American citizens as prisoners in Ireland. Adjourned.

On Third-day, a resolution of inquiry was adopted in reference to a survey of the mineral lands on Lake Superior. Mr. Wentworth offered a resolution instructing the Judiciary Committee to inquire into the expediency of making all Government Officers elective by the people; adopted. A resolution of inquiry was adopted as to the expediency of a survey of New Mexico and California, and securing by law the application of the mineral wealth of those territories to the extinguishment of the Public Debt. Mr. Meade offered a resolution instructing the Territorial Committee to inquire into the expediency of reporting a bill transferring to Texas, agreeably to the terms of annexation, the territory lying east of the Rio Grande; adopted.

On Fourth-day, Mr. Palfrey, of Ms., asked leave to introduce a bill for repealing all acts of Congress passed for establishing and maintaining Slavery in the District of Columbia. On this the yeas and nays were demanded, and decided in the negative, by yeas 69, nays 85. Mr. Goggin on motion called up his Postage Bill, which was made the order of the day for the 3d of January. Mr. Root, of O., offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Territories to prepare bills for establishing governments in California and New Mexico, so framed as to provide for the exclusion of Slavery from said Territories; passed by a vote of 107 to 80.

On Fifth-day, little else was done than to hear the announcement of Mr. Sims' death.

Sixth-day was devoted to Private Bills. After a session of some two hours, the House adjourned over to this week.

Mexican Affairs.—The following extract from a N. O. paper will show how things go now-a-days in Mexico:—

The news from the insurgents of Sierra Gordo is again deplorable. We might give a column of their exploits in attacking the haciendas, killing and plundering the inhabitants. Bustamente dispatched a force against them from Queretaro, but they took refuge at once in inaccessible fastnesses, losing only a few men in killed and wounded. The Government was about to reinforce Bustamente, and there would seem to be need of it, as serious fears had been entertained lest the insurgents should gain possession of the City of Queretaro.

Durango is overrun by Indians—said to be Camanches. The small villages can make no resistance to their ruthless foes. The road from the City of Durango to the port of Mazatlan is in their possession. A valuable commerce is carried on by this route. Men of character and note are often killed by these savages.

Three robbers were lately taken on the road to Mexico. They resisted, and two of them were mortally wounded before taken.

Robbers in Mexico are at this moment, according to the papers, more rampant than ever, bidding defiance to all the forces of the Republic and the Department.

There are now on the stocks at New York two of the largest merchant ships in the world. The first and largest is 204 feet in length, custom house measurement, extreme breadth 43 feet, and depth of hold 28 1-2 feet. She will have three decks, a poop, and top-gallant forecastle.

FOREIGN NEWS.

The steamship Niagara reached Boston on the 16th inst., bringing Liverpool papers to the 4th.

There has been a revolution at Rome, which has reduced the authority of the Pope to a nullity, compelling him to appoint a ministry acceptable to the revolutionists. The French Government has dispatched four steam frigates, carrying a brigade of 1,500 men, to Civita-Vecchia, for the purpose of securing the liberty of His Holiness and respect for his person. Paris advices of Dec. 1, state that the Pope had left Rome secretly, and was on his way to France.

The war in Hungary occupies everybody's thoughts. A numerous army of Imperialists is about to enter Hungary, and the German papers state that the Hungarians will give them a warm reception.

The execution of Dr. Beecher, and Dr. Jellinck, for their participation in the late events at Vienna, has been officially announced. Beecher was an Englishman. Martial law has been relaxed into the more modified form which prevails in Germany before the usual tribunals.

The Frankfort journals state that a plot for a republican and socialist rising, and for the assassination of several members of the German Parliament, has been discovered in that city.

As the period approaches for the election of President of France, the excitement daily increases. The interpellation and explanation which took place in the National Assembly, terminated in the complete triumph of Cavaignac, as far as regards the declared sentiments of the Chamber. A majority of 503 to 34 carried a vote of confidence that General Cavaignac had deserved well of his country. His prospects for the presidency are thought to be good.

From Ireland, we learn that the Government has at length resolved to set at liberty a number of state prisoners, whose conduct in the late crisis was very conspicuous. From the Dublin jails—Dr. West, Mr. Timothy Dexter, Mr. Edward Trouton, and Messrs. Ryan and Bergen, (the two latter natives of America,) have been discharged. Both Mr. Ryan and Mr. Bergen are ordered to leave Ireland forthwith, under pain of farther imprisonment. Mr. Henry Law, of Cork, has been set at liberty, and Mr. Halpin, late Secretary of the Irish League, has been, at his own request, transferred from Naas to Kilmainham. Mr. Hurnett, confined in Limerick jail, has also been released. Mr. O'Brien continues indisposed, and is at present confined to his bed. His ailment proceeds from a severe attack of lumbago, a very painful, but not dangerous disease.

In England and Scotland the cholera appears to be on the decrease.

The news of the death of Ibrahim Pacha is confirmed.

St. Helena Advices to October 1, have come to hand. Several slavers had been taken into St. Helena as prizes. One had no less than 345 slaves on board.

SUMMARY.

There were seven persons drowned in the Mohawk River at St. Johnsville, Mont. county Dec. 10th, at 7 o'clock in ihe morning. Six of them are Iiishmen from East or West Troy, and the remaining one is a Dutchman who attended the ferry. It appears that the Irishman came here from Troy on Saturday evening in the cars, and stopped at Peter Price,s until Monday, and were going over the river for the purpose of obtaining work on the canal. The water being high the boat capsized, and they were drowned before any assistance could be rendered them.

The Utica Gazette says that the police of Waterville, N. Y., have recently arrested several members of a family by the name of Loomis, charged with having been engaged for a long time in a system of thefts, by which they have collected large quantities of valuable goods. They are a father and several sons, and have been reputed wealthy farmers, owning farms in Oswego and Waterville. It is alledged that they have practiced their thefts along the line between the two places, occupying their respective farm-houses as rendezvous, and that a brother in Vermont, (who has or will soon be arrested,) is also in connection with them.

In Talbot county (Md.,) Court, Ben Thomas, slave of W. H. Goat, was convicted on four indictments of enticing slaves to run away, and sentenced to the penitentiary for fifteen years and six months. James E. Work, a white man, formerly of Baltimore, was convicted on two indictments of abducting slaves, and three other indictments against him for similar offences, were removed to Queen Ann's County Court to be tried.

The prospect of a water communication between the Atlantic and Pacific oceans appears to be most favorable. The wealthy and enterprising English house in Mexico, Manning & Mackintosh, have undertaken to unite the two oceans by a canal across the isthmus of Tehuantepec. A temporary road is now being made for the transportation of materials. The importance of this work cannot be fully estimated.

The will of General James Taylor, of Kentucky, disposing of his immense estate, was lately rejected by a county court on presentation for probate. Yet it is said that no litigation will ensue among the heirs. They have emancipated his slaves, forty in number. The aged and children are provided for.

Gevernor Young, of New York, respited Hays, convicted of murder, until the 21st of January, which falls on Sunday. He will have to be again respited, or executed on that day—a very unusual thing. Hays committed the murder in a state of delirium tremens, and his sentence may be commuted so imprisonment for life.

It is said that the government of Brazil are making efforts to break up the slave-trade. The effort meets with strong opposition on the part of some among the wealthy residents, both Brazilian and Portuguese.

Robert C. Matherson, one of the editors of the Genius of Liberty, published in Vera Cruz during its occupation by our army, has obtained judgment at New Orleans for ten thousand dollars against Colonel Wilson, then civil and military governor of Vera Cruz, as damages for his arrest and imprisonment, and being sent out of the country, for an alledged libelous article which appeared in the paper at that time.

The City of Boston lately purchased in Weston, near the line of the Worcester Railroad, a gravel hill, two acres in extent, and in some places forty feet high, for one thousand dollars, the land to revert to the original owner as soon as the gravel is removed. The gravel is to be brought into Boston by the Worcester Railroad for the purpose of filling up the twelve or fifteen acres of City Flats, on the "Back Bay," so called.

The Bunker Hill Aurora gives an account of a scamp who visited several towns in Middlesex County, and succeeded in passing himself off upon several credulous persons as their long lost brother or relative. His game was to live a week or two with his victims and borrow or beg of them all the money and valuables he could. He was highly successful, until he happened to light upon the wrong customer in Malden, who blocked his game by taking him before a magistrate. He was finally lodged in Cambridge jail, where he now remains.

The Philadelphia Republic says that the colored people who reside in Moyamensing, are afraid to go home at night for fear of being stuck with a bowie-knife, or knocked down and rendered powerless by a slung-shot. A gang of white scoundrels infest that district, who seem to sport with the life and blood of colored people, regardless of age or sex.

The Chronotype says that the President's Message was transmitted entire from Baltimore to St. Louis by Messrs. O'Reilly, and appeared in print at the latter place, one thousand miles distant from Washington, twenty-four hours after its delivery. This is probably the greatest telegraphic feat ever performed in this or any other country.

A correspondent of the Rochester (N. Y.) Advertiser mentions a case where chloroform was successfully used for delirium tremens. The jaws of the patient were set, and his case was pronounced hopeless. As an experiment, chloroform was used, it worked admirably, and the man got well.

One of the members of the New York Electoral College did not attend the meeting, and his place was supplied by the election of another. The reason of his non-attendance was that he had promised his wife he would never hold an office, and she being a strict constructionist, would not let him off.

The Chronotype says that Col. Whittlesey who lately visited Raving Lake, upon the northern border of Minesota, upon a government survey, states that a species of wild rice grows in the water of that region, quite equal to the rice of the southern States. It is gathered and used extensively by the Indians as an article of food.

John Brown has just recovered a verdict of $9,336 against the Mohawk and Hudson (N. Y.) Railroad Company, for damages by flood to his lands in 1832, by the construction of certain embankments. The suit has been pending for fourteen years.

Dr. Boisson, a distinguished French physician, says that a vapor bath is a sure cure for that awful malady, hydrophobia. The virus escapes in the perspiration. Dogs and other animals in which this disease originates, never perspire.

The grading of the Erie Railroad is now completed from Binghamton west to Owego, and is paid for. The iron will be sent up as soon as the road is opened to Binghamton. This opening is fixed, as we understand, for the 27th inst., and the inhabitants of Binghamton are making great preparations to give the Company a hospitable reception. A train with 600 passengers went from Binghamton to Lanesboro on Friday.

The excitement in regard to gold-finding in California is somewhat allayed, but many expeditions are being organized for visiting this El Dorado. We hear of them in all directions. No less than four vessels are being fitted out at Sag Habor, and it is calculated that more goods will arrive in California in the next six months, than will supply the inhabitants three times over.

Capt. Kennard, of ship Goodwin, from Calcutta, last from St. Helena, October 12, reports that a brig, with upward of 400 slaves, arrived at St. Helena, in October, having been captured by H. B. M. ship Britomart, on the West coast of Africa, without colors or papers.

John C. Devereux died in Utica on the 11th inst., at the age of 74. He was one of the earliest settlers of Utica, where he was universally esteemed. He was a native of County Wexford, Ireland.

Benjamin Kendall died at the advanced age of 100 years, on Thursday last, at Milestown, a short distance from Philadelphia. He prided himself on being a servant to General Washington.

Several new papers, started n the city of Mexico, have for their titles, El Punal de Bruto (the dagger of Brutus,) El Fantasma Vengador (the Spirit of vengeance,) El Infierno (Hell,) and others with no less terrible titles.

A farmer in Genesee county, New York, states that his whole last year's crop of corn cost him but nine cents and three quarters a bushel, including the interest on the value of the land.

A young man recently fell from the Painted Rock, on the Mississippi, a descent of two hundred and fifty feet, without material injury.

The Salem Advertiser publishes a list of vessels belonging to that port, from which it appears that the whole number, large and small, is 154, viz: ships 21, barques 29, brigs 45, schooners 45, sloops 3, and yachts 11; all of which amount to about 30,000 tons measurement.

The Governor of Missouri appointed "Thursday, Nov. 24," as a day of Thanksgiving. As Thursday was the 23d, the people were at some loss which day to observe. In St. Louis, Thursday was preferred to Friday for Thanksgiving, and observed accordingly.

Mr. Colton has written to the Journal of Commerce, that he knows seven men who worked seven weeks at the California mines, and obtained 275 pounds of pure gold. He says a million of dollars per month, are now produced from these mines.

On the 17th inst., the New York and Erie Railroad will be opened from Port Jervis to Binghampton, an additional distance of 130 miles, making in all, upwards of 200 miles from Piermont. The new part of the road, by far the most difficult and expensive on the whole route, has been graded and built in a litmore than two years.

We see it stated, that on the third instant, Archibald Pebbles, a man sixty years of age, hung himself, in the lower part of East Hartford, Conn. He had been turned out of the house of one of his sons, and having no home of his own, thus put an end to his existence.

From a letter published in a Montreal paper, it appears that four of the men with the expedition in search of Sir John Franklin, having lost their way in a snow-storm, have perished.

BRITISH PERIODICAL LITERATURE.

REPUBLICATION OF

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor, and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Tory, Whig, and Radical—"Blackwood" and the "London Quarterly" are Tory; the "Edinburgh Review" Whig; and the "Westminster Review" Radical. The "North British Review" is more of a religious character, having been originally edited by Dr. Chalmers, and now, since his death, being conducted by his son-in-law, Dr. Hanna, associated with Sir David Brewster. Its literary character is of the very highest order. The "Westminster," though reprinted under that title only, is published in England under the title of the "Foreign Quarterly and Westminster," it being in fact a union of the two Reviews formerly published and reprinted under separate titles. It has, therefore, the advantage, by this combination, of uniting in one work the best features of both as heretofore issued.

The above Periodicals are reprinted in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals, Blackwood's Magazine being an exact facsimile of the Edinburgh edition.

TERMS.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For any one of the four Reviews, | $3 00 | per annum. |
| For any two, " | 5 00 | " |
| For any three, " | 7 00 | " |
| For all four of the Reviews, | 8 00 | " |
| For Blackwood's Magazine, | 3 00 | " |
| For Blackwood and three Reviews, | 9 00 | " |
| For Blackwood and the four Reviews, | 10 00 | " |

Payments to be made in all cases in advance.

CLUBBING.

Four copies of any or all of the above works will be sent to one address, on payment of the regular subscription for three—the fourth copy being gratis.

EARLY COPIES.

Our late arrangement with the British publishers of Blackwood's Magazine, secures to us early sheets of that work, by which we are enabled to place the entire number in the hands of subscribers before any portion of it can be reprinted in any of the American Journals. For this and other advantages secured to our subscribers, we pay so large a consideration, that we may be compelled to raise the price of the Magazine.

☞ Something may therefore be gained by subscribing early.

 Remittances and communications should be always addressed, post-paid or franked, to the Publishers,

THE YOUTH'S CABINET
REV. FRANCIS C. WOODWORTH
EDITOR.

THE Fourth Volume of this juvenile magazine commences with January, 1849. It appears on new type, and a corresponding improvement will be made throughout. Excelsior is the motto both of the editor and publisher. It is their determination that the Youth's Cabinet shall continue to be acknowledged as the best magazine of its class in America. Yearly subscription, same as heretofore, $1 only. Now is the time to subscribe. Specimens sent gratis.

Holiday Number.—The January number, now ready for delivery, is prepared with especial reference to the holidays. It contains the richest and most varied table of contents, and is embellished with a steel vignette—the Pet Fawn—engraved at a cost of $200, besides upward of twenty beautiful wood engravings. Single copies 12½ cents—10 copies for $1. Send on you orders by mail.

Bound Volumes.—Three volumes are now completed and elegantly bound. They are all sold separately or in sets. Price $1 25 per volume.

☞ One Hundred Traveling Agents Wanted, in different parts of the Union, to canvass for subscribers and to dispose of bound volumes. The present is the most favorable season for the agency. Gentlemen who apply must forward at the time reliable testimonials as to character and ability, and must be able to furnish some $20, to be invested in bound volumes, which are in great demand. Terms, such as will satisfy any reasonable man, are offered to acceptable agents. Specimens, gratis, and full particulars as to the agency, will be sent, on application, post-paid, to

HOPE AND HEAVEN.

BY REV. M. VICARY.

There is a bark unseen in which we glide
Above the billows of life's stormy sea,
As buoyant as the sea-bird on the tide—
Though dangers thicken round, from fear as free.

The winds may freshen, and the lightnings play,
At midnight streaming on the briny deck,
Yet in this airy bark we speed away,
Certain of port secure from rock and wreck.

She laughs at th' elemental war, and the wild wave
Dashes itself against the prow in vain;
A hand directs the helm that well can save,
And bid be hushed each doubting fear again.

There is a land, a fair and happy land,
Where all are welcome on her friendly coast;
No surges break upon that sunny strand,
But each dark care in pleasure pure is lost.

There sorrow's fountain pours no chrystal store—
Grief has no sigh, the heart no gnawing pain—
The mind no torture, and the eye weeps no more;
There smiles the captive o'er his broken chain.

Such is the clime we seek, and such the soil;
For it, from home all willingly we're driven;
Guide us, thou friendly star! breathe, gentle gale!
For that fair bark is Hope—that land is Heaven!

THE CALIFORNIA GOLD REGION.

Presuming that our readers would like to know something more about the gold region, we give below the best account of it which has come to hand. Col. Mason, the military commandant of California, visited there in June last, for the purpose of learning the actual state of things, and thus qualifying himself to recommend the best course for the Government to pursue. His report, from which the following extracts are taken, is one of the documents accompanying the President's Message.

"Leaving our headquarters at Monterey on the 17th of June, we reached San Francisco on the 20th, and found that all, or nearly all, its male inhabitants had gone to the mines. The town, which a few months before was so busy and thriving, was then almost deserted.

On the evening of the 26th, the horses of the escort were crossed to Sousoleto in a launch, and on the following day we resumed our journey by way of Bodega and Sonoma, to Sutter's Fort, where we arrived on the morning of the 2d of July. Along the whole route mills were lying idle, fields of wheat were open to cattle and horses, houses vacant, and farms going to waste. At Sutter's there was more life and business. Launches were discharging their cargoes at the river, and carts were hauling goods to the fort, where already were established stores, a hotel, &c. Captain Sutter had only two mechanics in his employ, (a wagon-maker and a blacksmith,) whom he was then paying ten dollars a day. Merchants pay him a monthly rent of one hundred dollars per room; and while I was there a two story house in the fort was rented as a hotel for five hundred dollars a month.

At the earnest solicitation of many gentlemen, I delayed there to participate in the first public celebration of our national anniversary at that fort, but on the 5th resumed the journey and proceeded twenty five miles up the American fork to a point on it now known as the Lower Mines, or Mormon Diggings. The hill-sides were thickly strewn with canvas tents, and bush-arbors; a store was erected, and several boarding shantees in operation. The day was intensely hot, yet about two hundred men were at work in the full glare of the sun, washing for gold—some with tin-pans, some with close-woven Indian baskets, but the greater part had a rude machine, know as the cradle. This is on rockers, six or eight feet long, open at its foot, and at its head has a coarse grate, or sieve; the bottom is rounded, with small cleets nailed across. Four men are required to work this machine: one digs the ground in the bank close by the stream; another carries it to the cradle and empties it on the grate; a third gives a violent rocking motion to the machine; while a fourth dashes on water from the stream itself.

The sieve keeps the coarse stones from entering the cradle, the current of water washes off the earthy matter, and the gravel is gradually carried out at the foot of the machine, leaving the gold mixed with a heavy fine black sand above the first cleets. The sand and gold mixed together are then drawn off through augur holes into a pan below, are dried in the sun, and afterwards separated by blowing off the sand. A party of four men thus employed at the Lower Mines, averaged one hundred dollars a day. The Indians and those who have nothing but pans or willow baskets, gradually wash out the earth and separate the gravel by hand, leaving nothing but the gold, mixed with sand, which is separated in the manner before described. The gold in the lower mines is in fine bright scales, of which I send several specimens.

As we ascended the north branch of the American fork, the country became more broken and mountainous, and at the saw-mill, 25 miles above the lower washing, or 50 miles from Sutter's, the hills rise to about a thousand feet above the level of the Sacramento plain. Here a species of pine occurs which led to the discovery of the gold. Captain Sutter, feeling the great want of lumber, contracted in Sept. last with a Mr. Marshall to build a saw-mill at that place. It was erected in the course of the last winter and spring—a dam and race constructed; but when the water was let on the wheel, the tail-race was found to be too narrow to permit the water to escape with the necessary rapidity. Mr. Marshall, to save labor, let the water directly into the race with a strong current, so as to wash it wider and deeper. He effected his purpose, and a large bed of mud and gravel was carried to the foot of the race.

One day, Mr. Marshall, as he was walking down the race to this deposit of mud, observed some glittering particles at its upper edge; he gathered a few, examined them, and became satisfied of their value. He then went to the fort and told Captain Sutter of his discovery, and they agreed to keep it secret until a certain grist-mill of Sutter's was finished. It however got out, and spread like magic. Remarkable success attended the labors of the first explorers, and in a few weeks hundreds of men were drawn thither. At the time of my visit, but little more than three months after its discovery, it was estimated that upwards of four thousand people were employed. At the mill there is a fine deposit or bank of gravel, which the people respect as the property of Captain Sutter, although he pretends to no right to it, and would be perfectly satisfied with a simple promise of preëmption, on account of the mill which he has built there at considerable cost. Mr. Marshall was living near the mill, and informed me that many persons were employed above and below him; that they used the same machines at the lower washings, and that their success was about the same—ranging from one to three ounces of gold per man daily. This gold, too, is in scales a little coarser than those of the lower mines.

From the mill Marshall guided me up the mountain on the opposite or north bank of the south fork, where, in the bed of small streams, or ravines, now dry, a great deal of coarse gold has been found. I there saw several parties at work, all of whom were doing very well; a great many specimens were shown me, some as heavy as four or five ounces in weight, and I send three pieces labeled number 5, presented by a Mr. Spence. You will perceive that some of the specimens accompanying this, hold mechanically pieces of quartz; and the surface is rough, and evidently moulded in the crevice of a rock. This gold cannot have been carried far by water, but must have remained near where it was first deposited from the rock that once bound it. I inquired of many people if they had encountered the metal in its matrix, but in every instance they said they had not; but that the gold was invariably mixed with washed gravel, or lodged in the crevices of other rocks. All bore testimony that they had found gold in greater or less quantities in the numerous small gullies or ravines that occur in that mountainous region.

On the 7th of July I left the mill, and crossed to a stream emptying into the American fork, three or four miles below the saw-mill. I struck this stream, (now known as Weber's creek,) at the washings af Sunol & Co. They had about thirty Indians employed, whom they pay in merchandize. They were getting gold similar to that found in the main fork, and doubtless in quantities that satisfied them. I send you a small specimen presented by this company, of their gold. From this point we proceeded up the stream about 8 miles, where we found many people and Indians—some engaged in the bed of the stream, and others in the small side valleys that put into it. These latter are exceedingly rich, and two ounces were considered an ordinary yield for a day's work. A small gutter, not more than a hundred yards long by 4 feet wide and 2 or 3 feet deep, was pointed out to me as the place where two men—Wm. Daly and Parry McCoun—had a short time before obtained $17,000 worth of gold. Captain Weber told me that he knew that these two men had employed four whites and about one hundred Indians, and that, at the end of one week's work, they paid off their party, and had left $10,000 worth of gold. Another small ravine was shown me, from which had been taken upwards of $12,000 worth of gold. Hundreds of similar ravines, to all appearance, are as yet untouched. I could not have credited these reports, had I not seen in the abundance of the precious metal, evidence of their truth.

Mr. Nelligh, agent of Commodore Stockton, had been at work abont three weeks in the neighborhood, and showed me in bags and bottles over two thousand dollars worth of gold; and Mr. Lyman, a gentleman of education, and worthy of all credit, said he had been engaged with four others, with a machine, on the American fork, just below Sutter's mill; that they worked eight days, and that his share was at the rate of fifty dollars a day; but hearing that others were doing better at Weber's place, they had removed there, and were then on the point of resuming operations. I might tell of hundreds of similar instances; but to illustrate how plentiful the gold was in the pockets of the common laborers, I will mention a simple occurrence, which took place in my presence when I was at Weber's store. This store was nothing but an arbor of bushes, under which he had exposed for sale, goods and groceries, suited to his customers. A man came in, picked up a box of seidlitz powders, and asked its price. Captain Weber told him it was not for sale. The man offered an ounce of gold, but Captain Weber told him it only cost fifty cents, and that he did not wish to sell it. The man then offered an ounce and a half, when Captain Weber had to take it. The prices of things are high, yet Indians, who before scarcely knew what a breehcloth was, can now afford to buy the most gaudy dresses.

The country on either side of Weber's creek s much broken up by hills, and is intersected in every direction by small streams or ravines, which contain more or less gold. Those that have been worked are barely scratched; and although thousands of ounces have been carried away, I do not consider that a serious impression has been made upon the whole. Every day has developed new and richer deposites; and the only impression seemed to be, that the metal would be found in such abundance as seriously to depreciate in value. . .

The most moderate estimate I could obtain from men acquainted with the subject, was, that upwards or four thousand men were working in the gold district, of whom more than one-half were Indians; and that from $30,000 to $50,000 worth of gold, if not more, was daily obtained. The entire gold district, with very few exceptions of grants made some years ago by the Mexican authorities, is on land belonging to the United States.

It was a matter of serious reflection with me, how I could secure to the Government certain rents or fees for the privilege of procuring this gold; but, upon considering the large extent of country, the character of the people engaged, and the small scattered force at my command, I resolved not to interfere, but to permit all to work freely, unless broils and crime should call for interference. I was surprised to learn that crime of any kind was very unfrequent, and that no thefts or robberies had been committed in the gold region. All live in tents, in bush arbors, or in the open air; and men have frequently about their persons thousands of dollars worth of gold, and it was to me a matter of surprise, that so peaceful and quiet a state of things should continue to exist. Conflicting claims to particular spots of ground may cause collisions, but they will be rare, as the extent of the country is so great, and the gold so abundant, that for the present there is room and enough for all. Still, the Government is entitled to rents for this land, and immediate steps should be taken to devise them, for the longer it is delayed, the more difficult will it become. One plan I would suggest is, to send out from the United States, surveyors, with high salaries, bound to serve specified periods. A superintendent to be appointed at Sutter's fort, with power to grant license to work a spot of ground—say one hundred yards square—for one year, at a rent of from one hundred to one thousand dollars, at his discretion; the surveyors to measure the ground, and place the rentor in possession. A better plan, however, will be to have the district surveyed and sold at public auction to the highest bidder, in small parcels—say from twenty to forty acres. In either case, there will be many intruders, whom for years it will be almost impossible to exclude.

GOLD IN VIRGINIA.

The following extracts in relation to the Whitehall gold mine in Virginia, owned by Com. Stockton, Major Heiss, and others, are from a letter written by a gentleman traveling in Virginia to a friend in this city. The statements, says the Evening Post, may be implicitly relied on as true and unexaggerated. We understand that the proprietors of this mine are erecting extensive works and employing a large force upon them, so that it is possible that a rich harvest of the precious metal may be reaped elsewhere than in California.

FREDERICKSBURG, Va., Dec. 1.

I was at the Whitehall mines—Mr. Redding was there in high spirits. In sinking a shaft yesterday, they cut through the border of a very rich vein, and Mr. R. washed from one pan-full of the ore, one hundred and twenty-five pennyweights of pure gold, worth $125. Mr. R. Ct Taylor, of Philadelphia, was there, and saw i washed, and weighed it. * * *

Com. Stockton, with three negroes, last week pounded out, in hand-mortars, from the common ore, six pounds of pure gold in two or three days.

You must not think that I am exaggerating in what I say about Whitehall, for I have written nothing but facts.

A NUBIAN LOOM.

Early one morning, when walking ashore, I came upon a loom which would excite the astonishment of my former fellow-townsmen, the Norwich weavers. A little pit was dug in the earth, under a palm,—a pit just big enough to hold the treadles and the feet of the weaver, who sits on the end of the pit. The beam was made of a slender palm stem, fixed into two blocks. The shuttle was, I think, a forked twig. The cotton yarn was even, and the fabric good,—that is, evenly woven. It was, though coarse, so thin, that one might see the light through it; but that was intended and only appropriate to the climate. I might have wondered at such a fabric proceeding from such an apparatus, if I had not remembered the muslins in India, produced in looms as rude as this. It appears, too, from the paintings in the tombs, that the old Egyptian looms were of nearly as simple a construction, though the people were celebrated for their exports of fine linen and woolen stuffs. The stout-looking, gayly checkered sails of the boats, and the diversified dresses of the people, represented in the tombs, were, no doubt, the produce of the rude looms painted up beside them. The baskets made by the Nubians are strong and good. Their mats are neat, but neither so serviceable nor so pretty as those of India; but then this people have not so much material as the Hindoos. The rope-making is a pretty sight, prettier even than an English rope-walk, though that is a treat to the eye. We often saw men thus employed, one end of their stands being tied to the top of a tall palm, while they stood at the other, throwing the strands around till they would twist no more.

TIME'S CHANGES.

A letter in the Concordia Intelligencer has the following notice of a gentleman who died recently in Mexico: "Among the recent deaths here I noticed one that scarcely attracted a passing remark, but he was a man, who, twenty years ago, stood at the head of society—Martin Duralde. Born of an influential and affluent family in Attakapsas, extensively connected, augmenting his hereditary fortune by successful investments, married to a daughter of the Hon. Henry Clay, who was then at the zenith of his popularity and power, Mr. Duralde was on all sides courted, consulted, and caressed. But reverses overtook him; city property rapidly ran down; his wife died; his friends diminished with his fortune; and at the commencement of the Mexican War, this man, once so rich, so popular, and so honored, found himself obliged, for subsistence, to follow our march with a few packages of merchandize. He recently embarked on a trading schooner at Tampico, to return home; the deadly fever of that coast swept off every one of the crew but a small boy, and when the vessel, after beating about in the gulf, finally made the bar of the river, with a signal of distress, the captain was found dead on a pallet, and the unfortunate Duralde by his side, in the last agonies, and no medicine, no water, scarcely a ration of food on board. What an illustration of the vanity and vicissitudes of life!"

EXTENT OF OREGON TERRITORY.—It appears by the official documents, that on the east it skirts 800 miles along the Rocky Mountains; on the west, 700 miles along the Pacific Ocean; on the north, 250 miles along the N. American possessions of Russia and England. This area, or immense valley, contains 350,000 square miles—capable, undoubtedly, of forming seven states as large as New York, or forty states of the dimensions of Massachusetts.

THE LEARNED SLAVE.—Rev. H. W. Ellis, the learned slave liberated by subscriptions in the Presbyterian Synod of Louisiana and Alabama, has commenced his labors in Africa with great zeal. He is studying the languages of two wild tribes, in order to preach to them in their own tongue. He says that the Mandingoes claim him for their countryman because his grandfather was born in Africa. This tribe are Mahomedans, and some of their priests are intelligent, being capable of reading Hebrew when written in the Arabic character. He speaks in glowing language of Liberia and its prospects.

LOSS BY WAR.—It is estimated that thirty thousand millions of human beings have perished to satisfy the insatiable maw of war. Among the most disastrous of battles upon record, and the numbers slain, are Austerlitz, 20,000; Dresden, 30,000; Waterloo, 40,000; Eylau, 50,000; Bordino, 80,000; Issus, 110,000; Arabella, 300,000; in two of the battles of Cæsar, 700,000; in the siege of Jerusalem, more than 1,000,000; at the taking of Troy, more than 2,000,000. The New York Observer says that in the Russian Campaign there perished in six months, more than 500,000; during the twelve years of the recent wars in Europe, no less than 5,800,000. The army of Xerxes, probably more than 500,000, was reduced in less than two years to a few thousands. Jenghis Khan butchered in the single district of Herat 1,600,000,

VARIETY.

"Got a paper to spare?" "Yes, sir; here is one of our last. Would you like to subscribe, sir, and take it regularly?" "I would—but I am too poor." That man had just returned from the circus, cost fifty cents; lost time from his farm, fifty cents; whiskey, judging from the smell, at least, fifty cents—making a dollar and a half actually thrown away, and then beggi g for a newspaper, alledging that he was too poor to pay for it! That is what we call "saving at the spile and wasting at the bung-hole."

A person in England, lately rummaging among his family documents, found written on the back of an old deed some words indicating that a pot of gold was buried in a certain place in the garden. It was at first regarded as a hoax, but on digging in the spot an iron pot came to light, containing fifteen thousand guineas, and a scrap of parchment, much decayed, on which was written, "The devil shall have it sooner than Cromwell."

A live Yankee, says an exchange, keeping a grocery out West, was asked by an Irishman, for a yard of pork—when the Yankee threw on the counter three pig's feet. Pat, not understanding the joke, inquired, "and sure you're not after callin' this a yard of pork?" "Certainly," gravely responded the native of the land of wooden nutmegs, "don't you know that in this country three feet make a yard.

An interesting scientific acquisition has just been made in Europe, says "Galignani," by M. Andrand, the engineer so well-known by his works and experiments on compressed air. At the shop of a dealer in second-hand articles, he discovered and purchased the electrifying machine, still, after a lapse of nearly 80 years, in an excellent state of preservation, of Benjamin Franklin, which is supposed to have been made at Philadelphia.

The late disturbances in the French capital and other portions of the European continent, have had the effect of causing so large an influx into England of diamonds and other valuables, that they are now a mere "drug in the market," and nearly unsaleable, except at a very depreciated rate.

A man named Whitford beat his wife to death, in Hertfordshire, England, and when the neighbors entered, they found the murderer pacing the room beside the naked body of his wife, and crying that he "had killed the great Goddess Diana." On his way to prison he read aloud the 108th Psalm, and said that he thought he was fulfilling the Scripture.

A gentleman of Philadelphia recently saw a man struggling in the water. He immediately divested himself of his coat, handed it to a by-stander, and bravely sprang into the water, and succeeded in reaching the drowning man. Upon looking up his coat to put it on again he found that the scoundrel with whom he left it had eloped.

Some gentlemen of the New York bar lately made a calculation by which it appears that their aggregate nett receipts are so small as not to average over two hundred and fifty dollars a year, to at least one-third of the members of the legal profession. There are over 900 attorneys in New York, and it is believed 200 of them do not earn $200 a year.

The Rutland Herald states that a horn seven feet in length, together with a huge rib and leg bone, were dug from Mount Holly, on the line of the Rutland and Burlington railroad, on Friday last. A bone which corresponded with the above in size and appearance, was taken from the same hill some weeks since.

The physicians of Constantinople have recommended the use of figs, with great success, as a preventive of Cholera. The fruit is said to exercise a healing influence on the stomach and bowels, and is highly useful in diseases which manifest themselves in a derangement of the digestive functions, and which generally precede an attack of cholera.

Dr. James Hill, resident surgeon at the Peckham House Asylum, in England, states that he has tried choloroform in ten cases of malignant cholera, with complete success; six of the patients having perfectly recovered, and four being convalescent.

Baked apples are generally improved by being baked in bright tin or earthen plates, with a little water in, and a small quantity of sugar sprinkled over them. To our eating they are quite as pleasant as common apple-sauce, and very much less labor is required in their preparation.

As the snow-drop comes amid snow and sleet, appearing as the herald of the rose, so religion comes amid the blight of affliction, to remind us of the perpetual summer, where the bright sun never retires behind the wintry cloud.

"Tell your father," said John Randolph, "that I recommend abstinence from novel-reading and whiskey punch. Depend upon it, sir, they are both equally injurious to the brain."

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., }
IRA SAYLES, A. M., } Principals.

As isted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULATIONS.

1. No student will be excused to leave town, except to visit home, unless by the expressed wish of such student's parent or guardian.
2. Punctuality in attending all regular Academic exercises will be required.
3. The use of Tobacco, for chewing or smoking, will not be allowed either in or about the Academic buildings.
4. Playing at games of chance cannot be allowed.
5. Using profane language cannot be allowed.
6. The use of any kind of intoxicating drinks cannot be allowed, unless prescribed in case of sickness, by a regular physician.
7. Passing from room to room by students during the regular hours of study, or after the ringing of the first bell each evening, cannot be permitted.
8. Gentlemen and ladies of the Institution will not be permitted to visit the rooms of the opposite sex, except in cases of imperious necessity, and then it must not be done without permission previously obtained from one of the Principals.
9. Good order must be maintained at all times, and in all the rooms and halls of the Institution, and in all the intercourse of students with each other.
10. All students are required to retire regularly at the ringing of the bell designated for th t purpose, as occasion may require; and to rise at the ringing of the morning bell, also designated.
11. Any room, occupied by students, will, at all times, be subject to the visitation of the Teachers of the Institution, who are required to see that the regulations are complied with.
12. Students will be required to keep their own rooms in good order, and to pay all unnecessary damages, either of rooms or of furniture furnished with the rooms.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

GOVERNMENT.

The Government of the students will be in the hands of the Principals, and will be strictly and steadily exercised, and at the same time, strictly parental. The object of our academic government being to secure the greatest possible amount of physical, intellectual, and moral good to the students themselves, regularity and order of exercises, and good and wholesome citizens to society. No unwarrantable means will be made use of to enforce the observance of the above regulations; yet our constant endeavor will be, to make the means resorted to as effective as humun means may be.

Parents who place their children in this Institution, and all students who are sufficiently old to understand the necessity of order, cannot be too well assured that the foregoing regulations form the most essential part of the contract between them and us; and that whatever student wantonly violates them, and shows himself incorrigibly determined on pursuing his waywardness, will be expelled from the privileges of the Institution, and will not be permitted to re-enter it again, without special proof of reformation. Nor will an expelled student have any deduction made from full term charges.

Farther, parents are requested not to place money for expenses, in the hands of students who are not old enough to use money with discretion and economy. Either of the Principals, or the Book-keeper of the Institution, will act as fiscal guardian of such students without charge.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

EXPENSES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Board, per term, | from $14 50 to | $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | | 1 50 |
| Washing, | | 2 50 |
| Fuel, | spring and fall, 75 cents, winter, | 1 50 |
| Tuition, | from $3 50 to | 5 00 |
| Lights, | | 1 50 |
| Incidental Expenses, | | 25 |
| EXTRAS—Music on the Piano Forte, | | 10 00 |
| Oil Painting, | | 7 00 |
| Drawing, | | 2 00 |

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, except the extras above mentioned, need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall, should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchange and losses.

LETTERS TO A YOUNG INQUIRER,

On the Necessity of adopting the Bible as the only Guide in making a Profession of Religion.

LETTER IV.

My Dear Daughter,—It will now be so short a time until you return home, and we enjoy the privilege of free, personal intercourse, that I should not consider it worth while to write another line on the subject which has occupied my last three letters, but from your having apprised me, that you have had presented to you a copy of Pike's "Guide for Young Disciples." I shall take advantage of the opportune occasion which that circumstance affords, (as you remain longer than you expected,) to exhibit, farther, the truth of some of my former remarks, elicited by looking into the very work you have alluded to; which, in the main, is a very excellent work, but lacks consistency between profession and practice—no infrequent thing among that class of writers.

That work was lying on my table when I received your letter, and on picking it up I accidentally opened it at page 299, and was delighted with the remarks running over the four following pages, on the subject of prizing the Scriptures.

Those are excellent, judicious remarks—pertinent and true—worthy of profound contemplation—and I began to think, that you had received a rare treasure—a rare production of man—a gem of a book. But alas, alas, for poor, twisted, system-bound humanity. I was constrained to exclaim, in a paraphrase of the poet's hacknied adage: "Frailty, thy name is MAN!"

The Holy Scripture, among its thousands of irresistible truths, announces two very lamentable facts, which the whole history of man abundantly confirms, namely: Man has polluted his ways, and corrupted the oracles of God his Maker. On a few preceding pages you will find the evidence of this sad defection of frail man, in so good and, apparently, judicious a writer—a striking illustration of what Dr. Barnes, in a note to one of the gospels, justly asserts: "None are so blind as they who will not see." Turn to page 287, and read sections second and third of that chapter.

[We insert a passage from the book referred to, to enable the reader to understand, distinctly, the criticism appended.]

"God, at the beginning of time, appointed a Sabbath. This solemn season for rest and religion he ordained should then be the seventh day. 'God blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it, because that in it he had rested from all his work which God created and made.' There is reason to believe that this day was regarded as sacred by the patriarchs, and it is decisively clear that it was esteemed holy before the time when the law was given at Sinai. For some time before that period, Moses is described as speaking to the Israelites respecting it, and speaking of it not as if it were a new institution, but one well known to them. 'He saith unto them, This is that which the Lord hath said. To-morrow is the rest of the holy Sabbath unto the Lord.'

"When the Lord, with appalling and terrible majesty, gave the law from Mount Sinai, the observation of the Sabbath was the subject of one of the ten precepts that he delivered on that tremendous occasion. 'Remember the Sabbath day to keep it holy. Six days shalt thou labor, and do all thy work; but the seventh day is the Sabbath of the Lord thy God; in it thou shalt not do any work, thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, nor thy cattle, nor thy stranger that is within thy gates; for in six days the Lord made heaven and earth, the sea, and all that in them is, and rested the seventh day; wherefore the Lord blessed the Sabbath day and hallowed it.'

"This solemn law of the Most High does not appear to have been introduced at this time as a new law, but as a law referring to a subject with which the Israelites were well acquainted. Remember the Sabbath day. This phraseology implies that they were acquainted with the day and with the law, which they were now solemnly commanded to regard.

"With respect to the change of the Sabbath from the seventh day of the week to the first, it may be observed, that the Lord Jesus Christ was Lord of the Sabbath, and consequently possessed authority to alter the day on which the Sabbath is to be observed. 'The Son of Man is Lord even of the Sabbath day,' and that the Scriptures lead us to believe that he, OR his divinely-inspired apostles, did make such alteration."

Here you have an astounding example of much intelligence, and the semblance of a proper appreciation of the value and true province of the Holy Scriptures, and, likewise, just views of the institution of the Sabbath—yet so swerved by his early predilections, that he cannot suffer himself to look the truth in the face; for instead of appealing "to the law and to the testimony," he sinks his character as a valiant advocate for Bible truth, and Bible interpretation; resorts to strained inferences, flies to tradition, and at last ensconces himself behind Justin Martyr, instead of bringing forth one "thus saith the Lord," to justify the transfer. If the Bible contains a single passage, expressing the transfer from the seventh to the first day of the week, why did he not put his finger upon it, and proclaim it to the world? Why, if Christ changed the day, did he (Pike) not give the authority—the book, chapter, and verse? If done by the Apostles, why did he not point to an unequivocal passage directing the transfer? Why resort to the weak subterfuge of an equivocal expression, calculated to deceive the ignorant, and mislead the misinformed? Can we suppose, that a Heaven-appointed institution, which the Almighty solemnly hallowed, set apart for all future time, and declared should remain sanctified, could be set aside by any less distinct expression of the Lord of the Sabbath? Is it not trifling with the revelation of the Majesty of Heaven, thus to treat his holy testimonies and his abiding statutes? Could we act thus in reference to any human legislation? And is not the Legislator of heaven to be regarded with higher reverence, than that of our equals—poor, frail man? Should we respect their delegated authority above the prerogatives of the Sovereign of the Universe? O, shame, shame, on the degeneracy of man—on the inconsistency of professing Christians! "The Scriptures, (he says,) lead us to believe that he, (Christ,) OR his divinely inspired Apostles, did make the alteration." Christ OR his Apostles is an assertion so puerile that any one professing to make the Bible the Rule of Faith ought to be ashamed, truly ashamed of it. It not only savors of ignorance, doubt, and imperfection, but smacks strongly of downright deception. If the Scriptures bear any testimony to the point, it would be easy to determine it by direct reference to the passage containing it. This has never been done, and never can be done, for it is not to be found there. If the Apostles had done it, they would, certainly, have left some distinct record of so important a transaction as setting aside the Father's first enacted institution, and not treat Him so unceremoniously, and leave the disciples of after ages to blind groping and strained inferences of texts, which bear an entirely different interpretation. The Scriptures lead us to believe! Believe what? The Scriptures no where require us to believe any thing they have not declared—clearly, explicitly, unequivocally declared. Belief without legitimate authority is vain—as action without faith is sin. Not one of the passages* the writer has adduced, in a subsequent section, and on which he professes to found a belief in the change, intimates any thing like a transfer of the holy day of rest, nor attaches any thing like sacredness to the first day of the week. It is a miserable exhibition of the weakness and folly of man, in leaving the fountain of truth to pander to the prejudices of party, and that at the wanton sacrifice of the Word of God. How, then, do the Scriptures lead him to believe, that a change has been made? It cannot be in any other way than that of looking at them through the Articles of his church—the Confession of his church—the Covenant of his church. These may lead to that belief—not the Scriptures; for many of these Articles, Confessions, and Covenants, are sadly obscure—dimming and blurring the light of truth by "the inventions of men"—that they see the Scriptures as party systems; somewhat like unto the expression of the blind man who was brought to the Saviour at Bethsaida, when his sight was partially restored: "He saw men as trees walking;" and such is our condition when our spiritual vision is obscured by party glasses; renewed application to the Word, like the repeated touch of Jesus, in the above case, will make us see "clearly."

Our Author asserts, and justly asserts, that "the Scriptures are the only guide to eternal life"—yet he goes about to write "A Guide for Young Disciples," himself! as if the Scriptures were not sufficient themselves, unless they have his own spectacles astride their noses, that they may see things in the light his fancy places them.

This is not the only institution of the Majesty of Heaven which has received damage from this license of straining inferences, and urging them as established truths. The ordinances of Baptism and the Lord's Supper suffer, likewise, from that overt culpableness, and that derelict laxness in interpretation. It is not my design to enter upon the defense of either of these institutions, the Sabbath, Baptism, and the Lord's Supper, at this time, (all of which I may treat of hereafter,) I, here, only allude to as much of the author's (of the Guide for Young Disciples) assumptions as serves to show the result of his departure from the Word of Truth; which, at one moment, he commends so ably, and, at the next, stabs as with the dagger of an assassin, inasmuch as he does it with artful stealth.

I have no disposition to add any further strictures; the above must suffice to illustrate my object. I was pleased with many parts of the book, and regretted to find so good a work marred by such jejune subterfuges to sustain party purposes. It may serve as a beacon to advertise you, not to place too much confidence on any human production, however specious. It is another admonition, arising from the folly of the learned, to "prove all things" for yourself. Receive nothing at second hand—"to the law and to the testimony," in all matters; "if they speak not according to this Word, it is because there is no light in them." That is the TEST RULE. Adhere to it implicitly, or you make shipwreck of your profession.

It gives me no pleasure to make war against the errors and follies of others; but when I find those errors and follies set up in the place of the declared will of the Master, I am called upon, as a disciple, to "contend for the truth"—to "cry aloud and spare not." I war not with men, nor parties, but with false, perverted systems. Each and all professing Christians have an important mission to fill—to glorify the Master, by extending his kingdom; and to do that, understandingly and efficiently, they must imbue themselves deeply with the Spirit of Christ, by living continually at the foot of the Cross, receiving the law at his mouth, and at his mouth alone; and keeping themselves from becoming corrupted by the inventions of men, which often set at naught the pure doctrines and ordinances of the Redeemer.

Undoubtedly the great cause of divisions among the Protestants, is their departure from the Bible, and the adoption of man-made systems. When they shall learn to prize the Bible, then, and not till then, will they take the first step to consociation; and not till then will there be any abiding approximation to that hallowed confraternity, which ought to subsist betwixt all the scattered flock of the Great Shepherd and Bishop of Souls. The Bible must be prized—Bible institutions must be cherished, for the one sake, that they are the ordained, sanctified, unmutilated institutions of that Holy Book. Then, and not till then, may we look for the fruition of the Spirit, crowning the professing church with complete prosperity. I repeat—then, and not till then, shall we see the resplendant glory of the Church, in all her majesty, which her elevated and ennobling principles are destined to display among her hosts. Mosheim says truly: "As long as the Scriptures were the only rule of faith, religion preserved its native purity, and in proportion as their decisions were neglected or postponed to the inventions of men, it degenerated from its primitive and divine simplicity." And Lardner says: "In about three hundred years after the ascension of Jesus, without the aid of secular power, or church authority, the Christian religion spread over a large part of Asia, Europe, and Africa; and at the accession of Constantine, and at the convening of the Council of Nice, it was almost every where, through these countries, in a flourishing condition. In the space of another three hundred years, or a little more, the beauty of the Christian religion was greatly corrupted, in a large part of that extent, its glory defaced, and its light almost extinguished. What can this be so much owing to, as to the determinations and transactions of the Council of Nice, and the measures thus set on foot, and followed in succeeding times."*

The united testimony of ecclesiastical history confirms this position most conclusively—that forsaking the plain teachings of the Bible, and adopting man-made systems of theology, has inflicted all the diversity of faith, and has entailed upon us the pandemonium of sects, which the Protestant church now presents. "I do appeal to any man who is acquainted with the Christian community, (exclaims the eloquent Mr. Duncan, of Baltimore,) whether the technical terms of scholastic theology do not make up the vocabulary of both ministers and people? and their meaning, the subject of their preaching and of controversy? How is the object in view to be gained? By force? Can you compel men to think—to believe—to love—to hope? Did ecclesiastical power ever enlighten, convince, or sanctify one immortal mind? Did Christ adopt this method? Did his disciples pursue, or recommend, such a course? What does God mean by the phrase, 'Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit?' How rapidly would men make philosophers in this way? Shall we whip children into the fear of God? What has ecclesiastical power ever done in the world, excepting to aid the civil arm, or compel the civil arm to aid it, in degrading the human mind to the lowest state of ignorance and bondage? . . . . Assuredly the Bible is not constructed as a sectarian creed is. God, in instructing the human mind, has adopted a very different course, having furnished it with a popular book, and employed men to address it, not with fixed scholastic formalities, but under the full flow of sympathies most highly excited. The scholastic exercises He has identified with a father's anxieties, with a mother's feelings, and with domestic scenes. This thing called a CREED, Jehovah never made; but has sought to teach the human mind according to its own characteristics, and by agencies belonging to its own essential relations. As a popular instructer of the mind, of varied mind, of mind in various countries and ages, never was there a book, on pure philosophical principles, to be compared with the Bible. The time is at hand, when it shall take its own proper place, and be hailed from the rising to the setting sun, as the world's guide to everlasting glory." Mr. Erskine, in his Remarks on the Internal Evidences for the truth of Revealed Religion, says: "Most people in this country, (Britain,) and probably even the majority of the population of Europe, think that they understand Christianity; and yet a very small portion of them have read the Bible with that degree of ordinary attention, which they bestow on the common concerns of life. Their ideas on this subject are derived, almost entirely, from creeds, and catechisms, and church articles, or human compositions of some kind. The evil consequences arising from this, are most grievous. To convince ourselves that they are so, to a high degree, we have only to compare the two methods. In the Bible, the Christian doctrines are always stated in this connection: They stand as indications of the character of God, and as the exciting motives of a corresponding character in man. Forming thus the connecting link between the character of the Creator and the creature, they possess a majesty which it is impossible to despise, and exhibit a form of consistency and truth, which it is difficult to disbelieve. Such is Christianity in the Bible; but in Creeds and Church Articles, it is far otherwise. Their tests or summaries, originated from the introduction of doctrinal errors and metaphysical speculations into religion; and in consequence of this, they are not so much intended to be the repositories of truth, as barriers against the encroachment of erroneous opinions. The doctrines contained in them, therefore, are not stated with any reference to their great object in the Bible, the regeneration of the human heart, by the knowledge of the divine character. They appear as detached propositions, indicating no moral cause, and pointing to no moral effect. They do not look to God, on the one hand, as their source; nor to man, on the other, as the object of their moral urgency. They appear like links severed from the chain to which they belonged; and thus they lose all that evidence which arises from their consistency, and all that dignity which is connected with their high design." And Hilary, Bishop of Poictiers, in Aquitania, who flourished in the fourth century, boldly declares, that "it is a thing equally to be deplored and dangerous, that there are as many creeds as there are opinions among men; as many doctrines as inclinations; and as many sources of blasphemy as there are faults among us; because we make CREEDS arbitrarily, and explain them as arbitrarily. And as there is but one faith, so there is but one only God, one Lord, and one baptism. We renounce this one faith, when we make so many different creeds; and that diversity is the reason why we have no true faith among us. We cannot be ignorant, that since the Council of Nice, we have done nothing but make creeds. And while we fight against words, litigate about new questions, dispute about equivocal terms, complain of authors, that every one may make his own party triumph; while we cannot agree, while we anathematize one another, there is hardly one that adheres to Jesus Christ. . . . We make creeds every year; nay, every morn we repent of what we have done, we defend those that repent, we anathematize those that we defend. So we condemn either the doctrine of others in ourselves, or our own in that of others; and, reciprocally tearing one another to pieces, we have been the cause of each others' ruin."*

This is the sad lamentable state to which creed-following has reduced the professing church. Professor Tappan, whose excellent writings I have, repeatedly, introduced to your attention in my letters, pertinently remarks on this point of my subject, (which I avail myself of freely, as I like to fortify my opinions by such judicious authority:) "Neither Athanasius nor Calvin, the Council of Trent nor the Synod of Dort, can be supposed to think so well, or speak so plainly, as the Divine Saviour and his inspired apostles. There is no book so plain as the Bible itself, interpreted by itself. The Westminster Confession is not so intelligible to our children as the discourses of Christ. What are the writings of the Fathers, compared with the writings of the Apostles? Where do we find the clearest springs of truth?" And at the close of his timely essay, adds: "There are three great labors to be performed in our day, by minds nobly inspired with the love of truth and righteousness. First, To set forth the pure Gospel system, by comparing Scripture with Scripture, without any foreign admixture, that all the true servants of God may see eye to eye, and dwell together in goodly and loving fellowship. Secondly, To show, from the history of philosophy and of the church conjointly, how this pure system has been debased. Thirdly, To set forth, on its own legitimate basis, a true philosophy, as an element in human nature, which responds to all God's revelations, as the statue of Memnon was said of old to send forth strains of sweet melody, when the morning sun shone upon it. In fine, it is to redeem the Bible from false philosophies, and to redeem philosophy itself from the product of these false philosophies appearing in the form of tyrannical ecclesiastical dogmatism."

Aunt —— has, very properly, advised you to "begin right—to count the cost in setting out," and "persevere unto the end, with all diligence and alacrity." To begin right is to take God at his word, and render implicit obedience to Him—perfect submission to all his requirements, and to walk faithfully in all his ordinances. Counting the cost, is yielding up all predilections to particular forms and interests—to embrace, and comply with, all the Master has imposed upon his disciples, however others may regard them, or despise them. Not to be an eye-servant to any one, but a doer of the work, as it is commanded by the Lord of your salvation.

This is imperatively required of you. Nothing short of it will suffice. "My son, give me thy heart," is the rightful requirement of the Almighty—to serve the Lord, and Him alone, with all thy heart, and soul, and strength, and might. This admits of no compromise—no yielding to partialities of friends or party. It demands an entire dedication of all your affections and powers to the Author of the Bible and the institutions of the Bible to the very letter.

I leave this subject, my dear child, with the foregoing effort to enlighten you, and, also, to advertise you, of the dangers that may beset you, in making a profession of religion; commending you to the Author of all Truth, in whom there is no darkness. Go to his Word and to his audience chamber—the foot of the Cross—and learn of him. Ask him earnestly, devoutly, submissively: "Lord, what wilt thou have me do?" Then turn to his Word, and there you will find his answer. Follow it in all his appointed ways—all Heaven-appointed ways. When you think that you have found your duty made plain, and you think of attaching yourself to any particular church, get their Creed, Confession, or Covenant, if you find the Bible prescribes, authorizes, or warrants any such extra-scriptural formularies of faith and practice—sift them and try them, to see whether they are free from the admixture of philosophy, "falsely so called," which has corrupted all the concocted systems of man, in all ages, even down to the present day; examine the ordinances, whether they are after the pattern of the Master—if not, cast them all to the moles and the bats; and be not satisfied short of "thus saith the Lord" for all you profess, and all you adopt. Throw yourself on the broad platform of the Bible; and make no profession which will detract from the integrity of God's Holy Word, or do damage to the plain prescription of that blessed Book; and the God of the Bible will be with you and sustain you, in life, in death, and at the Judgment—for it is that Word, which is to be your Judge in that great, that awful day, for which all other days were made. Then take heed that you cleave to it, as the very periapt of your life—as it is the amulet to secure your safety.

Your affectionate Father.

Reverse of Fortune.—A very touching case of misfortune came to the notice of the public a few days since. The captain of the ship Ocean Monarch, from Havre to this port, observed among his passengers a lady in middle life, and her daughter, a young woman, who seemed to have known better circumstances, and gave evidence in their deportment of a quiet refinement of manner very different from those with whom they were placed in companionship. He bestowed many little attentions upon them during the voyage, and endeavored to make them as comfortable as their situation would admit. What was his astonishment, when a gentleman came on board to pay their passage, to find that they were the widow and daughter of Lafitte, the celebrated banker and minister of finance; also the daughter-in-law of Marshal Bertrand! Here were ladies, who but a short time ago, received in their saloons the greatest men in Europe, and even royalty itself, enduring the worst of all miserable situations—the steerage of a ship during a long voyage. ### THE DEAD SEA EXPEDITION AND FOREIGN MISSIONS.

When the small party just returned from the Dead Sea, first entered upon its waters, its members came, one and all, to the conclusion, that having undertaken what others failed to accomplish, the honor of the American name was at stake, and that it were better to die like them than return unsuccessful.

On the evening of the ninth day, however, on the southern sea, we were prostrated by the hot blasts of a simoon, sweeping from the deserts of Arabia, which was followed by five days of intense and stifling heat. On the afternoon of the 14th day, on the coast of Moab, to our surprise, we were greeted by a deputation of Christians, from Kerak, the Keijath Moab of the Bible.

The joy of this people at meeting us was unbounded. They caressed us, brought us water and laban, (sour milk,) all they had, and some of them spent nearly the whole night hunting a boar wherewith to regale us. When told that our forms of worship in America were different from theirs, they replied: "What matters it? Christ died for all! Do you not believe in him?" When told that we did, they said: "Then what are forms before God? He looks to the heart! We are brothers!" And brothers they continued to call us to the last.

We could not trace their origin, but concluded they were either one of the lost tribes converted to Christianity, who, in the fastnesses of the mountains, had escaped the Mohammedan alternative of the Koran or the sword, or of the Crusaders under the Christian Lord of Kerak. They number about 150 families, and live in the town—the only one now left in the once populous country of Moab. Within the walls are also the huts of 100 Muslim families, and outside are the black tents of the fierce tribe Kera-Ceyeh, numbering 760 fighting men.

The Christians gave us an invitation to visit their town, about seventeen miles distant in the mountains; but while hospitably urging us to go, they did not conceal the perils of the visit; for they confessed that they were out-numbered and over-awed, and in an emergency would not dare openly to assist us.

I determined, however, to accept their invitation at all hazards; for it was evident that unless recruited by a more bracing atmosphere, we must inevitably perish. In this opinion the lamented Mr. Dale concurred with me.

I will not tire you with an account of the visit—of the treachery with which we were threatened, and our return in battle array, with the hostile Sheikh as prisoner—but simply express my opinion, that but for the timely information given by the Christians, we should never have seen our homes again.

These poor Christians are much tyrannized over by their Muslim neighbors. Their only place of retreat when threatened with violence is their little cell of a church, which can scarcely hold twenty families. Their account, which in its narration bore the impress of truth, seems confirmed by the circumstance that in the centre of their little church there is a well which supplies them with water until their provisions are exhausted, or the restless nature of their persecutors takes them elsewhere. The object of all their hopes is to build a church sufficiently large to contain all their wives and children; for, with all their intolerance, the Muslims respect the house of Him whom they call "Issa, the Prophet of the Christians."

The foundation and a part of the walls of a church have been built, the sirocco and locust have swept their harvests for several years. They gave me an appeal to their Christian brethren in America, which I promised to deliver. With many apologies for the phraseology, they begged me to write it out more fully for them; but I prefer sending it forth in its own simple and touching brevity. I will only add, that little should be given, and that discreetly, so as not to excite the cupidity of the Muslims. The Board of Foreign Missions at New York will doubtless receive what may be given, and forward it either to their brethren in Beirut, or to the Anglican Bishop at Jerusalem, for distribution. One cent from each humane person in this land of charity would be more than sufficient.

APPEAL.

By God's favor: May it, God willing, reach America, and be presented to our Christian brothers, whose happiness may the Almighty God preserve: Amen. [8642]

BEDUAH.

We are in Kerak, a very few Christians, and are building a church.

We beg your Excellency to help us in this undertaking, for we are very weak.

The land has been unproductive and visited by locusts for the last seven years.

The church is delayed in not being accomplished for want of funds; for we are a few Christians, surrounded by Muslims.

This being all that is necessary to write to you, Christian brothers in America, we need say no more.

The trusters in your bounty,
ABD'ALLAH EN NAHAS, (Sheikh,)
YACOB EN NAHAS.

Obedience to parents has ever been regarded as a fundamental duty among the Jews. As a result of this feature of their domestic discipline, an intelligent Jew recently remarked that no Jews were found criminals at any of our courts, or in any state prison.

The Sabbath Recorder.

New York, December 28, 1848.

THE MONTHLY CONCERT.

The Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association has repeatedly urged upon its friends the importance of maintaining a Concert of Prayer for Missions, and has recommended that it be held on the first Sabbath in each month. Many of the churches, we rejoice to know, have complied with the recommendation, and have found the season to be a most interesting and profitable one. We wish all the churches might have some such experience, and we are sure they would then need no urging to continue the practice. There are some churches, however, in which the Concert has never been established, and of course none of its benefits enjoyed. To such, what more appropriate suggestion can be made just now, when a new year is about to open, than that the present is a good time to commence what has thus far been neglected. Let the first Sabbath of the new year be signalized in every church by the establishment of a monthly concert of prayer for missions, and there would be good grounds to hope for a better state of things at home and abroad. God is not deaf to hear, nor slow to answer, the united prayer of his people. If they could all be induced on that day to approach the mercy seat in concert, and with a determination to continue to do so monthly throughout the year, it is impossible fully to estimate the results. The prophet Isaiah said that in his time, "as soon as Zion travailed she brought forth." Who can doubt that a similar result would follow the same cause in the present day.

There are always reasons, sufficiently weighty, why the friends of the missionary cause should be frequent and importunate in their addresses to the throne of grace. The conversion of a sinner, under the most favorable circumstances, is a miracle of mercy—a monument of God's power; how much more their conversion in heathen countries, where all their interests and prepossessions have to be overcome by the influence of divine truth and the Spirit of God! Yet the missionary goes forth in expectation that heathen will be converted through the instrumentality of his labors. Surely he ought to be a praying man himself, and to be supported by praying men at home. But while there are always weighty reasons why the friends of missions should be earnest in prayer on behalf of those whom they send into the field, there are peculiar reasons why we should be earnest on behalf of the brethren whom we have sent to China. They are establishing a new mission, and are therefore in special need of divine guidance. They are surrounded by adverse influences, which render their position one of peculiar delicacy, and demand great circumspection on their part. They are, indeed, placed in circumstances where no wisdom but that which is from above can be sufficient to direct them, and where no strength short of that from above can sustain them. Will those who have sent them forth forget them in such circumstances? God forbid. Let our alms and our prayers on their behalf go together. So shall we have no reason to fear for their safety, or for the effect of their labors.

Again we say, the commencement of a new year is a good time for those churches not already enlisted, to commence the Monthly Concert of Prayer for Missions. Let the ministers and leading brethren bear this in mind, and take such a course in relation to it as will free them from guilt in the matter.

MILEAGE OF CONGRESS.

The N. Y. Tribune is urging an amendment of the law in relation to the mileage of Congress, and illustrates the necessity of such amendment by some curious facts. It seems, that when the law was passed, twenty miles' travel was regarded as about equal to a good day's work; accordingly the law was so framed as to give each member eight dollars for every twenty miles traveled in coming to and returning from Congress. It is easy to see, that at the present time, when men can travel by steam, and for comparatively little expense, from one to three hundred miles per day, such an allowance, giving persons in some instances one hundred dollars a day clear of all expenses, is unreasonable. Even that could be got along with, however, if the persons who receive such pay would be satisfied to charge for no more miles than it is necessary for them to travel. But they are not; the law says that mileage shall be reckoned "by the usually traveled route," and as each man judges for himself what is the usually traveled route, he can make up a bill very much to his own liking. For instance, it is said that one of the Louisiana members charges from his residence down the Red River to the Mississippi, down the Mississippi to New Orleans, thence back up that same Mississippi by the mouth of Red River to the Ohio, and so up to Wheeling, and by Baltimore to Washington. This enables him to charge nearly double the actual number of miles by post-route, and to obtain about one thousand dollars more mileage than he would be entitled to if he had traveled the route by which the mail goes. From a complete table of mileage of members of the present Congress, it appears that the extra miles charged by the members of the House of Representatives amount to 59,030, for which they receive $47,223 80. The number of extra miles charged by Senators is 18,602, for which they receive $14,881 40. Take the Representatives and Senators together, and we have total extra miles charged 77,632, and total extra mileage paid $6[illegible],105 20! These charges, it is supposed, are all consistent with a liberal construction of the existing law. If so, who can doubt that the law ought to be amended?

HOME MISSIONS—NO. 3.

Notwithstanding all the discouragements thrown in the way of engaging in home missionary labor as ministers of Christ, yet it is not without its inducements. Nothing sweetens labor and toil like success. If a person's business is not very lucrative, yet, if he succeeds, he is encouraged. Some of our best, most pious, and faithful ministers, in some of the old churches, labor for years with but little if any apparent success. There are constant drawbacks upon those churches. Business prospects in our cities and large towns draw the attention of the young; and many, in view of the prospects west, leave their native land and emigrate. There are but a few of the eastern churches that can expect any permanent growth. Can a young, enterprising minister of Christ, be satisfied with this? We would think not. Let a young man of piety, talents, and learning, go out into the western field—his place of study the back of his horse, his library in his saddle-bags, and his pulpit in the woods—he will not be crying from day to day, "Who hath believed my report, and to whom is the arm of the Lord revealed?"—for success will attend his labors. Society is there to be formed; people have moved to those settlements from different parts; in their religious practices, they are to form new relations; and the influence of old established habits, and friends, will have lost its power, and they are to be moulded and fashioned, either by the errors of the age, or by the truth of GOD. Under these circumstances a minister may raise up a church adapted to himself; and with such a people he may live happily, and not be subject to the yearly auctioneering that is practiced by some churches, such as, Will we have our minister another year? and, What can he be obtained for? We must get him for such a price, or he may leave. Where churches have got in the habit of frequently changing their pastor, it seems to them to be necessary. Formerly it was not so. The argument for it is the practice of the apostles; but the pastors are not apostles. The apostles instructed the bishops and pastors to ordain elders in the churches; but we have no account of a change, or a removal, of these elders and pastors thus located. Often, under present circumstances, it becomes necessary and expedient for ministers to move, and oftener by far, I think, than what it ought to.

Another inducement we would present, is the command, "Go ye into all the world." A young man of enterprise, who wishes to be a farmer, does not hesitate, and say it is not expedient, because my father's farm is small and there is not sufficient room for me. No! He says, "there is much land to be possessed," and gladly he leaves the dwelling of his father, and goes to seek his fortune in a strange land; and all this for filthy lucre. The object of God's ministers is by far more lucrative—not for filthy lucre, not for the bread that perishes, but for souls, immortal souls, that may become the equals of angels. I once spoke to a young brother in the ministry upon this subject, who was unsettled, when he replied, "Oh, no, I cannot go; here are my friends, and it is my duty to live with them." I could but think of the words of our Savior, "He that loveth father, or mother, or wife, or children, more than me, is not worthy of me." Nothing of a religious nature appears to be more ungospelwise, than for ministers to be idle from year to year, waiting for a call. If they are God's ministers, the call is in their commission, "Go ye." Destitute churches and settlements are constantly saying, "Come over and help us." I do not mean those who are superannuated, or those who may be so circumstanced as to forbid it. I mean young men, who are zealous, gifted, strong, and pious. And such I hope will not pass the best of their days in getting ready to begin, remembering that what they do they must do quickly.

I am of the opinion, that we have never felt enough on this subject, neither ministers nor people. There are many weighty reasons why we should do more for home missions. The ground will be occupied, and what we do not occupy others will. It was the policy of the early Christians to go where they could be successful; and would it not be wisdom in us to adopt a similar course? There are but few among us who have not friends who have emigrated west, and are raising up families to be citizens of this great republic. They are constantly asking us for help, and shall it be withheld? The West, in all probability, is to become the dwelling-place of our children; the present prospects are that our sea-board and sea-ports will be possessed by foreigners, and the present native inhabitants will go West, or at least in a few generations we may expect this. Have we no anxiety about the society with which our posterity are to mingle? In that country, institutions of learning are rapidly multiplying, and will mould in a great measure the state of society; and is it not our privilege to participate in this great work? Let us lay ourselves out for this work, and though our numbers are few, and our means limited, yet we can do much. The God of heaven will prosper us. Let us pray for God to raise up men, and I believe that means may be obtained. Have we not individuals who would give some young man an hundred dollars a year, and he get what he can upon the field of his labor? Let the offer be made, and possibly the Executive Board may find the man.

W. B. GILLETT.

KIDNAPPING IN NEW YORK.—On the 20th instant, a respectable colored man, named Belt, was walking in Duane-st., N. Y., with a companion, when he was suddenly seized by two white men, who thrust him and his friend into a carriage, evidently at hand for that object, charging Belt with having stolen a coat worth five dollars at the fire the night before. As they were driving off, the men commenced putting handcuffs on Belt, and having examined his companion, told him he was not wanted, and put him out. Belt requested him to see his landlady and meet him at the tombs, which he proceeded to do. But the carriage never came there. On the contrary, it was driven to Gravesend Beach, a spot on the shore of Long-Island, some ten miles from New York, opposite which a vessel was waiting for a fair wind to sail for a southern port. A writ of habeus corpus was immediately obtained for the body of the colored man, and the matter has thus been brought before the proper authorities. Two officers, Lydney Clayton, of Brooklyn, and Charles Bird, of New York, have also been arrested on the charge of abducting Joseph Belt, a fugitive from labor, out of the State. It is said that the kidnappers have exposed themselves, under the statute, to ten years imprisonment in the State Prison.

POSTAGE REFORM.

First Assistant Postmaster General, S. R. Hobbie, having enjoyed very favorable opportunities of witnessing the operation of the best-conducted Offices in Europe, was requested by the Postmaster General to report to him the results of his observations and reflections—a request with which he complied. This report having been called for by both Houses of Congress, is now made public. It gives a very full and interesting account of the manner in which the operations of the European Post-Offices are carried on, together with many suggestions as to the improvement of our service. The result of Mr. Hobbie's observations is a firm conviction, that postage ought to be farther reduced In this country. He recommends a uniform letter postage of three cents, and a uniform rate for newspapers, which he would put at our lowest denomination of coin, one cent the single newspaper, not to exceed two ounces in weight, where regularly issued to subscribers. Transient newspapers and pamphlets he would charge the same as letters, three cents, for any thing weighing less than two ounces. Mr. Hobbie thinks that an appropriation by Congress would be required for the first year or two under this system; but that the amount of mail matter would soon be sufficient to defray all expenses. He agrees with every body else whose interests do not stand in the way, that the franking privilege should be abolished. The Government and officers of Government can afford to pay for the use of the mail-bags as well as private citizens. There is pretty good reason to hope that the present Congress will farther reduce the rates of postage.

ITEMS OF FOREIGN RELIGIOUS INTELLIGENCE.

THE BIBLE IN BELGIUM.—The Glaneur Missionaire gives accounts of meetings held in different parts of Belgium, for promoting the circulation of the sacred volume. These meetings were thirteen in number, and the aggregate attendance in various localities was about three thousand. We rejoice to learn that they excited much interest, and, in more than one place, have been attended with beneficial results. It is worthy of remark, that the Bishop of Liege, terrified by the progress of Protestantism in his diocese, has recently addressed a letter to his clergy and laity, putting them on their guard against the "new doctrines," and urging them to prevent their further spread. As a means of attaining that end, he recommends every one of his flock generously to contribute to the erection of a new church.

DISSENTERS IN PRUSSIA.—The Minister of Public Worship in Prussia has commanded that the use of Protestant churches be granted to the Protestant Dissenters and German Catholics, wherever such is the desire of the public authorities. It is also announced, that existing laws are about to be modified, so as to secure a wider religious liberty to all Christian sects.

CONVENTS IN AUSTRIA.—The Austrian government is, it is said, about to suppress all monastic institutions existing in that country. It has begun by appropriating to civil uses the convent lately occupied by the Liguarians. This measure, if carried out, will enrich the State by about one hundred million florins.

PIEDMONT.—We regret to state, says a late number of the Evangelical Christendom, that the political changes which have taken place in the kingdom of Sardinia, have ameliorated the lot of the Vaudois of Piedmont, far less than was generally believed. Their condition, practically speaking, has undergone scarcely any improvement. The apparent concessions which have been made to them are neutralized by the most arbitrary conditions. Thus, though the Vaudois may now take up their residence in any part of the kingdom, they may not celebrate public worship, except in the valleys!

[Christian Watchman and Reflector.

PREJUDICE AGAINST COLOR NOT INVINCIBLE.—An exchange says that prejudices against color seem to be rapidly disappearing in Cortland and Tompkins counties in this State. In the first named, Rev. Mr. Ward, a negro black as ebony, is settled as minister over a large and very respectable congregation, composed mostly of white people, and enjoys in every respect the social consideration due to a man of unexceptionable piety, of correct deportment, and of high and cultivated abilities. In Tompkins county, as we learn from the Syracuse Journal, the trustees of a certain school district lately employed a colored man to teach the district school for the winter. Notwithstanding the general liberality of sentiment prevailing in that section, this selection of a teacher was rather too much, and finally an appeal was made to the Secretary of State, to decide whether black persons are competent teachers. We understand, says the Journal, Mr. Morgan gave it as his opinion, that the trustees have not acted illegally, but that it was their duty to consult the wishes of the district in the employment of a teacher.

REVIVAL IN NEW HAMPSHIRE.—The New England Puritan has a letter from Candia, N. H., dated November, 16th which speaks of an interesting and extensive revival as in progress in that town. The pastor writes:—

"For the last seven or eight weeks, the all-absorbing subject—the almost entire topic of conversation has been, the soul and its salvation; and my constant work has been, to lead sinners to the Lamb of God. More than a hundred have often met me in the inquiry meeting; and a majority of these are now rejoicing in hope. Last Monday evening, at my meeting for young converts, I found myself encircled by sixty or seventy who trust they find the Saviour precious. I have found it so necessary to be on the ground all the time, and so evidently has it been the work of the Sovereign Spirit, that I have not felt authorized to call in any aid except the co-operation of the church. Many of the members have worked faithfully, and the blessing of Heaven has seemed to attend our united, though feeble efforts."

THE CHOLERA IN NEW YORK.—The Cholera, so-called, was brought to this neighborhood some three weeks ago, by the packet-ship New York. Up to the present time, the steerage passengers of that ship have remained at the quarantine, about six miles from the city, where several new cases have occurred, and a few deaths. On the 23d, two new cases were reported there, and one death. On the 24th there was one new case and one death. In the city, there were two or three cases soon after the arrival of the New York, but none have occurred for several days past. If the disease is the real Asiatic Cholera, it is of a very mild type, against which temperance, cleanliness, and warm clothing are regarded as a pretty sure protection.

In New Orleans, and some other sea-ports, cases have occurred of what is called Cholera, but they are generally among emigrant passengers, and do not occasion much alarm. The cold weather will probably check it to a great extent. Meanwhile it is hoped that such steps will be taken to remove whatever favors it as to prevent its ravages on the return of spring.

AN EXAMPLE WE WOULD LIKE TO SEE IMITATED.—Not long ago one of our Local Agents requested us to send him an account of what was due for the Recorder in his neighborhood, so that he might attend to its collection. Accordingly we sent him a list of subscribers, with their accounts, showing that fifty-two dollars was due us, all told. Just two weeks from the day we sent this list, we received a reply, accompanied with the fifty-two dollars, and the pay in advance for two new subscribers. This shows what can be done by trying. May the example prove contagious.

NEW YORK CITY TRACT SOCIETY.—This society held its anniversary one evening last week, at which the reports of the various officers were read. It appears from the Treasurer's Report that the last year's receipts have been $13,585.82, and the expenditures $13,340, leaving a balance on hand of $245,82. The Annual Report states that 1,024,140 tracts, comprising 4,715,351 pages, have been distributed; 1,275 Bibles and 880 Testaments supplied; 5,894 volumes lent; 2,080 children gathered into Sunday-schools, and 226 into Public-schools; 181 persons induced to attend Bible-classes, and 2,385 to attend church; 1,627 district prayer-meetings held; 1,655 temperance pledges obtained; 17 backsliders reclaimed; 170 persons hopefully converted; and 125 converts united with evangelical churches.

CONVENTS IN SWITZERLAND.—The Grand Council of the Canton of Lucerne, Switzerland, has declared the suppression of all the convents in that canton. Two of them are to be suppressed immediately, and the others, by a gradual extinction. The Grand Council of Fribourg has likewise suppressed all the convents there.

BLACKWOOD'S MAGAZINE for December has articles on Mrs. Hemans; on the Miseries of Ireland and their Remedies; the Caxtons—Part VIII.; Republican First-Fruits; Prophecies for the Present; Sigismund Fatello; the "Green Hand;" Eastlake's Literature of the Fine Arts. This number closes the 64th volume. A new volume commences with the new year, making the present a good time to subscribe. Republished by Leonard Scott & Co., 79 Fulton-st.

☞ The following, from the Philadelphia Ledger and Transcript of Dec. 19, shows how the business of punishing barbers for shaving their customers on Sunday, is progressing in the city of brotherly love:—

THE BARBERS' CASE.—The certioraris of prosecutions for violation of the Sunday laws, which have been instituted by one portion of the fraternity of barbers against the other, came up before the Court of Common Pleas yesterday. They were argued at considerable length upon the abstract question, whether it was illegal to shave on Sunday, and whether it was "a necessity" within the words of the act of Assembly. We do not consider it necessary to give these arguments in extenso, because, after the counsel had concluded their remarks, the Court told them that the question of the "necessity" or non-necessity of shaving on Sunday was not before them. The judgment of the Court must be upon the return of the certioraris—the record showed no facts upon which the Court could found a judgment. It merely stated that the Alderman had found the defendants guilty of a violation of the Sunday law. And the Court could not know the facts upon which his judgment was based. They cannot decide on the subject unless they have some means of judging as to the necessity. They could do nothing on the subject but affirm the judgment of the record before them. If the parties want to get the question before the Court, the best way would be by an information according to the common law—the Alderman should then set out the evidence on both sides, and the case would then be properly before the Court. "Paley on convictions" would furnish forms. The counsel then said that they would agree upon a case stated, or make some other arrangement to bring up the case fairly; and so the cases went off.

☞ The editor of Zion's Herald makes the following sensible suggestions, the remembrance of which would save newspaper correspondents a great deal of uneasiness:—

COMMUNICATIONS.—It is a generally understood law of the press, that articles in the hands of the editor are not to be returned—correspondents should always keep copies if they deem it important to preserve them. From one-third to one-half of our communications are rejected; the task of preserving and returning them would be a serious one. No paper in the land does so; in most cases it would be impracticable. We hope our correspondents will bear this in mind. One word more: the disposition we make of communications must not be misapprehended, but borne with good temper. We are compeled often to reject really meritorious articles; we are in a position to judge of their effect, and can see circumstances which may not be discernible to our readers. We reject a great deal of poetry, portions of which are at times very fine, while other but inseparable parts are too defective for publication. In such cases we summarily put it under the table, for we are not poet enough to rectify the defect. Poets are usually sensitive, but we are happy to find our own quite good natured in such cases, and disposed to "try again" when we think they "miss fire."

A SAW-FISH.—Geo. W. Bowditch, Secretary of the Commissioners of the new Custom House at New Orleans, has sent to the National Institute the jaws, saw, part of the back-bone, and an egg of a very large female saw-fish caught by him in July, 1846, at the mouth of the Mississippi river. He says:—

"She was first enclosed in a seine (while hauling for red-fish) which she took away with her and run up the bay about half a mile, when, finding the water shoaling, she turned suddenly and made for sea. It is supposed that the seine blinded her, as it was very much entangled about her saw and head; and she struck with such force on the extreme point of the reef, that she ran part out of water, and could not get off. She was then shot in the head with a large rifle; it took three shots to kill her. She measured 21 feet 3 inches in length, and 8 feet 9 inches in a direct line from fin to fin across the back. There were taken from her maw 5 red-fish, 3 sheep-heads, and a large drum-fish—the latter weighing some 30 lbs., which had been caught that morning, beside some two or three barrels of other fish partly digested. Her liver was tried out, and filled a pork barrel with pure oil. There were two bags, about the size of Liverpool salt-sacks, filled with spawn, or eggs. The one with the saw is a specimen. In drying, it shrunk to about half of its original size. The color was a bright yellow."

PROSPECTS OF THE SANDWICH ISLANDS.—The Boston Recorder reports the most interesting items of missionary intelligence communicated at the recent monthly concert in that city, and from its report we copy the following:—

"From the Sandwich Islands we learn that at nearly all the stations, there has been more than usual interest. The number admitted into the churches during the last two years, has been 2,559. The whole number of communicants is now 23,846. In the general revival, fourteen of the children of the missionaries had united with the church. Some of these are looking forward to the gospel ministry, and will rise up and take the place of their fathers, and preach the unsearchable riches of Christ to that people, and to those who may reside on those shores.

"The Sandwich Islanders are advancing in Christian liberality. The contributions collected for benevolent purposes during the last two years, are greatly in advance of what they have been in former years. The principle of systematic benevolence is taking hold on the hearts of the people. They begin to feel it not only a duty, but a privilege, to give.

"The educational prospects of the Hawaiians are represented as steadily improving. And the state of public sentiment in relation to the use of intoxicating drinks is remarkable. 'The King, the Government, and the nation,' say the missionaries, 'adhere to the principles of temperance; and the whole body might not unaptly be designated as one great temperance society.'

LAST WEEK'S CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

December 18.

In the SENATE, Mr. Douglass called up his bill, of which previous notice had been given, relating to the admission of California and New Mexico as a State, and moved that it be referred to the Committee on Territories. Mr. Berrien, of Ga., moved that it be referred to the Judiciary Committee. The question was discussed at some length, when finally the original motion was put and lost; Yeas 24, Nays 25. It was then on motion referred to the Judiciary Committee. Mr. Downs, of La., offered a resolution on the expediency of establishing a United States Mint in California, which was read and adopted. Mr. Miller, of N. J., offered a resolution calling on the President for information concerning any correspondence with Spain in favor of purchasing the Island of Cuba; which was adopted. Mr. Benton then brought up the bill for a railroad across the Isthmus of Panama, which led to considerable discussion, but upon which no action was taken.

In the HOUSE, a long discussion arose upon a motion to reconsider the vote adopting Mr. Root's resolution respecting slavery in California and New Mexico. Mr. Giddings asked leave to introduce a bill giving to the people of the District of Columbia the privilege to express their sentiments on the subject of Slavery in the City and District, which was read twice. Mr. Jacob Thompson and Mr. Tompkins, of Miss., each interrogated Mr. Giddings as to the interpretation of the bill. He replied that it meant to include both whites and blacks. He knew no difference of color in these matters. Mr. Thompson, of Miss., moved to lay the bill on the table. On this motion the yeas and nays were demanded, and on being taken resulted in the affirmative; Yeas 115; Nays 77. So the bill was laid upon the table.

December 19.

In the SENATE, the resolution offered yesterday, calling upon the President for information concerning correspondence had with the Government of Spain, for the purchase of the Island of Cuba, led to considerable discussion, and was finally laid over. The project for a railroad across the Isthmus from Chagres to Panama was also discussed, and informally laid aside.

In the HOUSE, various petitions and memorials were presented and duly referred. Several bills were also presented and appropriately referred; after which the session was occupied in discussing the reference of the President's Message.

December 20.

In the SENATE, Mr. Breese moved that the bill for the graduation of the price of Public Lands should be made the order of the day for the second Monday in January next, which was agreed to. The bill for reclaiming by drainage the everglades of Florida came up for consideration, and gave rise to some discussion. The establishment of a collection district at Whitehall, was taken up. After being considered and amended it was postponed.

In the HOUSE, Mr. Vinton, of Ohio, reported a bill for carrying into effect the thirteenth article of the Mexican Treaty, respecting the appointment of a Commissioner and Engineer to run a boundary line between the two countries, which was read and referred to the Committee of the Whole. Mr. Hubbard, of Conn., offered a resolution instructing the Committee on Foreign Relations to make inquiry respecting the present Consular system established in China, which was read and referred to the Committee of the Whole. Mr. Smith, of Ind., reported a bill providing for the establishment of a Government in Upper California, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole.

December 21.

In the SENATE, several memorials and petitions relating to various subjects were presented by different members, received, and referred. Mr. Dix, of N. Y., moved to take up the bill for the establishment of a Collection District at Whitehall, which after some consideration was passed.

In the HOUSE, among the petitions presented was one by Mr. Evans, of Md., from messengers, bringing the Electoral votes for President and Vice President of the several States. They pray that inasmuch as their mileage has been cut down from 25 cents to 12 1-2 cents per mile, which is amply sufficient, that Hon. Members of Congress should also reduce their own mileage. On motion, the memorial was laid on the table.

The call of the States for Resolutions being in order, Mr. Gott, of N. Y., offered the following resolution, and moved the previous question thereon:—

Whereas, The traffic in human beings as chattels now prosecuted within this Metropolis of the Republic is contrary to natural justice, to the fundamental principle of our Political System, and is a notorious reproach to our country throughout Christendom and a serious hindrance to the progress of Republican Liberty among the Nations of the earth: Therefore,

Resolved, That the Committee on the District of Columbia be instructed to bring in, as soon as practicable, a bill prohibiting the Slave-Trade in said District.

The previous question being seconded, and the main question ordered by the House, a motion was made that the Resolution do lie on the table—on which the yeas and nays were ordered, and taken—yeas 82; nays 85. So it was not laid on the table. The question then recurred on the passage of the Resolution, and, the main question having been ordered by the House, and the yeas and nays demanded, the resolution passed by a vote of 98 to 87.

December 22.

The SENATE proceeded to the consideration of the bill in favor of draining the everglades of Florida, which, after considerable discussion, was postponed. Mr. Dix offered a resolution of inquiry in regard to any change required in the Consular system with China and Turkey, which was also adopted. Some other unimportant matters were attended to, and the Senate adjourned till after Christmas.

The HOUSE resolved itself into Committee of the Whole on the state of the Union, Mr. McClelland, of Mich., in the chair, and took up for consideration sundry private bills, and the Committee soon after rose and reported progress, when, on motion, the House adjourned.

December 23.

The Senate was not in session. The House held a session, but did little else than to debate about adjourning. It finally adjourned over to the 27th.

A THREE-FOLD TRAGEDY.—Thursday afternoon last, about 2 o'clock, the neighborhood of Walnut-st., N. Y., was the scene of a tragedy, in which two men named Francis Geiger and Frederick Willam Marks, both Germans, were killed, and a woman named Maria Bochine so horribly wounded in the breast that she was not expected to survive more than a few hours. The origin of this frightful occurence seems to have been jealousy, as it appears that the woman, some time since, was brought to this country from Belgium by Francis Geiger, with whom at first she lived. She left him for Marks a few weeks ago, and went to the house at the corner of Walnut and Henry-sts., where she assisted him in his business as a tailor. Their residence was, however, discovered by Geiger, who is a large and rather respectable looking man, and after proceeding to the locality in one of the Grand-st. stages, he entered their room, surprised them, and drawing a broad spanish dirk-knife from his breast, attacked the woman, giving her four frightful gashes, and almost cutting away the right breast. After she had fallen, he attack Marks until he killed him. He then stabbed himself in the breast four times, and finally drove the blade through his heart. All the parties concerned in this horrible transaction are foreigners. The woman could speak only French.

TAX ON CALIFORNIA GOLD.—A Washington letter mentions a rumor that the Government in Cabinet Council decided to send immediately a number of small vessels of war, brigs and schooners, to enforce an embargo upon all merchant vessels going into the harbors of Monterey, San Francisco, and other ports on the coast of California, requiring them to come under bonds not to receive on board for transportation any part or parcel of the gold ore dug from the public lands or mines on the Sacramento, or other parts of the gold region of Alta California. The decision has been come to, doubtless, to prevent European vessels, as well as those of South America, from transporting vast quantities of the gold ore to be coined in foreign mints, without paying the rightful tax or per centage to the Government of the United States. [Phil. Inq.

A BLACK REPRESENTATIVE.—At a sitting of the National Assembly of France, a considerable movement took place in the Chamber, in consequence of the appearance of M. Mazuline, whose admission was lately announced for the colony of Martinique. The Representative, who is of the blackest hue, walked up to the extreme end of the Chamber, and took his seat immediately under the clock. His features were then visible, and presented to view the true negro type. The movement through the Chamber continued to increase, and arrived at its highest pitch when the new comer coolly drew forth an eye-glass, and proceedod leisurely to examine the different parts of the Assembly. It was some time before the President could secure sufficient attention to allow the discussion on the constitution to proceed.

DREADFUL OCCURRENCE.—The Springfield (Ill.) Journal, of Nov. 28th, published the following:—A most melancholy occurrence took place at the house of Mr. Harrison Baker, on the South Fork, in this county, on Saturday last. The parents were not at home, and there were some small children of the neighborhood present. The eldest son of Mr. Baker, aged about 7 years, took down a gun, which was heavily loaded for deer, and discharged it. The charge carried away a portion of his sister's head, two years older than himself, and instantly killed her; it cut off some of the fingers of another child, and then passed through the side of a third, which was alive yesterday noon; but there was little expectation of its surviving.

NEW ZEALAND.—An arrival with papers of Aug. 23, from Wellington to New Zealand, furnishes us with the following: The missionary brig John Wesley, Capt. Buck, arrived in port on Wednesday morning, from the Friendly Isles, the only group at which she touched since her departure hence. She brings no other news, except that in April a terrific hurricane swept those lovely islands, leaving the unfortunate natives without shelter or food. King George has sent to Gov. Gray for some horned cattle, and to others he has written orders for tea, coffee, sugar, flour, earthenware, and clothing.

A telegraphic dispatch for the N. Y. Tribune, dated Boston, Dec. 18, says—"A vessel which arrived at this port this morning, from the Sandwich Islands, reports them to be almost depopulated, the inhabitants having left for California. We learn by the papers that a most horrid massacre had occurred at the Ice Islands on the 15th of April, the particulars of which, however, are not given. Two English men-of-war had gone there to investigate the matter.

An afflicted father would be grateful to receive information where he can find his son, named Uriah Springstein, aged about 28, who left his home in Windsor, Broome county, N. Y., on the 6th of November last, deranged, and has not since been heard of. Any person who will return him to the subscriber, will be reasonably rewarded, and receive the thanks of his parents. Information may be sent to Windsor Post Office, Broome county, N. Y.

The Philadelphia Ledger says—"We yesterday saw exhibibited in the reading-room of the Exchange, by Mr. Evans, a very ingeniously constructed combination door-lock, for banks, stores, &c., the invention of a young German. One of the principal peculiarities of the invention is the key, which is so formed as to be changed by a guage belonging to it, into a variety of forms, with either one of which the lock may be locked, but can only be unlocked by the key in the same form as that in which it locked it.

SUMMARY.

The Boston Eve. Journal states that Mr. S. I. Bigelow, a teacher in the Trenton Medical School, has made known a discovery of the highest importance as it regards surgery. It consists in a new and certain method of procuring the union of incised wounds by first intention in a few hours. A paper was read before the Boston Medical Society, by Dr. H. Bigelow, a surgeon of the Hospital, who stated that it had already been introduced there with success. It is said to be a preparation of gun-cotton and sulphuric ether—the two great lions of the day yoked in some way for drawing together wounds.

A machine has been invented by Billings & Harrison, which rots, breaks, scutches, and turns out, four hundred pounds of clean flax or hemp per day, equal to any foreign article. This must produce a revolution in this business, and instead of being importers of flax and hemp, we must become manufacturers of them, and extensive exporters to other portions of the world.

The Ashtabula Sentinel states that Messrs. Mills, Convers & Co., of that county, recently shipped in one week, five entire cargoes of cheese, amounting to over five hundred tons, from Ashtabula harbor. They have purchased in Ashtabula, Lake, and Geauga counties during the last two months, over 1000 tons of cheese for shipment to New York.

A telegraphic dispatch to the New York Tribune, dated Louisville, Ky., December 21, says that the steamer American burst her steam and connection pipe below Madison, on Tuesday night, by which ten persons were severely scalded. Lockwell, the first clerk, was badly scalded and otherwise injured; Samuel Price, the first engineer, and the second clerk, F. M. Leeker, are not expected to live. The American was towed to the city.

The Springfield Republican says that Gen. Wool and Mr. A. B. Smith arrived at the Union House from Boston; each of them upon his arrival found himself moneyless. General Wool had while in the cars, about fifty-five dollars, chiefly in gold. Mr. Smith had four hundred and twenty-five dollars in bank-bills. Each carried his money in his pantaloons pocket.

Three negro boys were kidnapped from their homes, in Hamilton county, Ill., on the evening of the 4th inst. The citizens of the county offer a reward for their recovery and the detection of the kidnappers. It is supposed they were taken to the South.

Hon. Jacob Burnet has remitted five hundred dollars to the American Colonization Society at Washington, in aid of the efforts of the Pennsylvania Society to effect the liberation of five hundred and sixty-seven slaves, offered gratuitous emancipation on their assuming the expenses of their colonization.

At a meeting of the Board of Trnstees of the College of New Jersey, at Princeton, the honorary degree of D. D., was conferred upon, Rev. Nathaniel S. Prime, of Ballston, N. Y. and Rev. James Hamilton, of the Free Church' Regent Square, London; and the honorary degree of A. M. on Rev. Joseph Warren, of Allahabad, India.

A party of thirty persons recently left New Orleans for Chagres, on their way to California. The party is composed of persons belonging to the following different nations—Denmark 2, Ireland 3, Germany 6, England 2, Sweden 2, Switzerland 3, France 2, and Americans 10. The expedition will cross from Chagres to Panama, and take a coaster from that port to San Francisco.

The Pittsburg Gazette states, in order to afford some idea of the labor performed by the telegraphic operators, who transmitted the President's Message to the West, that the paper on which the telegraphic signs were made, in the Pittsburg office, measures seventeen thousand two hundred feet in length.

A mass meeting was held at Andes, Delaware county, "for the purpose of adopting measures to prevent the farther collection of rents—to establish confidence in the party, and transact other important business connected with the anti-rent organization."

A rich young gentleman of Troy has been fined one thousand dollars for running over and breaking the arm of a poor child in the street, while driving at a furious rate. The Judge bore down hard on the fact that he displayed no regret at the act, and did not stop to see whether the child was hurt.

The man who robbed the Treasurer's office of Bedford county, Pa., in August last, has been arrested. His name is Samuel Waters, a former steward of the poor-house in Bedford. $1,500 of the stolen money has been recovered.

The British and North American Royal Mail Steamship Company are said to pay one-eighth of the entire dock receipts of Liverpool, and to disburse in that port nearly ten thousand dollars a week in wages and tradesmen's bills.

The annual meeting of the New York State Agricultural Society will be held in Albany, on Wednesday, the 17th of January, 1849, at which time premiums will be awarded on grain and root crops, butter, cheese, fruits, &c.

Mrs. Royall says of editors—"Take them all in all, they are the greatest benefactors of the human race—the most worthy, and the worst rewarded." O, that the people would consider these things.

Look out for counterfeit fives on the Sacketts Harbor Bank. They are lithrographic imitations of the genuine. N. Quackenbush, Register, on the back.

At the palace of the Emperor of Austria a horse is always kept saddled and bridled during the night, for him to mount.

Since the introduction of croton water, it is stated that one hundred millions of dollars have been invested in manufactures in the city of N. York.

President Polk's Message, containing upward of fifteen thousand words, was flashed all the way from Baltimore to St. Louis in twenty-four hours, and this too, with the minutest punctuation marked in the document. Copies were also dropped on the way, at York, Harrisburg, Carlisle, Chambersburg, Bedford, and Pittsburg, in Pennsylvania; Massillion, Cleveland, Zanesville, Columbus, Dayton, and Cincinnati, in Ohio; Madison and Evansville, in Indiana; Louisville in Kentucky; and Saline, in Illinois.

Judge Burnet, son of the celebrated Bishop or Salisbury, when young, is said to have been of a wild and dissipated turn. Being one day found by his father in a very serious humor, "What is the matter with you, Tom," said the Bishop, "what are you ruminating on?" "A greater work than your Lordship's History of the Reformation," answered the son. "Aye! what is that?" asked the father. "The reformation of myself, my lord," replied the son.

The Bos. Cour. gives another instance of a serious bank mistake. The teller of the Exchange Bank paid out on a banking check, two one thousand dollar bills, instead of two one hundred dollar bills. Restitution of the money has been made.

Mr. Ellet, the engineer who constructed the Niagara Suspension Bridge, has proposed to the Mayor of St. Louis, to throw a similar structure across the Mississippi from that city to the Illinois shore. He estimates the cost of the undertaking at one hundred and fifty thousand dollars.

The Chronotype says that no little excitement was created in one of the streets of Albany on Monday evening by the appearance of a wolf prowling about. All attempts to take him were ineffectual. His wolfship possessed a sharp appetite, as he killed during the night some eight or ten geese belonging to one of the residents.

A man who has returned from California being asked what goods were the best investments to be carried to California, replied, "Green spectacles by all means, for they are needed to protect the eyes of the gold-diggers from the brilliancy of the metal."

A Washington correspondent of the New York Mirror says that Col. Taylor, a brother of the President elect, who resides at Baltimore, is literally flooded with the missives of office-seekers, who approach him with a view to his influence over his brother.

The Cincinnati Historical Society, says the Sunbeam, has received from Copenhagen, six superb volumes of antiquarian researches, proving that America was settled by the Scandinavians, in the tenth century.

A young man named Folger, says the New York Sun, who went out to California a year or more ago, returned recently with $15,000 in gold, to be expended in goods for a second California speculation.

The colored people of Pennsylvania have been holding a State Convention at Harrisburg, for the purpose of adopting measures to secure to themselves the right of suffrage.

The Bangor Democrat states that there will not be half the lumbering upon the Penobscot waters that there was last year.

The New York Sun estimates that fifty thousand persons will emigrate from this city to California, between now and next July.

BROOKFIELD, December 8th, 1848.

TRACT ON SUNDAY LEGISLATION.

At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Sabbath Tract Society, held on the 15th of October, the Corresponding Secretary was instructed to offer a Premium of Ten Dollars for the best Tract, not exceeding 16 pages on the subject of Sunday Legislation, showing its anti-Christian and anti-republican tendencies. Manuscripts on the subject are solicited, and may be forwarded to the Corresponding Secretary, Geo. B. Utter, before the 15th day of January, 1849, at which time those on hand will be referred to a Committee appointed by the Board for examination and decision.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office. It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

PROSPECTUS OF THE ### EDINBURGH QUARTERLY MAGAZINE
OF MOAAL AND INTELLECTUAL SCIENCE.

Volume I. for 1848—American edition.

GEORGE COMBE AND ROBERT COX, EDITORS.

THE many and earnest desires expressed by the lovers of Phrenology on this side of the Atlantic, and the hope of still further advancing this great cause, has induced us to publish an American edition of this profound and

SCIENTIFIC QUARTERLY.

Its character and merits need but little comment, further than that it emanates from some of the ablest minds in England and Scotland, and has been before the public more than twenty years.

GEORGE COMBE,

The distinguished phrenological writer, is its principal contributor and virtual conductor. This work embodies all the new discoveries, together with all of interest which appertains to Phrenological Science.

MAGNETISM

It also advocates, showing its adaptation to medical science, to the relief of human suffering, and to its other various and important applications.

It also urges, with great ability and pre-eminent success,

HUMAN RIGHTS,

Showing the bearings of this science of mind to legislation, moral and political government, as well as to individual self control and intellectual cultivation.

The first number will be embellished with a beautiful portrait of Mr. Combe, and subsequent numbers by those of other distinguished individuals. Each number will contain 96 pages, and will be issued quarterly on the following REDUCED TERMS, invariably in advance:

☞ Editors who copy the above, and send papers to Fowler & Wells, New York, shall receive the work.

CONSTITUTION
OF A
SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST PUBLISHING SOCIETY.

ART. 1.—This Society shall be known by the name of "The Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society."

ART. 2.—The object of this Society shall be to print and publish such periodicals, books, &c., as shall meet the wants of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination, and promote the cause of Christ generally.

ART. 3.—Each contributor of five dollars may become a Member of the Society, and each contributor of twenty-five dollars may become an Honorary Director, with the privilege of participating in the deliberations of the Board of Managers.

ART. 4.—The Society shall hold an Annual Meeting, at which it shall elect a President, a Vice President, a Corresponding Secretary, a Recording Secretary, and a Treasurer, who, together with four others elected for the purpose, shall constitute a Board of Managers to conduct the business of the Society, having power to make their own by-laws, and to fill any vacancies that may occur in their body.

ART. 5.—The Board of Managers shall meet quarterly for the transaction of business, at such time and place as shall have been appointed at a previous meeting. The Recording Secretary shall call extra meetings of the Board, whenever any three members of the Board shall request him to do so.

ART. 6.—The minutes of each meeting of the Board shall be signed by the Chairman and the Recording Secretary.

ART. 7.—The first Annual Meeting of the Society shall be held in the City of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, 1849, 25th day of the month; and subsequent Annual Meetings may be held at such times and places as the Society shall direct. At these meetings the Board of Managers shall present a Report of their transactions, together with the Treasurer's account.

ART. 8.—Should there at any time, on the presentation of the Annual Report of the Board of Managers, be a surplus on hand, over and above what may, in the judgment of the Board, be required to meet the wants of the establishment, the Society shall divide such surplus in equal sums among the following benevolent objects, viz: Missions, the circulation of religious Tracts, the education of candidates for the ministry, and the support of indigent superannuated ministers or their widows and orphans. Should the Society for any reason ever be dissolved, its property, if any, shall be divided in the same manner as above provided in case of surplus.

ART. 9.—This Constitution may be altered at any Annual Meeting of the Society, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

☞ The above is the Constitution formed by delegates from the Eastern, Central, and Western Associations, at a meeting held in New Market, N. J., on the 5th and 6th days of September last. It is kept standing, for the purpose of giving all an opportunity to become familiar with it. Will not some friend of the cause, in each section of the denomination, volunteer to obtain what members he can in his own neighborhood, and forward their names?

Miscellaneous.

THE FLIGHT OF TIME.

BY J. G. PERCIVAL.

Faintly flow thou gentle river,
Like a dream that dies away;
Down the ocean gliding over,
Keep thy calm unruffled way;
Time with such a silent motion,
Floats along on wings of air,
To eternity's dark ocean,
Burying all its treasures there.

Roses bloom, and then they wither;
Cheeks are bright, then fade and die;
Shapes of light are wafted hither—
Then, like visions, hurry by;
Quick as clouds at evening driven,
O'er the many-clouded west,
Years are bearing us to Heaven,
Home of happiness and rest.

MONKEYS IN INDIA.

Strangers are very much surprised to see monkeys romping about the tops of the houses in Madras, or dashing across the streets; and sailors, on landing, are greatly amused by them, and try to catch them, or hit them with sticks and stones—but all in vain, as they expertly jump out of the way, and then show their teeth, as if in derision of the assailants. Some years ago these animals were so numerous, so mischievous, and destructive to property, especially in pulling off tiles, and in stealing from people in the markets and bazaars, that it was determined to catch the depredators, put them in cages, and carry them off to distant jungles; for the people had a great aversion to kill them. After much trouble, many of them were caught; but they were so very refractory that some of them received a dozen lashes each, and were sent far away. Many of them found their way back again, and now the inhabitants are as much annoyed as ever.

Within the last eight or ten months, they have played all sorts of pranks in our houses; for, as we are obliged to allow the doors and windows to be open on account of the heat, they can easily enter my apartment. I had the mortification to find that a young fellow had got hold of my Pilgrim's Progress, and had actually torn down the plate where the Pilgrim receives his "parchment roll;" and as he saw me, leisurely walked off, seeming to say, as he looked around at me, "have I not done it?" Another rogue had no doubt seen some one use a tooth brush, and he carried it completely off. My wafers they are perpetually stealing, and several times they have taken away the box. Nay, the steel pens were quite in their way; and one day, when I was nearly blaming a servant, it was discovered that a monkey was the thief. As for tumblers, and various earthen vessels, I know not how many they have broken; and loaves of bread, if not watched or locked up, are soon in the hands of these gentry; and when the creatures have gone a short distance, they sit down to look at us, and then begin to eat. I ought to have said before, that they delight in my letters and notes; and after gravely inspecting them, they tear them in pieces.

Sometimes they get on my bed and scratch themselves, then roll about in their gambols, and leave plenty of marks behind. At other times they admire themselves in a looking-glass, and endeavor to touch what they believe to be one of their own kin. Not long ago they broke one of them and carried off a beautiful silver watch. They were soon on a neigboring house, and commenced their experiments; the glass was forthwith broken, the second hand, which no doubt astonished them by its movements, was torn off, and the other hands were severed in the same manner. The ticking of the watch was the greatest puzzle of all. The servants were after them; but no, Jocko could run well, and did not wish to part with his prize. A fine loaf of bread, however, was brought, and placed at some distance, and pug could not resist that. He abandoned the watch for what to him was far better, and the watch was regained, though sadly injured. This unfortunate transaction, however, had only stimulated their curiosity; and they one day succeeded in purloining from the table a large gold watch belonging to the writer of this paper, and carried it to the top of the house; but they were detected in their villainy, and frightened away.

"Well, but why not kill them?" say my young friends. I did shoot one, but I shall not soon do it again; he looked so much like a human being; his companions also made such a noise, and hooted me for days after; then the natives were much offended; so that I cannot try the plan again. Then I offered a large sum to any servant who would catch me one; for I determined to make an example of him, and trim him up a little, and crop his ears and tail, so as to frighten others; but all in vain. We got a large rat-trap, and put some bread in it. An inexperienced young monkey set at it, and was caught; but he worked hard, and assisted by his tapering head, succeeded after some deep scratches in liberating himself, and shortly returned with another, to show him the machine. They examined it and walked away!

The next day we tried again; and they so managed the matter as to carry off the bread. I procured poison and put it on bread and butter and preserves. An old fellow seized the prize, chewed a little, then looked at me, put it out of his mouth, shook his head, and bid us good morning. A young fellow came, and he did exactly the same thing.

[Juvenile Offering.

A Modern Jack Shepherd.—A boy of 17 was found hidden in a rubbish box in the New York Custom House, by the porter, recently. He had about him "The life of Monroe Edwards, the forger," "The life of Dr. Jennings, the celebrated victimized," "The Newgate Calendar," and the "Travelers' Guide," a pair of Colt's revolving pistols, loaded and capped, a flask of powder, bullets and moulds, a box of matches, two pieces of sperm candles, a pair of false whiskers and moustaches, a piece of yellow ochre, used to discolor the skin and make one look older, a small phial of chloroform and a sponge, and $45 in gold. In some of his pockets small pieces of paper were found, with directions, copied in neat writing, giving the manner to alter the complexion, to write invisible, &c.; and likewise two small memorandum books, in one of which were written cyphers, and the other had been kept as a diary since November 16. He turned out to be a boy who had been advertised as "missing." The father came and said his son used to be a good boy, but had latterly been ruined by reading bad books. The boy robbed his father of $160 and fled. Now he was trying to rob the U. S. Sub-Treasury in the Custom House. His book contains a list of all the jewelry stores in New York, and all the great rogues in the country. It is a strange affair.

THE MAYOR OF LONDON.

The Lord Mayor of London has a salary of £90,000 a year. He has also a mansion or palace provided by the city corporation, which is furnished with great splendor; the banqueting hall and the Egyptian hall are magnificent apartments. There is a spacious and elaborately carved state bed. There are twenty-four footmen, in sumptuous liveries, allowed the Mayor, besides a sword-bearer, who rides with him in his state carriage, a chaplain, a toastmaster, two marshals, dressed in sumptuous uniform, and twenty marshal's men, in blue, red, and gold. The Mayor during his year of of office is always dressed in a court suit, and wears a scarlet mantle, trimmed with sable fur, a large gold chain, and diamond badge pending from it around his neck. His wife is called the Lady Mayoress, and should she become a mother during the time of her husband's mayoralty, she receives a silver cradle as a present from the corporation.

The carriage of the Mayor is generally most beautifully adorned with painting and gilding, and the liveries of the servants are generally gaudy in the extreme, being one mass of gold and silver lace. The state coach is an immense vehicle, of carved work, richly gilded, and having paintings representing the triumphs of commerce and civilization over barbarism. These paintings are by the celebrated Hogarth. "The Lord Mayor's Day," the ninth of November, the day of his inauguration into office, is one of great splendor; the state coach with six horses, accompanied by the footmen in state livery, the whole of the guilds, or city companies, in their mantles of ceremony, large banners of silk, with the arms of the companies and a number of knights in full armor, as in the days of the tournaments. This gorgeous procession returns by water. The boats are all gold and carving, the rowers in rich dresses, twenty to each boat, and the banners of all sorts streaming from them. The sheriffs of the city, two in number, receive no salaries; they have very splendid carriages and liveries during their year of office, and wear in the courts purple silk gowns, with fur trimming and gold chains.

THE DISMAL SWAMP.

The Dismal Swamp of Virginia and North Carolina is a fearful place. It is full of wild birds, wild beasts, reptiles, and runaway slaves. Huge bull-frogs, nearly as large as a man's foot, with smaller specimens of the same genus, open a "concert" every night—great indolent herons and other aquatic birds, too lazy to take a fish unless he jumps out of the water of his own accord, sit around on the trees. Dense swarms of musquetoes, ephemers, and sand-flies, throng the air. At about sunset and later, all the animal life is in motion. Every throat is open. The croaking of the frogs, buzzing of insects, cooing of turtle-doves, like the strains from a thousand musical instruments, pitched on as many different keys, make an assemblage of harmony and discord that defies description. The vegetation of the Swamp is more luxuriant than can be seen in any other part of the world. The timber is pine, oak, and sweet-gum, black-gum, holly, the beautiful tulip-tree, the cypress, loaded down with festoons of moss, the mistletoe bough in dark green bunches growing about on many different trees with different kinds of timber. Immense cane-brakes, so thickly interwoven with vines that one might about as well attempt to walk into a stone wall as to force his way through. A canal is made through the Swamp, and part of the way it goes through the lake, and on its bank runs the stage road. Snakes, lizards, scorpions, and other loathsome reptiles, abound in great numbers.

PUNCTUATION.

A country schoolmaster, who found it rather difficult to make his pupils observe the difference between a comma and a full stop, adopted a plan of his own, which he flattered himself would make them proficient in the art of punctuation: thus, in reading, when they came to a comma, they were to say tick, and read on to a colon or semi-colon, tick, tick, and when a full point, tick, tick, tick. Now it so happened that the worthy Dominie received notice that the parish minister was to pay a visit of examination to his school, and as he was desirous to show his pupils to the best advantage, he gave them an extra drill the day before the examination. 'Now,' said he, addressing his pupils, 'when you read before the minister to-morrow, you leave out the ticks, though you must think them as you go along, for the sake of elocution.' So far so good. Next day came, and with it the minister, ushered into the room by the Dominie, who, with smiles and bows, hoped that the training of the scholars would meet his approval. Now it so happened that the first boy called up by the minister had been absent the preceding day, and, in the hurry, the master had forgotten to give him his instructions how to act. The minister asked the boy to read a chapter in the Old Testament, which he pointout. The boy complied, and in his best accent began to read: 'And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, tick, speak unto the children of Israel, saying, tick, tick, and thus shalt thou say unto them, tick, tick, tick.' This unfortunate sally, is his own style, operated like a shower-bath on the poor Dominie, while the minister and his friends almost died with laughter.

Lawyer's Fees.—The claim of Messrs Geo. M. Dallas and John M. Read, for services as counsel for the defendant in the suit of the city of Philadelphia vs. the Northern Liberties and Spring Garden, to restrain these districts from the free use of the Schuylkill water, and which suit these eminent lawyers gained, was the snug little sum of $10,000, or $5,000 each. The districts deemed the charge exorbitant, and would not pay it. The learned counsel agreed to abate three-fifths each, of their original claim, and take four thousand dollars between them. The Northern Liberties has resolved to pay her share, $2,000 of this amount.

The Gold Fever.—A friend asked our advice on the subject of emigrating to California, and trying his luck in gathering gold. We advised him to stay in New York, and be contented with a comfortable living here. We know of no greater misfortune to a country than that bread should be scarce and gold plenty. Look at the fate of Sir Walter Raleigh; look at all the expeditions in search of gold; look at the fate of Spain, once the first power in the world, now the last, in consequence of her gold and silver mines in Mexico and Peru. No greater calamity can befall a nation or people, than to be rich in gold and poor in comforts. Here are young men going on a five month's voyage round Cape Horn to California—they jump ashore and rush to the banks of the Sacramento river to pick up grains of gold—the more they find the less its value. If they are lucky enough to pick up 50 dollars a day, the whole goes for flour and other necessaries; and if they are lucky, and collect some thousands in gold, and wish to return home, they are robbed and murdered on the way. Bands of Indians and banditti will hover round the gold regions to intercept and rob the industrious gold gatherers, and finally a revolution will break out among the speculators themselves, and they will cut each other's throats. It has not been said without reason, that "gold is the root of all evil," and many a man, with a few hundred dollars in hand, a good business, and making a comfortable living, will throw them all up and hasten to California in search of the dross. Suppose he succeeds; he lives in no greater security and comfort than he does here. Rich and poor can secure nothing from wealth but a comfortable living. Can they not secure it here? This gold fever will destroy the profits of many persons, and the bubble will burst, and we shall hear no more of it.

[Morn. Star.

Husbands and Wives.—A Swiss Journal furnishes us with the following romantic tale of real life. A married couple who had lived for several years in a state of anti-conjugal harmony, determined to part, and made an appointment with each other to meet at the notary's to sign the deed of separation. To arrive at the office of the man of law they had to cross a lake, and, as it happened, they both embarked in the same boat. On their passage a storm arose, and the boat was upset. The husband being a good swimmer soon reached the shore in safety. On looking around to see the fate of his fellow passengers, he distinguished his wife struggling for her life, but in imminent danger. A feeling of his early affections returned to him, and plunging into the water, he swam to her and succeeded in rescuing her. When she recovered her senses, and learned to whom she owed her life, she threw herself into his arms, and he embraced her with equal cordiality. They then vowed an oblivion of all their differences, and that they would live and die together.

English Beauty.—Speaking of Englsh women, Mrs. Kirkland says:—

With a strong prepossession in favor of English beauty, and a notion that such an occasion as that of the drawing-room would afford a fine field for the display of it, we must confess to have been disappointed in our search. Very few of the ladies we saw were more than comely; a large portion fell behind even that. One beautiful woman there was, whom we were led to suppose to have been the Marchioness of Duro, though we could not ascertain it. We were told that that lady, the daughter-in law of the Duke of Wellington, and the Duchess of Argyle, daughter of the Duchess of Sunderland, were the only conspicuously beautiful women at court. Neither among the common people in the streets of London, nor in the country towns, did we observe the fresh complexion and buxom air which we had been taught to expect. Low-life beauty seems to have been spoiled by factories; and if there was rural beauty we did not see it."

Families of Literary Men.—With the exception of the noble Surrey, we cannot point out a representative in the male line of any English poet. The blood of beings of that order can seldom be traced far down, even in the female line. There is no English poet prior to the middle of the eighteenth century—and, we believe, no great author, except Clarendon and Shaftesbury—of whose blood we have any inheritance among us. Chaucer's only son died childless; Shakspeare's line expired in his daughter's only daughter. None of the other dramatists of that age left any progeny: neither did Raleigh, nor Bacon, nor Cowley, nor Butler. The grand-daughter of Milton was the last of his blood. Newton, Locke, Pope, Swift, Arbuthnot, Hume, Gibbon, Cowper, Gray, Walpole, Cavendish, (and we might greatly extend the list,) never married. Neither Bolingbroke, nor Addison, nor Warburton, nor Johnson, nor Burke, transmitted their blood.

How to Plant Chesnuts.—The plan for raising the chesnut is this: the nuts must not be suffered to become stock dry. Plant them in the spring of the year. The first winter protect them from the frost, or they are apt to be killed. The next spring transplant them in the following manner: select a dry soil, dig a hole eighteen inches deep and three feet wide; fill it with small loose stones and clay to within six inches of the surface, set your tree on that, take care of it, and it will grow well, and in four years bear nuts. The chesnut should be more attended to than it is. It is valuable food, and very nourishing. In Italy the chesnuts grow to the size of small apples, and are used for food by the peasantry.

Mode of Feeding Cattle in Madagascar.—The provision is sometimes placed in a kind of rack, but it is also placed so high that the animal is compelled to stand the whole time in feeding, in a position that forces the chief weight of the body upon the hind legs. Whether this custom originated in accident or design is uncertain, but it is universal, and is supposed to aid in fattening the animal better than our European mode of allowing them to stand on a level floor. Sometimes animals are fed in this manner for three or four years, and attain an enormous size.

VARIETY.

A coach standing across a pathway in Boston, two gentlemen coming up requested the coachman to move. He would not, and a lady who had just alighted, came to the door of the shop in which she was, and insolently told the coachman not to stir. Thereupon the two gentlemen passed in at one side of the coach and out at the other, to the extreme discomposure of another lady who was inside the coach. Better still, a party of sailors coming up, followed the gentleman and scrambled through the carriage after them.

One of the greatest dairies in our country, is that of Col. Meacham, of Pulaski, N. Y. His farm consists of 1000 acres, 300 of which are devoted to grass; and he keeps 1000 head of cattle, and 97 cows. In one year he made 30,000 lbs. of cheese, 20,000 lbs. of which sold at one time in New York, for from 6 1-2 to 7 cts. a pound. He feeds his cows mostly on hay and carrots; of the latter he raises 2000 bushels, and gives each cow half a bushel per day. and besides the benefits derived from his grass for his stock, he gathers not less than 300 bushels of grass seed.

The Princeton (Ill.) Herald says—"Mr. N. B. Lucas, of Jefferson county, has just invented a new threshing and winnowing machine, which can thresh and clean with ease six hundred bushels of oats in a day, and about five hundred bushels of wheat. It threshes damp grain well, separating it from the straw easily. The inventor says that there is no machinery that winds with damp straw; no elevators to choke; no hands required to pitch straw from the machine, as the machinery throws it into a pile, to be taken with a horse-rake, and thereby saves the labor of a man."

We learn from the Lawrence Messenger that Mr. J. Robinson, of that town, has procured a patent for pegging boots and shoes, with which one man can drive one hundred pegs a minute. At every revolution it cuts pegs from the sheet, makes the holes, and leaves them neatly and firmly set in the leather. It is destined to be of much value to the boot manufacturer, and we have no doubt come into general use.

A recent Prussian paper announces that, "In Copenick, a lady's maid shot herself yesterday, from disappointed love." A subsequent number of the paper had the following curious correction—"The notice of a suicide is to be corrected, so far as to say, that the event took place, not in Copenick, but in Potsdam, that it was not a lady's maid, but a page, not of disappointed love, but on account of debt; and also, that the party did not shoot, but hung himself."

Richerand observes—"The exciting causes to which our organs are subject during the day, tend progressively to increase their action. The throbbings of the heart, for instance, are more frequent at night than in the morning; and this action gradually accelerated, would soon be carried to such a degree of activity as to be inconsistent with life, as if its velocity was not moderated at intervals by the recurrence of sleep."

Mr. Pope was with Sir Godfrey Kneller one day, when his nephew, a Guinea trader, came in. "Nephew," said Sir Godfrey, "you have the honor of seeing the two greatest men in the world." "I don't know how great you may be," said the Guniea-man, "but I don't like your looks: I have often bought a man much better than both of you together, all muscles and bone, for ten guineas.

Voss, of Dusseldorf, and D'Oench, of Liegnitz, have summoned all the master printers to a general meeting at Leipzig, on the 17th. The object is the discussion for fixing a uniform standard throughout Germany, for the rate of wages, as well as for printing, both for the government and the public.

In 1825, there was opened in Cochin-China a canal, twenty-three miles long, eighty feet wide, and twelve feet deep. It was begun and finished in six weeks, although carried through large forests and over extensive marshes. 20,000 men worked upon it day and night, and it is stated that 7,000 died of fatigue.

The Jacksonville (Ill.) Argus says that recently a large ox, fed by Jacob Strawn, of that county, passed through Jacksonville, on his way to New Orleans. His weight on the hoof is 3,200 pounds—he is seven years old.

A tame wolf, kept by a Mr. Harwood in Cincinnati as a watch-dog, took it into his head lately to give a specimen of his natural disposition, and seizing a man by the leg wounded him dreadfully. The animal was killed immediately.

The editor of the Arkansas Journal says:—"Where our office was two weeks ago, now runs the Mississippi river. Out of respect for the "Father of rivers," we left.

It is estimated that the tobacco consumed in Great Britain and this country costs annually $93,000,000.

The New Orleans Picayune, of the 6th inst. gives an account of a rencontre between Dr. Byrd, of Baton Rouge, and Dr. Skellman. The latter was killed, and the former dangerously wounded.

The road now existing across the Isthmus of Panama is traveled in two days. A large number ot trucks and carriages have been sent out for the purpose of conveying passengers and freight.

A Mr. Wake, of Troy Grove, Ill., a few days since, administered to his children, five in number, some strychnine for medicine, of which four of them died immediately.

The whole of the public property of the city of St. John, N. B., is advertised to be sold at auction by the sheriff, to satisfy an execution issued out of the Supreme Court for £116,000.

There is an astronomical clock in the telegraph office at Cincinnati, which can be heard to tick in the office at Pittsburg, three thousand miles.

Jacob Hays, Esq., was sworn in as High Constable of the city of New York on Tuesday. This is the 48th year that he has filled that office.

BRITISH PERIODICAL LITERATURE.

REPUBLICATION OF

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor, and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Tory, Whig, and Radical—"Blackwood" and the "London Quarterly" are Tory; the "Edinburgh Review" Whig; and the "Westminster Review" Radical. The "North British Review" is more of a religious character, having been originally edited by Dr. Chalmers, and now, since his death, being conducted by his son-in-law, Dr. Hanna, associated with Sir David Brewster. Its literary character is of the very highest order. The "Westminster," though reprinted under that title only, is published in England under the title of the "Foreign Quarterly and Westminster," it being in fact a union of the two Reviews formerly published and reprinted under separate titles. It has, therefore, the advantage, by this combination, of uniting in one work the best features of both as heretofore issued.

The above Periodicals are reprinted in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals, Blackwood's Magazine being an exact facsimile of the Edinburgh edition.

TERMS.

CLUBBING.

Four copies of any or all of the above works will be sent to one address, on payment of the regular subscription for three—the fourth copy being gratis.

EARLY COPIES.

Our late arrangement with the British publishers of Blackwood's Magazine, secures to us early sheets of that work, by which we are enabled to place the entire number in the hands of subscribers before any portion of it can be reprinted in any of the American Journals. For this and other advantages secured to our subscribers, we pay so large a consideration, that we may be compelled to raise the price of the Magazine.

☞ Something may therefore be gained by subscribing early.

ALLEDGED CHANGE OF THE SABBATH AT THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

[Section X. of J. A. Begg's Treatise on the Sabbath.]

Notwithstanding the amount and various nature of the evidence already adduced for its continuance as originally instituted by God, it is still alledged that, at the Resurrection of Christ, and on account of His resurrection, the Sabbath was changed from the seventh to the first day of the week. We now, therefore, proceed to an examination of the authority for this assertion. One remark, however, we would simply premise. After what we have already seen of the seventh day being as truly a part of the divine appointment as that there is a Sabbath at all,—of God's design at first, in the hallowing of it, because of His resting thereupon,—and of its subsequently having been embodied among the Ten Commandments, and of the ratification of the divine law by Christ Himself, as well as His example confirmatory of it,—after all this, we should not surely seem unreasonable, if we were to expect evidence of a very decisive kind, to warrant our entire departure from an institution commended to our observance by so many and such important sanctions.

This evidence, then, adduced for the change, in so far as it professes to be derived from Scripture, we shall fully state, and endeavor fairly to meet. We do no injustice, however, to those who maintain the change, when we say that the chief force of the argument is rested on the supposed traditionary evidence—the imagined uninterrupted observance of the first day as the Sabbath by the Church, from the time of the Apostles downward. Here it is, we are persuaded, from the remarks we have been accustomed to meet, both orally put and in a written form, that the great proportion of Christians are not only deceived with regard to the facts which can be substantiated by testimony, but on which, unwittingly in very many cases, they place that confidence in the words as well as in the deeds of uninspired men, which should be reposed alone on the Word of God. Those who profess to know and state the truth, having themselves too often a bias, give a coloring to the facts of history; while others, founding arguments upon the facts so treated, help to lead the reader still farther astray, by inductions which even their own first statement of facts, biased as it is, does not warrant. The testimonies of ecclesiastical historians, (even if better supported than they often are,) could not be matter of faith. Yet, a supposed fullness of traditionary testimony to the earliest observance of the first day of the week as the Christian Sabbath has, without question, contributed to render the Church satisfied with a scantiness of Scripture testimony which would otherwise have been regarded as insufficient. Is it, in the circumstances of the case, uncharitable to believe, that few who have at all given the subject close attention, would have considered the presumed change to be well supported, if that change were rested wholly on divine authority? It is indeed admitted, even by those who are the public vindicators of the change, that for it "there is no direct and express authority."* To the church's instructors, engaged in such work, it ought to be a solemn question, how far they may be incurring the guilt deplored by Christ, of not only themselves breaking God's command, but also of teaching others so, in regard to the appointed day of rest. Our present design requires that we confine ourselves entirely to what is contained on the subject in the Scriptures of truth—embracing the statements and practice of the Apostles, and the example of the Apostolic Church. We have, therefore, now to ascertain whether the fact of the resurrection of Christ is assigned by God as a reason for changing the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week,—and whether the inspired writers do at all state our Lord's resurrection to have actually been upon that day.

My gracious Saviour knows that I have no desire to undervalue His resurrection from the dead. This truth holds an important place in the economy of Redemption; and although there is no connection between the two truths, I do bless God, that since I first perceived the continuing obligation of the Original Sabbath, I have been taught more of the importance of God's having raised His Son from the dead, and given Him glory, than ever I knew before. But that there is any such connection between that event and the Sabbath, as either to intimate or justify a change in the hallowed day, is what I do not believe. Neither is it possible, that any man's sense of the importance of Christ's resurrection will be lessened by his being brought to a more correct understanding of its real place in the divine economy, even if it produce the conviction that such imagined change of the day of rest is wholly unauthorized.

Still, however, I must say, that even supposing no commandment of God had previously existed, intimating which day is the weekly Sabbath, and that in any contemplated arrangement we would not be exalting the day of our choice at the expense of that which God has named, still it might be made matter of question whether, in so seeking to honor the Saviour, the day of His resurrection was that most suitable for the purpose,—or whether, if we were at liberty to alter the appointed day of rest at all, we might not have preferred a different day for other reasons. Thus we might have preferred the day of Christ's birth for sanctification, as that on which all the other parts of His humiliation depended,—or, if Friday were known to be truly the day of Christ's death, we might have appointed it as the hallowed day, in commemoration of Christ's work*—or, if we knew the day, we might have appointed the observance of the day of Pentecost, because that on that day the Holy Ghost, the "promise of the Father," the gift of the Redeemer, was first poured out upon the Christian Church,—or, should the Lord again vouchsafe to invest His church with the same miraculous powers, another day might thereby be indicated as having an equal or higher claim to the church's sanctification.

We are but ill qualified to determine the relative importance of the events which form the Saviour's work and glory; but if this were to be adopted as the standard for determining, His death, that great proof of His love, might, for aught that we can perceive, be entitled to that preëminence, as being the reason assigned in Scripture for His resurrection and glorification. We read of His "blotting out the handwriting of ordinances that was against us, which was contrary to us," and it is added, "nailing it to His cross." Col. 2: 14. While yet upon the cross, He said, "It is finished." God, in His own wisdom and love, gave to Israel ordinances foreshowing both the death and resurrection of Christ; but if now only one day were to be thus observed in commemoration, and were it left for us to decide which would be the most appropriate day to observe in memory of our Lord, it might still be matter of question whether, in fixing upon the day of His resurrection, we were guided by the highest wisdom.

But supposing that the resurrection of Christ was ascertained to be more worthy of such a place,—and supposing that the work of Redemption was, as is often asserted, of more importance to man than the work of Creation, might not this be a reason for a superadded festival, rather than for a changed Sabbath? And how are we to account for the circumstance, that it does not seem strange to those who so believe, that such change should have been designed of God, and that yet not one word is mentioned of such a thing in the history of the resurrection itself, as declared to the disciples, or by the apostles?

True, indeed, it has been said, that the alteration of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week "was doubtless one of those many things which, concerning the kingdom of God, Christ taught them between His resurrection and ascension." The introduction of such a principle would be most dangerous, however convenient a mode it might be found of establishing the point. To those who desire to follow in the light, rather than in darkness, it will, "doubtless," be regarded as no very satisfactory evidence of the alledged change. Nor do I think that it would be speaking with less probability of truth, were we, on the contrary, to suppose that, foreseeing the corruption which would so soon be introduced into His church, this violation of the authority of God was an evil of which Christ had specially warned His friends, during these last forty days of His sojourn among them,—as He had, before His death, expressly said, "Whosoever shall break one of these least commandments, and shall teach men so, he shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven; but whosoever shall do and teach them, the same shall be called great in the kingdom of heaven." Matt. 5: 19. His faithful Apostle of the Gentiles, also, forewarned the church, when writing to the Thessalonians, that there should come an apostacy or falling away. If we are to assume a liberty of putting our own suppositions in place of Scripture verity, then, "doubtless," there is no imagination of man which may not be vested with divine sanction.

In reference to a different ordinance, and that one on which he is perhaps as much mistaken as in regard to that now under consideration, Dr. Wardlaw has said, "Explicit authority for relinquishing a practice, is quite as indispensable as explicit authority for commencing one." The principle is a sound one. We are not at liberty to introduce a change upon God's appointments, or to justify it when done, by any speculation on the propriety or fitness of setting apart a different day, or assigning reasons for the preference of another object than that which God has given. Yet both appear to be done in regard to the Sabbath. And feeling this to be a dishonor to Him who has a sovereign right to be implicitly obeyed, in the name of that God whose Law is our rule, and in the name of the Son who delighted to do His Father's will, I desire to be enabled to vindicate both against corruption and perversion.

Much stress, we have said, has been laid on the Resurrection of Christ, and on what has been called the frequency and regularity with which He afterwards appeared to His disciples, as being evidence of the change of the Sabbath. This, therefore, requires our careful examination. The first statement which we have of Christ's having risen from the dead, is in the account given of the discovery made by the women at the sepulchre, when they came with their spices and ointments, having "rested the Sabbath day, according to the commandment." "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdelene, and the other Mary, to see the sepulchre. And, behold, there was a great earthquake; for the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door, and sat upon it. His countenance was like lightning, and his raiment white as snow; and for fear of him the keepers did shake, and became as dead men. And the angel answered and said unto the women, Fear not ye; for I know that ye seek Jesus, which was crucified. He is not here; for He is risen, as He said. Come, see the place where the Lord lay; and go quickly, and tell His disciples that He is risen from the dead; and, behold, He goeth before you into Galilee; there shall ye see Him; lo, I have told you. And they departed quickly from the sepulchre, with fear and great joy, and did run to bring His disciples word." Matt. 28: 1—8.

Here we have the angelic announcement of the fact of Christ's resurrection, and directions given to the disciples; but not a word have we, from this heavenly messenger, of the Sabbath being henceforth to be changed on that account,—although it seems a fitting opportunity, had it been true. Neither has the Evangelist, in recording the angel's words at a later date, said any thing from which it can be inferred, either that this was done or designed—although we find John accounting for their unbelief of the resurrection itself, that "as yet they knew not the Scriptures, that He must rise again from the dead." John 20: 9. He says nothing of "Scripture," or of any other authority for that which has since been appended to it—a change of the Sabbath from the seventh to the first day of the week. The Resurrection of their Lord gives "great joy" to these female disciples; but it arises not from a comparison between the importance of the first and the seventh day. The angel teaches them to rejoice in the Saviour's resurrection. He teaches them nothing derogatory of the Sabbath. Their "great joy," therefore, does not arise from a disparaging comparison between the importance of creation and redemption. [To be continued.

THE VANITY OF PRIDE.

The Macedonian monarch, wise and good,
Bade, when the morning's rosy ray began,
Courtiers should call, as round his couch they stood,
"Philip! remember thou'rt no more than man.

"Though glory spread thy name from pole to pole,
Though thou art merciful, and brave, and just,
Philip! reflect thou'rt posting to the goal
Where mortals mix in undistinguished dust."

So Saladin, for arts and arms renowned,
Egypt and Syria's wide domains subdued,
Returning with imperial triumphs crowned,
Sighed when the perishable pomp he viewed.

And as he rode high in his royal car,
In all his pride of conqueror dressed,
Conspicuous o'er the trophies gained in war
Placed pendant on a spear his funeral vest.

While thus the herald cried—"This son of power,
This Saladin, to whom the nations bowed,
May in the space of one revolving hour,
Boast of no other spoil than yonder shroud."

FAITH vs. WORKS.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Accidentally taking up your paper of August 17th, I perceived an article from the Montreal Courier, headed, "NEW WAY TO GET RID OF GRASSHOPPERS." It appears that the editor, in one of his drives, met a cavalcade of sixteen calashes, and inquiring the cause of such a number being together, was told that they were farmers, and that their fields being ravaged by an innumerable army of grasshoppers, on application to their cure or priest, they were recommended to come to town and have masses said in the church here, (which is dedicated to the worship of the Virgin Mary,) for the destruction of the insects; and that they were so far on their way to repeat avas, and pay for masses. What effect was produced by their exertions, or whether their faith could or did remove the mountain, we are not informed.

Montreal is not the only place where grasshoppers have threatened destruction to the crops of the farmer. The Rev. S. W. Williams, late missionary to China, gives an account of a similar transaction in some of the provinces of the celestial empire. It seems, that the grasshoppers had appeared in unusual and alarming numbers, whereupon the government immediately issued orders for their destruction, not by the influence of priests; with their ceremonies of masses, avas, &c., but with force of arms, as their other enemies are conquered. The following extract is from Mr. Williams' Journal, which is introduced as evidence of the paternal and protective spirit of their government, and the final execution of their laws:—

"Su and Hwang, by special appointment of the districts of Nanhai and Pwanyu, hereby distinctly publish important rules for the capture of grasshoppers, that it may be known how to guard against them in order to ward off injury and calamity. On the 7th day of the 8th month, in the 13th year of Faukwang, we received a communication from the prefect of the department of Kwangchau, transmitting a dispatch from their excellencies the governor and lieutenant governor, as follows:—

We have heard that in the department of Kauchau, and its neighborhood contiguous to Kwangsi, grasshoppers have appeared which multiply with extreme rapidity. At this time the second crop is in the blade, (which, if destroyed, will endamage the people,) and it is proper, therefore, immediately, wherever they are found, to capture and drive them off. But we apprehend the people and officers do not understand the mode of capture; wherefore we now exhibit in order the most important rules for catching grasshoppers. Let the governor's combined forces be immediately instructed to capture them secundum artem; at the same time, let orders be issued for the villagers and farmers at once to assemble and take them, and for magistrates to establish store-houses for their reception and purchase, thus without fail sweeping them clean away. If you do not exert yourself to catch the grasshoppers, your guilt will be very great. Appended hereto are copies of the rules for catching grasshoppers, which, from the lieutenant governor must be sent to the treasurer, who will enjoin it upon the magistrate of the departments, and he again upon the district magistrates.

Having received the preceeding, besides respectfully transmitted it to the colonel of the department, to be straightway forwarded to all the troops under his authority, and also to all the district justices, that they all with united purpose bend their energies to observe at the proper time, that whenever the grasshoppers become numerous, they join their forces and extirpate them, thus removing calamity from the people; we also enjoin upon whoever receives this, that they catch the grasshoppers according to these several directions, which are therefore here arranged in order as follows:

1st. When the grasshoppers are in the fields of wheat and tender rice, and the thick grass, every day at early dawn they all alight on the leaves of the grass, and their bodies being covered with dew, are heavy, and they cannot fly or hop; at noon they begin to assemble for flight; and at evening they collect in one spot. Thus each day there are three periods when they can be caught, and the people and gentry will also have a short respite. The mode of catching them is to dig a trench before them, the broader and longer the better, on each side placing boards, doors, and screens, and such like things, one stretched on after another, and spreading open on each side. The whole multitude must then cry aloud, and holding boards in their hands, drive them all into the trench; meanwhile, those on the opposite side, provided with brooms and rakes, on seeing any leaping or crawling out, must sweep them back; then covering them with dry grass, burn them all up. Let the fire first be kindled in the trench, and then drive them into it; for if they are only buried up, many of them will crawl out of the openings, and so escape.

2d. When the swarms of grasshoppers see a row of trees, or a close line of flags and streamers, they usually hover over and settle; and the farmers frequently suspend red and white clothes, and petticoats, on long poles, or make red and green paper flags, but they do not always settle with great rapidity. Moreover, they dread the noise of gongs, matcklocks, and guns, hearing which they fly away. If they come so as to obscure the heavens, you must let off the guns, and clang the gongs, or fire the crackers; it will strike the front ranks with dread, and flying away the rest will follow them and depart.

3d. When the wings and legs of the grasshoppers are taken off, and (their bodies) dried in the sun, their taste is like dried sprawns, and moreover they can be kept a long time without spoiling. Ducks can also be reared upon the dried grasshoppers, and soon become large and fat. Moreover, the hill people catch them to feed pigs; these pigs, weighing at first only twenty catties or so, in ten days time grow to weigh more than fifty catties; and in rearing all domestic animals they are of use. Let all farmers exert themselves, and catch them alive, giving rice or money, according to the number taken. In order to remove this calamity from your grain, what fear is there that you will not perform this? Let all these rules for catching the grasshoppers be diligently carried into full effect.

Wherefore these, commands are transcribed, that all you soldiers and people may be fully acquainted with them. Do you all, then, immediately, in obedience to them, when you see the proper time has come, sound the gong; and when you see the grasshoppers and their young increasing, straightway get ready, on the one hand seizing them, and on the other announcing to the officers that they collect the troops, that with united strength you may at once catch them, without fail making an utter extermination of them; thus calamity will be removed from the people. We will also then confer rewards upon those of the farmers and people who first announce to the magistrates their approach. Let every one implicitly obey. A special command. Promulgated Taukwang, 13th year, 8th month, and 15th day. (Sept. 20th, 1833.) J. S.

DEATH-BED OF REV. WILLIAM JANEWAY.

William Janeway was the father of the Janeways who were so distinguished among the early Non-Conformists of England. As we have not the means of tracing the particulars of his life and labors, a valuable page from the record of his dying hours, in the biography of his son John, may be introduced with advantage, and will be appreciated by every pious reader:—

Being under dark apprehensions of mind in his last illness, he expressed himself in the following manner to his son: 'Oh, John! this passing into eternity is a great thing; this dying is a solemn business, and enough to make one's heart ache, that hath not his pardon sealed, and his evidences for Heaven clear. And truly, my son, I am under no small fears as to my own estate in another world. Oh that I could say cheerfully, I can die; and upon good grounds be enabled to look death in the face, and venture upon eternity with well-grounded peace and comfort.' His son, after making a suitable reply, which, however, did not restore his peace, retired to solitary prayer, earnestly imploring that his beloved father might be filled with joy in believing, as a token for good in leaving the world. These intercessions were manifestly heard and answered by a very bright gleam of the divine countenance. Upon returning to his father, the son inquired how he felt himself. No answer was given; but the departing saint, though little subject to such emotions, wept for a long time in an extraordinary manner, till at last he broke forth in the language of impassioned exultation: 'Oh, son, now it is come, it is come, it is come. I bless God, I can die: the Spirit of God hath witnessed with my spirit that I am his child. Now I can look upon God as my dear Father, and Christ as my Redeemer: I can now say—this is my Friend, and this is my beloved! My heart is full; it is brim-full; I can hold no more. I know now what that sentence means, The peace of God which passeth understanding.' I know now what that white stone is, whereon a new name is written, which none know but those who have it. And that fit of weeping which you saw me in, was a fit of overpowering love and joy, so great, that I could not for my heart contain myself; neither can I express what glorious discoveries God hath made of himself unto me. And had that joy been greater, I doubt whether I could have borne it, and whether it would not have separated soul from body. Bless the Lord, O my soul, and all that is within me bless his holy name, that hath pardoned all my sins, and sealed the pardon. He hath healed my wounds and caused the bones which he hath broken to rejoice. O help me to bless the Lord! He hath put a new song into my mouth. O bless the Lord for his infinite goodness and mercy! O, now I can die! it is nothing; I bless God I can die. I desire to be dissolved, and to be with Christ.'

A FEARFUL LESSON TO PARENTS.

'Poor old man,' said my companion, 'he has seen better days.'

This remark referred to an old man, whose tattered garments, tottering frame, and miserable appearance, indicated an object of charity of the most appalling class.

'O, yes, I have known him a long time. He built that splendid mansion opposite to us, and was for years its opulent possessor. Retired from business, he supposed himself comfortably situated, with a competence for life, but the intemperance, profligacy, and extravagance of a son, too much indulged and pampered, together with his own indiscretion, have brought him to his present state He lives now upon the charity of those very men who once looked up to him with admiration almost bordering upon envy.'

'And his son—what has become of him?'

'I will tell you. For years he was the most elegantly dressed young man in this neighborhood. Many a time have I seen him leisurely sauntering these streets, or driving furiously over them, a very coxcomb of the first water. He crossed the Atlantic, made a tour of the Continent, and returned a greater fop, and a more lavish spendthrift than before he traveled, Affairs grew worse, however, with the old man; unexpected misfortunes befel him; his means diminished, while the demands of the young man increased. I happened to be in the counting-room of a friend one day, where the old man was settling some business, when the son entered about half intoxicated, and demanded of his father two hundred dollars!

'I am not able to let you have it,' said the old gentleman. 'Times are changed with me, and my means are passing from my hands rapidly.'

'Upon this the son began to swear furiously. He gnashed his teeth, called him an old fool, and other harsh names, and swore he would have the money. As the old man turned aside and wiped the tears from his face, I caught hold of the young man's arms—for I was moved with indignation—and said to him, Sam, listen to me. You have been pampered, spoiled, ruined, and in turn you have ruined your father. You now curse him. Remember what I tell you. I shall yet live to hear that you have died in a poor-house. As sure as God lives, the child that curses his parent will not be permitted to prosper. Your infamy is already doing its work upon you; take care that a few years do not miserably wind up your career of folly.

'I can scarcely tell you why I uttered that prediction of the poor-house, but it came upon me with irresistible force, and the young man staggered for a time beneath the resoluteness and sternness of my gaze. A moment after he left the counting-room in moody silence.

'I felt a particular and painful interest in observing the career of that young man, as from one degree of infamy to another he plunged deeper and deeper, until he had become a miserable market-house loafer, and would be often observed gambling for pennies with negroes, upon the unwashed stalls. Presently disease attacked him, and poor Sam, sure enough, became the inmate of the alms-house. He died there after a somewhat protracted illness. The body was offered to that old man for interment, but he was too poor to have it removed.

'I suppose, then, it was consigned to the Potter's Field,' said I.

'No,' replied my friend; 'he had no burial. His skeleton at this moment hangs upon wire in the medical room—an anatomical preparation!' [Methodist Protestant.

A writer in the Advocate of Peace estimates that 70,000 men in various capacities were sent to Mexico during the war, and that the lives of not less than 30,000 have been lost, either by sickness or in battle. The ruin of character, morals, and health, to those who survive, cannot be estimated. The newspapers continually announce the death of returned volunteers, some from diseases contracted in the camp, others from intemperance, and some from suicide.

The memory of a beauty is like the memory of an orator. They both soon fade from tradition, unless the painter and the reporter help them to immortality.

* The Mohammedans have fixed on Friday, but not on this account. "The chief reasons for fixing upon Friday as the Mohammedan Sabbath, were, it is said, because Adam was created on that day, and died on the same day of the week, and because the general resurrection was prophesied to happen on that day, whence particularly Friday was named the day of Elgoomah or the Assembly." Lane's Modern Egyptians, vol. 1. p. 112. It has been stated, that the following days of the week are set apart for public worship in different nations:—"Sunday, by Christians; Monday, by the Grecians; Tuesday, by the Persians; Wednesday, by the Assyrians; Thursday, by the Egyptians; Friday, by the Turks; Saturday, by the Jews."

FORSAKING TRUTH IN ORDER TO DO MORE GOOD.

We have some strange specimens of discipleship among the professed followers of Christ. It is amazing how men keep up a reputation for piety, while they disregard the express conditions of discipleship. We have reason to fear that not only the common people, but even ministers, fall into the delusion, that it is not worth while to be very exact in their adherence to divine truth. On this point, we feel moved to offer a few words, having in view more especially that portion of truth which distinguishes us as a denomination.

How often have we known ministers of the gospel to be so far convinced of the fallacy of the arguments by which the claims of the first day of the week to religious regard are supported, as to confess, without reserve or qualification, that the truth was with us, and yet refuse to come out publicly as the advocates of the Sabbath, lest it might abridge their usefulness! 'We believe you are right,' say they, 'but we think we can do more good by remaining where we are.' And once in a while (thank God, not very often) this delusion gets possession of a minister among us. He sees that the church over which he is placed is small, as compared with many churches which observe the first day of the week; that the prejudices of the communtty around are set against it; that opportunities of access to the people are thereby in a great measure closed against him; that the prospect of any extensive spread of Sabbatarianism is extremely dark; and he begins to debate with himself whether it would not be better for him to follow the popular current. Should he do so, he can at once preach to a large congregation, and perhaps be instrumental of leading a great many to repentance; whereas, if he remains a Sabbatarian, he wears out his life in preaching to a mere handful, and perhaps may not convert a dozen souls during the whole course of his ministry. Well, there is something very plausible in this way of reasoning, to be sure. But let us sift it a little.

You can preach to larger assemblies, and perhaps lead great numbers to repentance. To repent of what? Of sin? Surely nothing else needs to be repented of. But sin is the transgression of the Law. At least, so it reads in our Bible. Of course, in order to convince your hearers of sin, and so prepare the way for their repentance, you must teach them the claims of the Law. But the Law inculcates the keeping of the Sabbath. This you well know; you are too well enlightened to shut your eyes to it. Will you then teach them the claims of the Law only in part? 'Cry aloud; spare not; show my people ALL their abominations,' is the mandate of the Almighty. Will you show them only a part? Will you shun to declare all the counsel of God? What kind of repentance will you bring about by such a course? We seriously doubt whether God will honor your efforts at all, while you thus trifle with his word.

The idea of being the more useful, simply because we come into contact with a greater number of minds, is a perfect fallacy. A minister is useful just so far as the Spirit of God attends his labors, and no farther. 'Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord.' Zech. 4: 6. 'Neither is he that planteth any thing, neither he that watereth; but God that giveth the increase.' 1 Cor. 3: 7. A man who preaches to a congregation of twenty persons, if the Spirit of God bless his labors, is more useful than the one who, without such blessing, preaches to a thousand. In regard to what constitutes a blessing, we are often greatly deceived. Some think, if they have been instrumental in adding to the church a hundred souls, who give tolerable evidence of piety, that they have been far more useful than if they had only been instrumental in adding half the number. And where all other things are equal, this is probably the correct view. But it may be that all other things are not equal. How then? Suppose one minister to be placed over a church of ten members. Being a man of apostolic spirit, 'full of the Holy Ghost and of faith,' he is not satisfied with a mere profession on their part, but he strives mightily to present every man perfect in Christ Jesus. Col. 1: 28, 29. He labors for them in prayer, night and day. He visits them at their houses, exhorts and confirms them, and charges every one of them, as a father doth his children, that they walk worthy of God. 1 Thess. 2: 11, 12. When any of them go astray, he travails in birth again until Christ be formed in them. Gal. 4: 19. Longing after them in the bowels of Jesus Christ, he addresses them, saying, 'Look to yourselves, that we lose not those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward.' 'For now we live, if ye stand fast in the Lord.' 2 John 8. 1 Thess. 3: 8. And thus he strives and toils; and the result of all is, that those ten persons are, throughout their lives, an honor to the Christian name. Each one of them exerts a mighty influence for good, and is the means of stopping the mouths of infidels, and of leading many souls to Christ. Will any one say, that this minister is not useful? Will any one say, that he is not moving in the very sphere in which God would have him to move?

Now suppose another minister to be placed over a congregation consisting of a thousand persons, of whom about four hundred are members of the church, and the remaining six hundred make no pretensions to piety. Such a situation evidently commands great opportunities for usefulness. He labors, and in the course of a year he gathers fifty of those six hundred into the church. He labors another year, and a hundred are added. He labors another year, and another hundred are added. The common judgment is, that such a minister is very useful. Possibly he is; but, after all, he may not be so useful, by a great deal, as the one who was placed over his congregation of ten. The hundreds whom he has added to the church may not walk worthy of the name of Christ. He may be content with just getting them into the church, or, at most, with such a course, on their part, as will give them a common reputation for piety. He does not agonize in prayer, with strong cryings and tears, that each one may attain to the stature of a man in Christ Jesus. He does not visit them from house to house, and inquire minutely into their spiritual state. He sees that all is fair outwardly, and he supposes that all is right. So he labors on from year to year, thinks himself exceedingly useful, and others think so too. But what, after all, is his usefulness, as compared with the minister who preached to the congregation of ten? The hundreds whom he has converted, as well as the four hundred who were already in the church, are so much conformed in spirit to the world; at least, by reason of their defective training, they exhibit so many inconsistencies and weaknesses, that they exert no influence for good; infidels take occasion from them to speak reproachfully of the cause, and perhaps the agency of the whole of them does not lead one soul to Christ.

But take another view. Your congregation consists of ten, twenty, fifty, or it may be of a hundred persons. While you are mourning that your circle of influence is so small, a congregation of from five hundred to a thousand persons, all observing the first day of the week, becomes vacant. The situation is proffered you, on condition that you will give up your peculiarity. You say, 'O what a field is here open for me! What an opportunity for usefulness! Can it be right for me to bury my talents, as I have been doing? Is not the Lord moving in this business, and plainly pointing me to this field?' But stop a moment. Instead of its being of the Lord, it may be only a strong temptation. It may be intended simply to put your integrity to the proof. Before you yield, call to mind that Scripture which says, 'He that is faithful in that which is least, is faithful also in much.' Luke 16: 10. Then ask yourself seriously, as in the sight of God who searcheth the heart, whether you have been faithful in your small and narrow sphere;—whether you have done all that you could to promote the spirituality and growth in grace of your small congregation;—whether you have faithfully availed yourself of every means to extend your influence beyond the immediate limits of your church? If you have not, you deceive yourself in supposing that you will be more useful in a larger field. The same spirit of unfaithfulness which contracted your usefulness in the smaller field, will go with you to the larger; and instead of doing more good, you will only be doing more injury. See this illustrated in first-day ministers themselves. One of them has a small congregation, perhaps not over fifty or a hundred persons. He fancies that his usefulness is very limited, compared with what it might be. He is burying his talents. He receives a call to take charge of a large church, where his field for usefulness will be much wider. He thinks it his duty to go; it is the Lord's call, surely. He goes, and, after laboring a year or two, the hearers become careless, the church waxes cold, the members do not fill their places, troubles spring up among them, the church dwindles, and the minister is in reality no more useful than he was before. What is the true secret? Perhaps he was not faithful in his first situation; and, as the rule ever holds good, 'he that is faithful in little is faithful also in much,' so that spirit of unfaithfulness which he had from the first, has proved a curse to the large congregation, and withered it like a blast from the Almighty. But another minister, though he has but a small congregation—perhaps not over twenty—instead of spending his time in sighing over his contracted usefulness, exerts himself to the utmost in promoting the welfare of those under his charge. Not only so, he seeks to extend his usefulness, not by running after another situation, but by rendering the one he has as prominent as possible. In a little while his church enlarges; 'the little one becomes a thousand,' and he has no farther occasion for sighing that his talents are buried. He has gained other talents besides them; and 'to him that hath shall more be given.'

Now, as it is with first-day ministers, so it may be, in a measure, with us. What is wanted among us, more than any thing else, is a spirit of faithfulness and prayer. And now, if there is a single minister among us—we know not that there is—who contemplates abandoning his position, under the idea that he can do more good, we entreat him first to consider whether he has already been as faithful to improve his opportunities as he might have been. Talk of doing more to the glory of God, by disobeying him! The idea is preposterous; it is absurd in the last degree. It supposes that you can be useful without God's blessing; for you surely cannot suppose that his blessing will accompany your disobedience. It supposes that you can be useful if men do but favor you and smile upon you; whereas it is 'not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord.' Such doctrine stands in the way of all reformation in religion. Oh! we are sick of such cant, and verily believe that selfishness and sin are at the bottom of it. *

LETTERS FROM ILLINOIS—No. 2.

PLEASANT HILL, near Farmington Fulton Co., Ill.,
4th of 12th mo., 1848.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

When I wrote my last letter to you, I was staying with Bro. Anthony Hakes, who lives in the South-west corner of township 11 N., 8 East, of the first principal meridian on the Military Bounty Tract. It is one of the northernmost tier of townships in Peoria Co., fourteen miles North-west of Peoria City, and about thirty miles North of this place. The name of the post-office is South-Hampton. Southport is a small village of Moravians, about ten miles North of Farmington. I make my home, for the most part, with Bro. D. Saunders, where I am now staying. The immediate neighbhorhood is called Pleasant Hill. It lies about two and a half miles North-west from Farmington, in township 8 N., 4 E., the N. N. E. corner of Fulton Co. A very few years ago it was a beautiful prairie; it is now, the most part of it, fenced into beautiful farms. I am thus particular in describing our locations, because I have learned that many of our friends at the East are desirous of becoming fully acquainted with our situations and prospects, of which they have hitherto obtained but a very imperfect knowledge. If such persons would procure Ensign & Thayer's Map of the Western States, published at 50 Ann-st., New York, 1848, they may trace out our exact location, and with the information we purpose to communicate, become accurately and familiarly acquainted with the circumstances and prospects of these settlements.

Last week I visited our brethren who reside in the Spoor River Glades, about twenty-three miles directly South of this place, between Lewiston and Cuba. Cuba is the name of a small village and post-office on a prairie, which is usually called Centreville. It is in township 6 N., 3 E. Here are four families. When Bro. Scott visited them, he formed a church among them, consisting of seven members, and I am informed that they have never had the Lord's Supper administered to them since. They, however, keep up their Sabbath-day meetings, and appear to be steadfast in their regard for the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus Christ. If they have made no progress in building up society in their own location, neither have other denominations around them; for I was informed, that there is no other religious society nearer than Lewiston and Centreville. Bro. James Dunham and others reside in the precincts of the north branch of Copperas Creek, in township 8 N., 6 E., South-west part of Peoria Co., about six miles East by North of Farmington. Our Sabbath meetings for this winter are appointed alternately at their respective school-houses, which are just about six miles apart, a ride of about an hour and a half over our winter roads. It is due to these families, and the others that I have mentioned before, to say, that so far as I could learn, they maintain an ordinary degree of piety. The most of them maintain family worship, and are well respected by their neighbors. There is another settlement of our people in Jersey Co., about one hundred miles South, but I shall not be able to visit them this winter. Besides these, I have heard of individuals in different parts of the State who observe the Sabbath of Jehovah, although they have no church relations with us.

While living at the East, I learned something of the scattered condition of our brethren in Illinois, and often wondered why they did not locate nearer together, when their mutual aid one to another was so much needed to build up a single efficient society, and their mutual attendance upon public worship might have made it so much more pleasant, and have contributed so much more to their religious prospects. But I found that all was easily accounted for, when I had once heard their accounts of the adventures which attended their first coming into the State, without attributing blame to any one, or accusing any of neglect of the brotherhood, or disregard of the common weal. At first they had not the information or the means to select the locations best adapted to secure the prosperity of a Christian colony. They had no well-arranged plan, and some of them were unable to find where the others lived, until after their own press of circumstances had compelled them to make a location for themselves. Our brethren who come after this, have no need to be subjected to any such difficulties, as every item of information calculated to facilitate their settlement, or promote their prosperity, and further their co-operation with the religious interests of the Seventh-day Baptist Denomination, will now be furnished them without cost. In addition to those already here, I have received certain information of a number of very worthy persons and families who intend to immigrate to these parts next season. When these shall arrive, and together with my own family settle down on their own selected locations, we hope to form one or two or more churches. Indeed, I cannot resist the conviction, that however much we have all, there at the East, deplored the scattered condition of the families already here, the very circumstance of these settlements being so detached from each other will ultimately contribute to our more rapid prosperity. Each of these settlements has some advantages peculiar to itself, and on account of which its residents greatly prefer it to the others; and of course they will advocate its claims before all new comers; and I think this, in the end, will be no disadvantage. I expect a very considerable immigration to these parts in a sh me, and together these several settlements will afford opportunities to suit all the varied occupations and circumstances, and the most fastidious tastes, of new-comers; or, if not, we can point out a hundred others, adjacent to one or other of these.

All these places afford ample opportunity for faithful Christian labor. There are occasional meetings in each of them, conducted by other denominations, but no regular church organization in either; so that these fields of Christian labor are just as open for us as for others; and in some of them no one denomination numbers more church members than our own. How much we may be blessed of God in this thing, and how much we may succeed in our objects and labors, remains to be seen; but it appears to me that there is a wide and open door before us in these parts of Illinois, and I hope much for our future prosperity. There is a great deal of district preaching in Illinois; but the greater part of it is done by men who labor hard all the week on their farms or in their workshops. As a general thing, the people are disposed to hear, and the universal sentiment is, 'hear all that come.' Many persons evidently prefer this kind of promiscuous preaching, which costs them nothing, and which produces but little more than transient convictions and excitements. There are those, however, who sigh for more instruction for themselves and their families and their neighbors. They would be glad to have a stated, devoted ministry, that should feed the flock of Christ, and hold the consciences of the disobedient to the claims of God's Holy Word; and where such is established, there are men found willing to give it their support. I think Illinois affords a great missionary field, and I feel more and more satisfied that I have done right to come to it. I am willing—yea, ardently desirous, to spend and be spent therein, if the Lord shall prosper. So far, no country or people ever pleased me better with so short an acquaintance. If I had my family here, I should feel quite at home. My present impression is, that next summer I shall have to establish a regular itinerancy, and hold quarterly meetings for preaching, breaking bread, &c., at the several settlements. I am persuaded, that if such seasons were regularly established, we might draw very considerable congregations together to hear the word preached during the continuance thereof; and who can tell what good may follow? There are several brethren with profitable gifts among us now; but as their worldly occupations, and family affairs, require nearly all their attention, they cannot give that attention to the ministry which its interests demand. Yet these, and others that may come, may be valuable auxiliaries to the truth, in such a system of labors as I have above suggested. I propose to lay these things more directly before the Missionary Board, at their next meeting, and await their direction. In the mean time, I bespeak an interest in the prayers of our brethren in the churches for the success of this undertaking. SAMUEL DAVISON.

DESIRABLE LOCATION FOR SABBATH-KEEPERS.—A business letter from Bro. Joseph Goodrich, of Milton, gives us the following information relative to a new settlement of Sabbath-keepers at Dartford, Marquette Co., Wisconsin:—"It may be interesting to know, that there are in that place something like a dozen families of Seventh-day Baptists, and that they are settled in a very flourishing and advantageous location, where their lands will soon become very valuable, being on the Northern Fox River, and adjoining the large tract just purchased of the Indians. If any of our friends should wish to locate in Wisconsin, I think that this place, just now, ought to be sought by them. In doing so, they would land at Sheboygan, thence to Fond Du Lac, &c."

PRAYERS FOR THE POPE.—The Rt. Reverend Bishop Hughes, of New York, has directed the laity of his diocese to add their prayers pro papa to the other prayers for the celebration of mass, until farther notice. He also directs the lay members of the church to recite over the seven penitential Psalms, and the Litanies of the Saints, in supplication to God, for the protection of His Church, and the deliverance of its visible head on earth.

AMHERST COLLEGE.—A Triennial Catalogue of Amherst College has recently been issued, which gives some idea of what may be done for the world by a single College, well conducted It seems that the whole number of the Alumni of the College is 870, and that of these there are still living 776. The whole number of ministers of the Gospel who have completed at Amherst their academical course, is 388; and of these 357 are still living; 36 have gone as missionaries to foreign lands.

STATE OF THE RHODE ISLAND CHURCHES.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

At the Quarterly Meeting of the churches located in Hopkinton, R. I., and vicinity, held in August last, with the 2d Hopkinton Church, the following resolution was passed:—

Resolved, That a committee from each church composing this Quarterly Meeting, be appointed to visit each family residing within the limits of said Quarterly Meeting, make due inquiry relative to personal religion, the practice or neglect of family prayer, the Christian walk and fellowship of the members of said churches, and submit a report of their labors at the next Quarterly Meeting.

At the Quarterly Meeting which was held in November last, with the 3d Hopkinton Church, the Committee submitted their report, and requested me to prepare a synopsis of the same for publication in the Recorder. As most of the reports were verbal, I can only give the substance.

1. Personal Religion.—The Committee held personal conversation with most of the members, and found an apparent increase of religious feeling, and quite a general desire for a still farther advancement. The determination for "a closer walk with God," was found to be more general than was apparent on the face of the religious community. In some instances, a perplexity of mind existed concerning their acceptance. As one of the Committee, I am of the opinion that the doctrine of justification by faith alone should be made more prominent in the teaching among these churches. There is danger, in these days of "do this and thou shalt live," of verging to an opposite doctrine. Good works are consecutive, not causative, of justification. Most, if not all, that are called the duties of a Christian life, should supervene, as obligations, arising from previous blessings conferred. "She loved much, because much had been forgiven," said the Author and Finisher of Faith.

2. Family Prayer.—The Committee paid special attention to this subject. Its importance, benefits, and duty, were strongly urged upon the consideration of each head of a family. Many excuses and objections were met and apparently removed. Decided impressions of its being duty, were frankly acknowledged by many who were living in the neglect of it. Some, who once practiced praying in their families, had relinquished it on account of its being monotonous—the same thing over every day. Family prayer was not maintained, probably, in more than one-half of those families whose heads profess religion. It was, however, found on the increase, and a decided improvement in this respect has obtained within the last year. During the revival last fall in the 2d Church, this subject was much insisted upon, and many of our oldest members for the first time erected their family altars. It was universally acknowledged, by those who practiced this duty, to be a great source of comfort, and an invaluable blessing. Relative to its being monotonous; this arises from the contracted sphere to which our prayers are limited, and entering upon the duty without due preparation. Let the mind feel its own wants; let it feel the wants of a sinful world; then let the great variety of subjects to be prayed for pass in review, and be presented at the mercy seat, some on one day, some on the next, and so on, and I am sure, all complaint of sameness, or a want of variety, will vanish. Prayer may be rendered far more profitable if preceded by meditation. Yet, strange as it may seem, I once had a complaint preferred against me in the church, for recommending premeditation on this subject, and that, too, since I was in the ministry. Where singing can be performed, it is a most excellent accompaniment of family devotions. I was once, yea, several times, present at family worship, where, after reading the Scriptures, a most appropriate piece of sacred music was performed on a seraphim, accompanying the words sung. Such seasons are refreshing, and such places bethels.

3. Christian and Church Fellowship.—The importance and propriety of this was not omitted. The Committee found most of the members maintaining their walk in their several churches. In some few instances, the practice of not communing obtained. But in some of these cases, the views entertained of the peculiar sacredness of the Supper were the hindering cause. Such counsel and encouragement as the case appeared to demand were given.

On the whole, a far better state of religious feeling was found to exist than was anticipated. The visits were not only acceptable, but thankfully received, and their repetition urged. That much good has already resulted, is abundantly evident. But the visited were not the only ones benefited. The reflex influence upon the Committee themselves, was most happy. Each one has realized, that while watering others, he himself was watered. And to all who inquire, and especially to that brother from the Western Association who was present when the arrangement was entered into, I would say, "Go and do likewise."

Prepared in behalf of the sub-committee.

SECESSION FROM A CHURCH ESTABLISHMENT.

It is said that the Rev. Baptist Noel, a distinguished minister of the Church of England, is about to withdraw from that Church on account of its connection with the State. No doubt this movement, from the social position and personal character of the man, will exert an extensive and salutary influence. Mr. Noel is the successor of Richard Cecil, as pastor of Bedford Chapel, London. By birth he belongs to the nobility; his mother is Lady Braham of the Queen's household, and his brother Lord Gainesborough. He is himself one of Her Majesty's chaplains, and of course on the direct road to ecclesiastical preferment. When such a man, at the sacrifice of such prospects, separates himself from the Establishment, the influence must be felt among thinking men. We believe it has been decided in the civil courts, that if a clergyman of the Church of England leaves that Church, he cannot preach as a Dissenter without incurring the penalty of imprisonment. In such circumstances, many will watch with interest the future movements of Mr. Noel, to see how he will treat that decision, and how the administrators of the law will treat him.

A letter from a gentleman in London to Dr. Patton of this city, published in "the Independent," gives the best account we have seen of the position in which Mr. Noel stands, and the arguments by which his friends endeavor to keep him in the Church. At a meeting of heads-of-families, on the 23d of November, he said:—

"So many reports are abroad, that I feel it most proper to tell you the truth myself, although it was not my intention to have done so at present. Many of you must be aware, especially such as have read my Tract upon the Free Church of Scotland, that I have long had doubts about the propriety of a connection between the Church and the State. I have struggled against these doubts, and have read the best writers on both sides, and more especially the Word of God, and being in a Proprietary Chapel, I flattered myself that I had little to do with the subject; but I have come to agree with a writer, that a man is responsible for the sins of a communion to which he belongs; that he that doubts is damned if he eats, although others who do not doubt may eat, &c., &c.; and therefore I have determined that I must leave you, this Chapel, and the Established Church. On Friday, I gave notice to Mr. Wilson and the Chapel Wardens, that I should leave at midsummer next. Until that time, I shall continue among you, preaching the fundamental truths of the Gospel; but until my labors terminate, my tongue is sealed as to any other reasons I may have for breaking off my connection with the Church, or how I have arrived at them; for I remain in order to give you time to find a successor, and prevent the dispersion of the congregation; and it would be dishonorable in me to make use of the time in unsettling the minds of my flock. At midsummer, I shall retire for a considerable time from all public duty, where I can study the word of God in a manner which no pastor can do, if actively engaged with a flock. What I shall do after this repose, and to what communion I shall attach myself, is a subject on which I have as yet formed no opinion. I had hoped and expected to spend my days among my people, from whom I have ever received the most affectionate kindness, and from whom I shall part with deep regret. But the will of the Lord be done! I trust you will get a successor who shall be more faithful than I have been, and that during the seven months which remain, both you and I may be spiritually built up.

"The above is the substance of what he said, but I cannot carry his words in my memory. The meeting was heart-rending. Efforts were made repeatedly to induce him to reconsider the subject; and it was pointed out to him, that nine hundred children would be scattered from our schools; from £700 to £500 a year in collections for various charities would be lost, societies for the relief of the poor broken up, and a very large flock scattered. He answered, that we painted things too gloomily; that if feelings could be allowed to prevail, he would never leave us; but that duty was above and beyond every thing; that the subject had been so deeply considered, it was impossible he could hesitate as to his course."

Baptist Noel.—It appears that ecclesiastical arrogance has hastened Mr. Noel's affairs to a more sudden issue than he wished or intended. The National Era has a letter from London, dated Dec. 1, which says:—

"The Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel is about to leave the Established Church, and on Sunday next he is to take leave of his congregation in Bedford Row. It was his intention to remain in 'the church' some time longer, but the Bishop of London sent for him, and requested him to retire at once from John-street Chapel, and not preach again. I understand that he defied Charles James to drive him from his pulpit, and that on next Sunday he will preach in defiance of the Episcopal threat. Mr. Noel has a work in preparation, on the subject of his secession, which I understand will be ready for publication in about three weeks."

---

Dicker.—It is common at the West to eke out the salary of a minister by what is called 'dicker.' The following extract from a letter from a gentleman in Indiana, who wrote to the Home Missionary Society for aid in supporting a missionary in his neighborhood, will enable our readers to understand the term:—

"'Dicker' is a name of wonderful meaning in all these regions. It embraces more ideas in its way than ever did the famous abracadabra of the magicians. It changes a miscellaneous collection of odd bits and ends, old musty hay, rotten potatoes, white-oak cheese, corn a la Pharaoh's lean ears, pumpkin butter, and sundry store 'orders,' into the most snug and comfortable kind of a salary for man, wife, and six children. 'Dicker' is some, it is. By the help of dicker, then, we feel warranted in assuring you, that if you will give $150, we will settle the rest."

Revival of an Emigrant Dutch Church in Iowa.—Rev. Mr. Scholte, the pastor of a colony of emigrants from Holland, settled in a town which they have named Pella, in Iowa, writes to the Christian Intelligencer. After speaking in high terms of satisfaction of the temporal prospects of the colony, and of the discouraging views which he had entertained of the spiritual condition of the church, he says:—

'But in a moment, the Lord has unexpectedly, by his mighty hand, made an exemplary alteration. A few weeks since, a very careless girl, quite young, experienced deep convictions, and sought the Lord. It did not arrest my particular attention, and I observed, we shall see if it is true. Two days afterwards, two other children came out seeking the Saviour. I then began to look above and around, and see what the Lord would do. From that time to the present moment the revival has been spreading over the whole community. Perhaps in every house there is some evidence of the overpowering grace of our beloved God and Saviour. Thirty-nine have already been added to the church, and united in the communion of the Lord's Supper, and every day we have new evidence that the Spirit of God is at work among us. Last week, one of the most determined unbelievers was converted to the Lord, and from a lion became a lamb. In my own family, and among those in my immediate service, I have received a large share of the precious blessing. All this has a salutary effect on older Christians, and I confess that my views and feelings in relation to the colony, have become greatly enlightened and encouraged. The Lord has heard our complaints, and has brought forth his mighty arm ready for salvation.'

FOURTEEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamer Europa sailed from Liverpool on the 16th of December, and arrived at New York on the 31st. She brings the result of the election in France, full particulars of the flight of the Pope from Rome, and an account of the abdication of the Emperor of Austria.

In France, the election of a President commenced on Sunday, the 10th of Dec., and the polling terminated on Monday evening. There is no doubt that Prince Louis Napoleon is chosen, his majority in all the departments from which the returns made up have been received being very considerable. The proclamation of the President will probably be made about the 20th instant. A well-informed Paris paper says: So far as we can judge from the incomplete returns that arrive to us from the departments, the suffrages were divided in the following proportions:

| | |
|---|---|
| Louis Napoleon, | 66 per cent. |
| Cavaignac, | 21 " |
| Ledru Rollin, | 6 " |
| Raspail, | 4 " |
| Lamartine, | 3 " |

On the 2d of December, the Emperor of Austria issued a proclamation, in which he transferred all his rights and honors to his nephew. The main reason which he gives for this movement, is the necessity of more youthful powers to complete the work of reformation begun in Austria. The change is generally acceptable.

The military executions for political offences still continue in Austria. An ex-lieutenant of the Austrian army (Lescynski) has been sentenced by court-martial to twelve years' imprisonment in a fortress, for having taken part in the late insurrection. Another individual, named Urban, has been condemned to twelve years' hard work in chains for a similar offence.

The Pesth House of Representatives has declared the Throne of Hungary vacant, and the house of Hapsburg unworthy to reign. It is said that Kossuth has written to Mr. Styles, the United States Minister, in order to request him to use his influence with Windischgrätz to induce the last named to consent to a three months' truce with Hungary.

A letter from Posen, dated Dec. 6, which is quoted in the Cologne Gazette, says: Prussia, on condition that Russia should reëstablish the kingdom of Poland, and place the Duke of Leuctenburg over it as king, has ceded to Russia that part of the Grand Duchy of Posen which, according to the line of demarkation traced by Gen. Von Schuffer Bernstein, has not been incorporated into Germany. The formal act of cession will take place on January 1.

The Pope is at Gaeta, a large town in the Neapolitan territory, whence he has sent a manifesto to the people of Rome, giving the reasons of his flight, and nominating a Governing Commission. He left Rome to seek a place where he might enjoy "free liberty in the exercise of the sacred duties of the Holy See." The Chamber of Deputies refuses to recognize the official character of the Pope's manifesto, and declares that the present Ministry shall continue to administer the affairs of the country until farther orders.

It is very commonly supposed that Lucien Bonaparte, Prince de Canino, is deeply implicated in the proceedings which have led to the Pope's flight; and it is said that he will probably be appointed President of the Roman Republic, if one should ever be constituted.

Seven of the cardinals have arrived at Naples; but some accounts in the French papers assert that the Pope had ordered the sacred college to proceed to Malta, in order that a conclave might be held there in case of his decease.

Dr. Bowring, whose eminent qualifications as a linguist are so well known, has been appointed her Majesty's Consul at Canton. The learned gentleman has long been in a state of health which required his residence in a warmer climate.

There were alarming riots at Memel on the 4th ult., the town being completely in the hands of the populace during four or five hours. Great excesses were committed.

The cholera rages fearfully at Presburg.

LAST WEEK'S CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

The proceedings in Congress last week do not amount to much. The Senate was in session parts of four days, and the House was in session only a small part of three days. Both Houses adjourned over from Dec. 29th to Jan. 2d. Below we give the substance of what was done.

December 26.

In the Senate, Mr. Underwood submitted a resolution to inquire into the expediency of establishing a Board to ascertain the whole amount of public lands in the United States, and also the value and extent of the gold lands in California, which was laid on the table. Several notices of bills were offered for a grant of land to construct railroads in Iowa and Mississippi. A bill for the sale of the Saginaw Indian lands was taken up, briefly discussed, and passed.

December 27.

In the Senate, numerous memorials and petitions were presented, received, and referred. A bill for the establishment of a new land office in Missouri, was read twice, and referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

In the House, a long discussion arose on a motion of Mr. Stewart to reconsider the vote passing Mr. Gott's resolution respecting the traffic in slaves in the District of Columbia. The question was postponed two weeks. Mr. Sawyer brought to the attention of the House an article recently published in the N. Y. Tribune relative to mileage, concerning which article he made some severe remarks.

December 28.

In the Senate, the bill for the recharter of the Washington and Alexandria Steam-packet Company was taken up and passed. Mr. Bright, of Indiana, offered a joint resolution fixing and reducing the pay of messengers sent to Washington by the Presidential Electoral Colleges, which lies over.

In the House, a great deal of time was taken up in remarks about an article on mileage, published in the N. Y. Tribune. A bill providing for the expenses of the ensuing fiscal year, and the Indian appropriation bill, were taken up and referred to the Committee of the Whole. Mr. Collamer, of Vermont, reported a bill for giving public lands for railroads and canals, also other similar bills, which were read twice and referred to the Committee of the Whole.

December 29.

In the Senate, various memorials and petitions were presented and referred. Among others, was one by Mr. Niles, of Connecticut, numerously signed, praying for the reduction of postage on periodicals and newspapers. Mr. Dix, the Chairman of the Committee on Commerce, reported a bill to remit the tonnage duties on the Chinese Junk Keying.

In the House, the army and military appropriation bills were reported, and referred to the Committee of the Whole. The Pacheco bill, providing indemnity for a lost slave, was discussed at considerable length, but no action taken upon it.

LATE CHINESE ITEMS.

The China Mail contradicts the rumor, which has been published in this country, that Dr. Battelheim, the missionary in the Chinese District of Loo Choo, had been murdered. Up to the last of September, he was alive and free from persecution, though his movements were regarded with jealousy.

Hwang, late Lieutenant Governor of Kwang-tung, has been summoned to Pekin, to aid the Emperor with his advice concerning the recent revolutionary movements in Europe, which have startled even the repose of the Celestial Empire. The Mail says he is a man of great sagacity,—disinterested, and desirous of retirement.

Very severe rain-storms have deluged the north provinces of China, doing great damage to the country, and causing in some instances great loss of life.

The posterity of the Emperor of China is so numerous, that many of them receive only a small stipend, and are virtually menials. A great-grandson of Kang-he is a servant. Some new arrangements have lately been made, by which they will descend gradually in rank until they become mixed with the people.

Sickness is very prevalent among the European troops in China. The disease that chiefly prevails is like the small-pox. The Chinese have suffered extensively, but among the European civilians it has not done any serious damage.

A vessel had arrived in China from the Russian Fur Company with furs, for the purpose of opening a market at Shanghai. It is considered doubtful whether the Chinese will permit it, on account of a treaty which already gives them some exclusive privileges. Previous attempts of a similar kind have been made without success.

The manufacture of gunpowder within two miles of the town of Victoria has been forbidden by proclamation. It has heretofore been largely manufactured by desperadoes off shore, who sell to pirates and smugglers.

A professor of literature in China, in a state of intoxication, drove out of the hall four hundred students, and flogged several stipendiaries, for which he was suspended by Keshen, who did not, however, obtain a confirmation of his sentence, as it was found that 'the professor had points in his character, and had not compromised his office.'

Bands of robbers have been organized in several of the Chinese provinces, and are plundering and destroying hamlets and villages.

A Chinese, having been detected in cutting fire-wood near the Imperial residence, has been sentenced to be beheaded.

The China Mail says that China has undergone an entire revolution in its ideas of passive obedience. Disturbances have broken out in several provinces—in Shang-tung among others.

The colored man, Belt, of an attempt to kidnap whom in New York we gave some account last week, was discharged from custody by Judge Edmonds, and was immediately hurried off by his friends to a place of security.

The Jamestown Journal has notice of an application to be made at the next session of the Legislature for a new county from parts of Chautauque and Cattaraugus counties. The proposition is to take the towns Charlotte, Cherry Creek, Ellington, Gerry, Ellicott, Poland, Carroll, and the east part of Busti, from Chautauque county, and the same extent of territory from Cattaraugus county.

On the 9th ult. the barn of Peter Tidd, Esq., Tatamagouche, Nova Scotia, was consumed. Mr. Tidd was threshing in it by candle light; the chaff took fire, the flames spread, Mr. Tidd tried to smother them, but perished in the flames, as also fifteen head of cattle.

The Quebec Gazette of December 20th, learns by telegraph from Brockville, that Jonathan Cole, wife, three children, brother-in-law, and servant, started on Sunday afternoon, the 17th ult., for Yonge Mills, from Maitland in a boat. While ascending Yonge Creek the boat upset, and they were all drowned. The sail-boat and one body (that of Mr. Cole) is all that has been found yet.

A new counterfeit, on the Salem Banking Company, Salem, N. J., is in circulation; $3—Vignette, train of railroad cars, and a steamboat with the word 'Caroline' on the wheelhouse. On the left margin of the note, female and eagle; on the right, locomotive and cars. Paper white, and general appearance pretty good.

A telegraphic dispatch from New Orleans, dated December 23, says that seventy-nine new cases of cholera had occurred at the Charity Hospital since the 20th inst., and new ones are hourly brought in. The community has been greatly excited in consequence of the Board of Health having emphatically proclaimed that the disease is epidemical in its character.

The Detroit Free Press says that the spotted fever, which prevailed to a great extent in various parts of the State last winter, in most cases proving fatal, has, we are informed, again made its appearance. At Lansing, we learn that many deaths have occurred within the last two weeks.

William Dandridge Eppes was hanged at Dinwiddie Court House, Va., for the murder of F. Adolphus Muir. He made a full confession of his guilt in relation to the murder of Muir, but denied that he had committed the other murders attributed to him.

The Bangor Whig of the 19th, gives a lamentable account of the death by drowning of three children of Mr. Wm. W. Snow. During the recess at school they were sliding down a hill, when they fell into a channel cut in the ice in the stream, and were all swept under the ice by the current and drowned.

William Barret left Buffalo for Dexter, Jefferson county, N. Y., September 16th, and has not been heard of since. He is an Englishman, about five feet high, thick-set, and sandy complexion, and wore a cloth cap and frock coat. Any information respecting him addressed to Charlotte Barret Dexter, N. Y., will be thankfully received.

Miss Mary Ann Law recovered the sum of $600 by a suit in Junita Co. against Mr. Thos. Laughlin, for breach of promise. She had previously been awarded $625 by arbitrators, from whose decision the defendant appealed to the Court, with the result before stated.

The Cincinnati Commercial states that it is rumored that a person connected with the Methodist Book Concern in that city, had been pretty deeply buried in a defalcation, and has been found to be among the missing.

On Wednesday, the 27th ult., the New York and Erie Railroad was opened from Port Jervis to Binghampton, a distance of one hundred and twenty-six miles, thus extending the finished track two hundred and a half miles from Piermont, on the Hudson.

A telegraphic dispatch from New Orleans, via Louisville, states that on the 25th ult., one hundred new cases of cholera were reported in that city. Number of deaths not stated.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm consists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, and the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality it is not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house. JARED MAXSON.

GENESEE, December 20th, 1848. 29m3.

THE BOOK

For every Clergyman—For every School District—For every Educated Man.

WEBSTER'S QUARTO DICTIONARY, Unabridged. Price $6.—Published by G. and C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass., and for sale by Booksellers generally.

"Will not the enlightened and liberal furnish their clergymen with a copy, as an indispensable volume in their libraries?"—Rev. T. H. Gallaudet.

Extract from a Lecture addressed to a Teacher's Institute, by William Russel, Principal of the Merrimack [N. H.] School for Teachers, and formerly Editor of the American Journal of Education:

"The edition of Dr. Webster's Dictionary, revised by Professor Goodrich, I would earnestly recommend to the attention of all teachers who are desirous of becoming fully qualified to give instruction in the English Language. The copious information which that work embodies, on all topics connected with Etymology—the extreme exactness, as well as the number, extent, and fullness of the definitions which it furnishes to every important word, render it a mine of philological wealth to instructors. The volume is, in fact, the teacher's encyclopedia, as well as lexicon, for daily reference. Could a copy of it be provided, as the permanent property of every district school, the effect, as regards the improvement of instruction, would be deeply and extensively felt, in the increased skill of the teacher, and the higher attainments of his pupils, in the most important part of education—the acquisition of an adequate knowledge and proper use of our own language."

"It has come to be a necessity to every educated man."—Lord Brougham

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION—SEMI-ANNUAL MEETING.

The Seventh-day Baptist Central Association will hold a Semi-Annual Meeting, for missionary purposes, on the third day of the week, before the second Sabbath in January next, at 11 o'clock, A. M., with the Church in Scott, Cortland Co., N. Y. A full representation from the several churches composing said Association, is earnestly requested.

ELI S. BAILEY.

BROOKFIELD, December 8th, 1848.

TRACT ON SUNDAY LEGISLATION.

At a meeting of the Board of Managers of the American Sabbath Tract Society, held on the 15th of October, the Corresponding Secretary was instructed to offer a Premium of Ten Dollars for the best Tract, not exceeding 16 pages on the subject of Sunday Legislation, showing its anti-Christian and anti-republican tendencies. Manuscripts on the subject are solicited, and may be forwarded to the Corresponding Secretary, Geo. B. Utter, before the 15th day of January, 1849, at which time those on hand will be referred to a Committee appointed by the Board for examination and decision.

PROSPECTUS OF THE
EDINBURGH QUARTERLY MAGAZINE
OF MORAL AND INTELLECTUAL SCIENCE.
Volume I. for 1848—American edition.
GEORGE COMBE AND ROBERT COX, EDITORS.

THE many and earnest desires expressed by the lovers of Phrenology on this side of the Atlantic, and the hope of still further advancing this great cause, has induced us to publish an American edition of this profound and

SCIENTIFIC QUARTERLY.

Its character and merits need but little comment, further than that it emanates from some of the ablest minds in England and Scotland, and has been before the public more than twenty years.

GEORGE COMBE,

The distinguished phrenological writer, is its principal contributor and virtual conductor. This work embodies all the new discoveries, together with all of interest which appertains to Phrenological Science.

MAGNETISM

It also advocates, showing its adaptation to medical science, to the relief of human suffering, and to its other various and important applications.

It also urges, with great ability and pre-eminent success,

HUMAN RIGHTS,

Showing the bearings of this science of mind to legislation, moral and political government, as well as to individual self control and intellectual cultivation.

The first number will be embellished with a beautiful portrait of Mr. Combe, and subsequent numbers by those of other distinguished individuals. Each number will contain 96 pages, and will be issued quarterly on the following REDUCED TERMS, invariably in advance:

Single copy, one year, $2 00
Three copies, " 5 00

All subscribers will commence and close with the volume.

CONSTITUTION
OF A
SEVENTH-DAY BAPTIST PUBLISHING SOCIETY

Art. 1.—This Society shall be known by the name of "The Seventh-day Baptist Publishing Society."

Art. 2.—The object of this Society shall be to print and publish such periodicals, books, &c., as shall meet the wants of the Seventh-day Baptist denomination, and promote the cause of Christ generally.

Art. 3.—Each contributor of five dollars may become a Member of the Society, and each contributor of twenty-five dollars may become an Honorary Director, with the privilege of participating in the deliberations of the Board of Managers.

Art. 4.—The Society shall hold an Annual Meeting, at which it shall elect a President, a Vice President, a Corresponding Secretary, a Recording Secretary, and a Treasurer, who, together with four others elected for the purpose, shall constitute a Board of Managers to conduct the business of the Society, having power to make their own by-laws, and to fill any vacancies that may occur in their body.

Art. 5.—The Board of Managers shall meet quarterly for the transaction of business, at such time and place as shall have been appointed at a previous meeting. The Recording Secretary shall call extra meetings of the Board, whenever any three members of the Board shall request him to do so.

Art. 6.—The minutes of each meeting of the Board shall be signed by the Chairman and the Recording Secretary.

Art. 7.—The first Annual Meeting of the Society shall be held in the City of New York on the fourth day of the week before the fourth Sabbath in May, 1849, 25th day of the month; and subsequent Annual Meetings may be held at such times and places as the Society shall direct. At these meetings the Board of Managers shall present a Report of their transactions, together with the Treasurer's account.

Art. 8.—Should there at any time, on the presentation of the Annual Report of the Board of Managers, be a surplus on hand, over and above what may, in the judgment of the Board, be required to meet the wants of the establishment, the Society shall divide such surplus in equal sums among the following benevolent objects, viz: Missions, the circulation of religious Tracts, the education of candidates for the ministry, and the support of indigent superannuated ministers or their widows and orphans. Should the Society for any reason ever be dissolved, its property, if any, shall be divided in the same manner as above provided in case of a surplus.

Art. 9.—This Constitution may be altered at any Annual Meeting of the Society, by a vote of two-thirds of the members present.

Miscellaneous.

BIRTH-DAY VERSES.

[FROM THE DUTCH OF TOLLENS.]

Restless Time! who ne'er abidest,
Driver! who Life's chariot guidest
O'er dark hills and vales that smile,
Let me—let me breathe awhile!
Whither dost thou hasten? say!
Driver, but an instant stay!

What a viewless distance thou,
Still untired, hast traveled now!
Never tarrying—rest unheeding—
Over thorns and roses speeding,
Through lone places unforeseen—
Cliff and vast abyss between.

Five and twenty years thou'st passed,
Thundering on unchecked and fast,
And, though tempests burst around,
Stall nor stay thy coursers found:
I [illegible] dizzy—faint—oppress—
Driver, for one moment rest!

Swifter than the lightning flies
All things vanish from my eyes—
All that rose so brightly o'er me,
Like pale mist-wreaths fade before me;
Every spot my glance can find,
Thy impatience leaves behind.

Yesterday thy wild steeds flew
O'er a spot where roses grew;
These I sought to gather blindly,
But thou hurriedst on unkindly;
Fairest buds I trampled, lorn,
And but grasped the naked thorn.

Driver! turn thee quickly back
On the self-same beaten track;
'T was of late so much neglected—
Lost—forgot—contemned—rejected—
That I still each scene would trace:—
Slacken thy bewildering pace!

Dost thou thus impetuous drive,
That thou sooner may'st arrive
Safe within the hallowed fences
Where Delight—where Rest commences?
Where, then, wouldst thou respite crave?
All make answer—"At the Grave!"

There, alas! and only there,
Through the storms that rend the air,
Doth the rugged pathway bend;
There all pains and sorrows end;—
There Repose's goal is won;—
Driver! ride, in God's name, on!

THE CHOLERA.

As the public tranquillity has been suddenly disturbed by the re-appearance of this formidable malady among us, it seems to be a plain and positive duty for those who have had experience of the disease, and have reflected upon it, and elicited truth respecting it, to offer them for the benefit of the public.

In 1832 I had a large experience of it in England, being at that time one of the Medical Officers of the Board of Health, appointed by the Government for its investigation and treatment; and since that I have been engaged in similar investigations and services, which have caused me to reflect, and, I hope, to elicit some truths respecting it, not known to every one—perhaps not to any one.

The symptoms of the cholera, according to the best authorities, differ in places, persons, and seasons—yet there are certain distinctive symptoms, which characterize it invariably. These are a lurid or leaden hue of the skin, especially of the face and hands—a deadly coldness of the body, it being simply of the temperature of the atmosphere—cramps of the muscles, and spasms of the alimentary viscera, and a whitey-yellow discharge from the stomach and bowels, of the consistence and color of rice-water. The animal heat is never restored, if the disease terminate fatally. If the animal heat be restored, the disease terminates favorably.

The disease is contagious and infectious. The effluvium of a diseased person will, under certain circumstances, re-produce the disease in another person, just as Typhus Fever, Gangrenous Erysipelas, or Plague, will. This I have largely noticed. The disease has been brought home by one member of a family, and the whole family has been mown down.

The persons who are liable to the disease are the miserably poor, the destitute, the dissolute, the abandoned, the debauchees, the diseased, and the fearful. Those who are healthy, wholesomely cleansed, clad, fed, and employed, are not likely to take it, unless they are afraid, and they need not be. The man who takes proper care of his soul and body is safe. Fearfulness is disease of the mind, and will be followed by disease of the body. I was in the midst of the disease for weeks together, day and night, and so was an excellent, fearless nurse, that I prized; and we both went safely through it.

There is a peculiar state of the air when the disease appears. A great quantity of vapor and gas is suspended in it, near the earth, and the temperature is warmer than usual by day, but cold at night. It is much the same sort of air as that of an ill-ventilated wash-house—damp, clammy, muggy. I want words to express my meaning. The damp air hangs about you—clings to you.

The explanation of the disease is this: The blood of the persons who take it is but poorly organized—that is, there are not enough of good elements, sufficiently combined with the caloric in the lungs to keep each part vigorous. The air is composed of one-half vapors and deleterious gases, and does not furnish as much of oxygen gas for combustion in the lungs as is requisite for the heat of the blood when in health; therfore, a chilly night robs the body of its heat faster than it makes it, and it sinks below the standard of life.

The breathing is diminished because neither the lungs, which carry on the involuntary part of respiration, nor the brain, which carries on the voluntary part, are supplied with good blood. The life, therefore, has begun the descending process, and if not hindered will complete it.

The blood not being caloricised—that is, combined with caloric in the lungs, the cause of its redness and vitality—it is lurid and leaden, and the patient often appears as if he had been blackleaded for a ghost. The blood has no warmth to give out, and therefore the patient is cold; and as there is not enough of caloric in the solids and fluids to keep them organized, the thin part of the blood oozes away as in death, and the thicker part remains clotty. There is hardly any circulation—no pulse.

The same thing happens in Plague, and malignant fevers. I have seen it produced in men who have been inhaling the unwholesome air of a well or mine. We often see it in a hospital, or in close, crowded, ill-ventilated, filthy alleys. If a man have poor blood and bad air, with exposure to night chills, he is ready for any disease that may be in the way.

Much has been written upon the condition of the atmosphere, as the origin of the disease. Now be it remembered, that the atmosphere is composed of only two gases, Oxygen and Nitrogen, and both of them are requisite to life and health. There may be more or less of other gases of a poisonous nature in the atmosphere—as the compounds of Carbon, Sulphur, Phosphorus, and Hydrogen, all of which are awful poisons to the blood of man. Carboretted Sulphuret of Hydrogen is a most deadly compound. It is produced abundantly from decomposing animal and vegetable substances.

But though we analyzed the air most perfectly in every place, we could not operate upon it sensibly. One thing, however, I would strongly impress upon the public: Do not use any so-called disinfecting fluids. You are ignorant of what is in the air; do not add to your ignorance the error of putting something more there, of which, and its effects, you are equally ignorant.

Use air, water, and fire, for the experience of all mankind attests their benefits. One thing only can be of any service to the atmosphere—plenty of dry heat. If the sun do not shine, make large fires, if you please. The fire of London stayed the Plague. If the people in the miserable districts of the city were provided for, the destruction of these districts by fire would be a public blessing. The caloric would decompose the miasma, and render it harmless.

We can do more, however, with the people than with the air. If the population can be fed, clothed, and cleansed wholesomely, employed usefully by day, and found wholsome, warm lodgings at night, to which they may return early and sleep, the state of the air is not of much consequence. To all persons, early retirement to bed is of the utmost importance. All persons who have the cholera are seized with it late at night or early in the morning. An early, warm sleep secures you from the attack. If all public places, and all private ones, were closed by ten or eleven o'clock, and all the people in bed and asleep, we should be safe enough.

Let me give the reason why early sleep is best. The sooner you sleep after your last meal the better is your blood for circulation and nourishment. Your brain and lungs, the organs upon which your life depends, will have the best of it to repair them ere it has been spent on other parts less necessary for you. Spend it upon a play, a ball, or a party, you have it not. Besides, the first part of the night is quietest. Sleep while you may.

Wash yourself thoroughly in a warm room—clothe yourself comfortably, feed yourself satisfactorily and temperately—employ yourself entirely—and go to bed early and sleep—and you will be safe enough. Employment is the soul of health. The idle man is always complaining.

Respecting food, some may desire a word. Everything is food which will make blood. Alcohol and Tobacco do not. Meat, fish, fowl, vegetables, grains, fruits, and roots, will. Take what your wants and appetites require. Judge for yourself what suits you. What are your instincts, appetites, and reason for? Can they not tell you what you want for dinner? Go back again and be a baby. Get some charitably disposed lady to take care of you and feed you.

You desire good food when you have no fear of the cholera—you desire it now. Take it, if you can get it. You need not be afraid of tea and coffee now, if they agreed with you before. A good apple, or other fruit, in its place, with other food, is just as requisite now as at any time. Attend to your stomach two or three times a day; attend to your bowels once a day—be sure of that. Not with pill and potion—give them opportunity, that's all.

J. H. SHERMAN, M. D.

PERSECUTION OF THE JEWS.

In the province of Alsace, the merciless persecution of this unhappy race continued unabated. The Alsacian of May 3d, says, that no Jew dare show himself in the streets. Many who had attempted to escape in a Swiss village in the neighborhood, had been waylaid, robbed, and cruelly ill-treated. One entire family was thrown overboard, and hundreds were murdered, and their property pillaged. The mob was perfectly furious, and paid no attention to the police who were in attendance, nominally to keep order, while houses were torn down, and whole families murdered without the slighest interference. Persons in disguise had been traveling through the villages inciting the people to a crusade against the Jews—and the Mayors, though most certainly aware of the movement, had made no efforts to check it. The Alsacien also gives many particulars of the cruelty practiced by the people in a mass against the miserable descendants of Abraham.

In Switzerland, too, though they have refrained from open acts of violence, yet they have instituted a proceeding which will cause more suffering among them than any mere mob could do, viz: the deliberate banishment of every Jew from all the Cantons of the country—but one—that of Neufchatel,—which has nobly stood its ground, and opposed a decree so disgraceful to the nation. There, at least, this persecuted race can enjoy the protection which they so much need. We cannot but hope that the government, before it be too late, will repent, and endeavor to retrieve its reputation for liberty, justice, and toleration, so forfeited by the act. The whole accounts from both countries show the prospects of the Jews to be most discouraging. [N. Y. Express.

THE BAD LUMP.

The following incident we relate on the authority of the old sailor, who delivered a temperance lecture on board a steamboat running between New York and New Haven.

Having found a man who was divested of all decent clothing, and in a wretched state of health, in consequence of drinking, he induced him, amidst the discouragements of the tavern keeper, at whose house he had found him, to sign the temperance pledge for one year. The landlord prophecied that he would not keep the pledge a year; or that, if he did, he would not renew it. As the year was drawing to a close, the old sailor called upon the man, and secured his signature again. He signed it for ninety nine years, with the privilege of a life lease afterward! When the day arrived upon which his first pledge expired, he roguishly went to visit his old friend the tavern-keeper. "There he comes," said the eager rumseller, "he will now have a glorious spree to atone for his long abstinence." When he arrived at the tavern, he complained of a bad feeling at his stomach, and of various ills, among which was a bad lump on one side, which had been increasing in size for some months. "Ah," said the landlord, "did I not tell you it would kill you to break off drinking so suddenly? I wonder you lived as long as you have. Come, now, what will you take?" And suiting the action to the word, he placed a decanter before him.

"But," said the visiter, "I have signed the pledge for ninety-nine years, with the privilege of a life lease afterwards!"

"What a fool," said the landlord, "if you go on as you have done, you will not live another year."

"Do you really think so, landlord?"

"Certainly; come, what will you take?"

"Oh, no, landlord; I have signed the pledge again, and then this horrible lump on my side. I do not think that drinking will make it any better."

"It is all," said the landlord, "because you have left off drinking. You will have a corresponding lump on the other side before long, if you continue another year as the last."

"Do you think I will? Well, then, so be it. I will not violate my pledge; for look here, landlord, (pulling out a great purse, with a hundred dollars in silver shining through the interstices,) that is the lump which has been growing for so many months, and as you said, it is the natural consequence of having signed the pledge. That is what you would have had, if I had not signed it; and if I have a bigger one than that for ninety-nine years, I will not take to drinking again." [N. Y. Evan.

CURE FOR DROPSY.

Mr. Lynn, of the Irving Institute, has addressed a letter to his brethren, the Editors of the Christian Advocate and Journal, stating the manner in which his wife was cured of the dropsy. The following are the facts:—

"My wife has been cured of that species of dropsy called ascites, after our physicians in this town, and two eminent physicians in N. York, relinquished the hope of ever getting rid of it. We used a great variety of appointed remedies without benefit, and finally submitted to the operation of tapping, under the direction of Dr. Palmer, when three gallons of water were drawn away in about five minutes. This afforded immediate relief; but the water collected again, and in about three weeks the bloating was nearly as great as before. She continued to drink a decoction of Apocynum Canabinum, which always proved more beneficial in checking the progress of the irregular secretion than any other drink. Expecting to submit to another operation, we went to the city to take advice respecting the time for the second. Just at this time sister O'Brien sent us word to use the vapor-bath, which she had known to be efficacious in some desperate dropsical cases in England. I had a convenient apparatus made, and commenced the use of it twice a day, fifteen or twenty minutes each time, medicated with Apocynum. In about two weeks there was an apparent improvement of general health and strength. In three or four weeks the bloating began to subside, and in two months more, the ascitic affection had entirely disappeared, and her general health is decidedly better than it has been for some years."

Life in New York.—The New York correspondent of the National Era, writes in the following strain about the ways of getting a living in the city: "I confess I have been often amused in studying the many apparently petty, trifling, and contemptible 'lines' in which hundreds find the means of respectable support and even affluence. There are importing houses 'down town,' which do a business amounting to hundreds of thousands of dollars per annum, in doll's heads, beads, and other trifles, with which the elder Smiths testify their unbounded love for the juvenile world. Immense sums are yearly turned over in the trade in those cheap colored wood-cuts which are sold by itinerant venders in town and country. Eighty thousand copies of the six-penny print of General Harrison's death-bed were sold in a few months. Upwards of one hundred thousand dollars have been expended in the purchase of the various 'likenesses' of General Taylor—from the large coarse portrait which represents him as a great burly savage, with a suspicious warmth of complexion, and a head and neck like those of the Emperor Nero, down to that one in which he is made to assume the character of an amiable philanthropist, dispensing contentment and happiness on his plantation. Great fortunes have, indeed, been realized in this humble department of the fine arts."

---

Oaks.—Professor Beck says that the oaks of the forest are known with tolerable certainty to attain the ages of 800 to 900 years, and are the most aged trees we possess. Pines are stated by Dr. Williams, in his history of Vermont, to live from 350 to 400 years. Of the oaks comprised under the Linnæan genus quercus, botanists are acquainted with more than 440 species, of which upwards of one-half belong to America. In this state there are fifteen species—mossy cup, post white, swamp white, swamp chesnut, willow, black scrub, black, red or scarlet, pine, and red oak. The white oak is the most valuable of all, being extensively employed in ship-building. In England, during one hundred years, the price of ship-building advanced 100 per cent. Sinclair, in his Code of Agriculture, stated that a 74 gun ship requires 2000 loads of wood, the produce of fifty acres, each tree standing 33 feet apart. Hence the importance of cultivating the oak, and where the young trees are raised, the ground should be cultivated for twenty years at least.

Converting Wheat from an Annual to a Perennial Plant.—The attempt has been made to convert wheat from an annual to a perennial plant, and it is said, with some good degree of success. The account given is, that it was discovered by the steward, or collector, named Kern, of an estate at Constance. After he had ploughed and manured the land, he then sowed it with summer or winter wheat. In the spring, before the ear makes its appearance, he mows it. This he does several times in the course of the season, using it as a kind of hay. After this he allows the plant to grow, and be harvested as usual. The ensuing year it ripens earlier, and bears a much larger crop than wheat culitvated in the usual manner. In autumn it is manured like the grass of meadows, and in the spring the weeds are removed. The effect is stated to be such, that from one field four successive harvests have been gathered.

Dr. Johnson's Opinion of Editors.—The great 'literary Collosus,' speaks as follows of the difficulties and perplexities of an editorial life—'I know no class of the community from whom so much disinterested benevolence and thankless labor is expected as from editors of newspapers. They are expected to feel for every one but themselevs; to correct public abuses, and private ones also, without giving offence; to sustain the difficulties of others, without regard to their own; to condemn improper measures of every one and no one at the same time. They are expected to note everything that is important or extraordinary; and notwithstanding the diversity of men's opinions, their notice must be calculated to please every one, and at the same time to offend no one.'

VARIETY.

The National Intelligencer says that an English nobleman came down in a steamboat from St. Louis to New Orleans, last week, having with him a number of animals, birds, &c., obtained in an excursion of some months among the wilds of the West. He had four fine buffalos, one with calf, and the largest cow buffalo ever seen. He intends stocking his park with them. He had also a beautiful antelope, obtained from a naval officer, with a fine polar bear. He showed an extensive collection of our prairie-birds, &c., preserved in fine state by his naturalist.

One day last week, says the Prattsville (N. Y.) Advocate, no less than 280 butter wagons passed through our village; and one day this week as many more—making in two days 560. The average number of firkins was 20 for each wagon, making a total of 11,200 firkins of butter. This multiplied by $12, the average value of a firkin of butter, amounts to the large sum of $134,000—and all from the dairies of Delaware and Otsego Counties.

There is a debating club in Waterville, Me., which for three successive nights has had under consideration the followiug question:—"Can an *up*right man be a *down*right honest fellow?" The subject was most vigorously debated, but, so acute and ingenious were the reasonings on both sides, that there was a tie vote. They will next discuss the following: "When a house is burnt up, is it burnt down?" Here's a chance for hair-splitting and nice distinctions!

During a recent debate between an Italian priest and a Protestant minister, in Missouri, the Protestant charged the priest with having kissed the Pope's toe on his recent visit to Rome. To the great amusement of the audience, the priest started to his feet, and vehemently denied the charge; "If de man say I kiss the Pope's toe, he lie. True, I kiss de cross on the Pope's toe, for reverence sake, but I no kiss his toe."

"A worthy but poor minister," writes a friend from the country, "requested a few days since the loan of fifty dollars from the cashier of our bank; and in the note requesting the favor, he said that if the cashier would oblige him, he would 'pay him in ten days, on the faith of Abraham.'" The cashier returned word that by the rules of the bank, the endorser of a note must "reside in the State!"

An English paper says—'Mr. Jermy, the Recorder of Norwich, while standing in his garden, was shot. His son, hearing the report of the gun, ran out, and he also was shot. Mrs. Jermy came out and was wounded in the arm. The maid then came out and she was wounded in the thigh. The two gentlemen died immediately, and the ladies were not expected to live. The assassin is supposed to be a person of whom Mr. Jermy had the better in a law suit.

In 1784 the poor-law expenditure in England was ten millions of dollars; in 1834 it had reached the enormous sum of forty-one millions! The last year it exceeded thirty-five millions, to which another million should be added to defray the expenses of the Commissioners and for medical relief. Miserable, squalid Ireland is not included in this estimate.

A Roman Catholic clergyman, Mr. Coyle, has been lecturing in England on America and Americans. He says that to give a man a black name, it is only necessary to put him up for office.

We see it stated in the papers that twenty students of the Wesleyan University are suspended on the ground of having attended a cotillion party.

Planets govern not the soul, nor guide the destinies of men; but trifles, lighter than straws, are levers in the building up of character.

The debt of Mexico to Great Britain, is $10,241, 650, on which there are unpaid arrears of interest amounting to $1,090,000 more.

BRITISH PERIODICAL LITERATURE.

REPUBLICATION OF

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor, and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Tory, Whig, and Radical—"Blackwood" and the "London Quarterly" are Tory; the "Edinburgh Review" Whig; and the "Westminster Review" Radical. The "North British Review" is more of a religious character, having been originally edited by Dr. Chalmers, and now, since his death, being conducted by his son-in-law, Dr. Hanna, associated with Sir David Brewster. Its literary character is of the very highest order. The "Westminster," though reprinted under that title only, is published in England under the title of the "Foreign Quarterly and Westminster," it being in fact a union of the two Reviews formerly published and reprinted under separate titles. It has, therefore, the advantage, by this combination, of uniting in one work the best features of both as heretofore issued.

The above Periodicals are reprinted in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals, Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac-simile of the Edinburgh edition.

TERMS.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For any one of the four Reviews, | $3 00 | per annum. |
| For any two, " | 5 00 | " |
| For any three, " | 7 00 | " |
| For all four of the Reviews, | 8 00 | " |

| For Blackwood and three Reviews, | 9 00 | " |
| For Blackwood and the four Reviews, | 10 00 | " |

Payments to be made in all cases in advance.

CLUBBING.

Four copies of any or all of the above works will be sent to one address, on payment of the regular subscription for three—the fourth copy being gratis.

EARLY COPIES.

Our late arrangement with the British publishers of Blackwood's Magazine, secures to us early sheets of that work, by which we are enabled to place the entire number in the hands of subscribers before any portion of it can be reprinted in any of the American Journals. For this and other advantages secured to our subscribers, we pay so large a consideration, that we may be compelled to raise the price of the Magazine.

☞ Something may therefore be gained by subscribing early.

ALLEDGED CHANGE OF THE SABBATH AT THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

[Section X. of J. A. Begg's Treatise on the Sabbath.]

The very general and confident opinion that our Lord's Resurrection took place on the first day of the week, and the countenance given to this opinion in our translation of the New Testament, will, I have no doubt, make it startling to many, that I should begin this part of the argument by a challenge of proof that He at all rose on the first day. I refer not at present to the assertions of the Fathers,* but I ask for evidence from the Word of God, that it was so. And here I crave the liberty of appeal to the original Greek, confident as I am that the bias of prepossession is, in our translation, very evident.

I have quoted the translation of the statement of the Evangelist Matthew, according to the division adopted in the authorized version, but remark, that eminent Greek scholars, in no way favorable to our views of the Sabbath, connect the first clause of the 1st verse of the 28th chapter with the last verse of the 27th chapter, acknowledging it to be wrong to say, "In the end of the Sabbath, as it began to dawn toward the first day of the week." The end of the Sabbath having been at sunset, they read, "sealing the stone, and setting a watch, in the end of the Sabbath." Beginning then a new paragraph, or chapter, they read, "As it began to dawn toward the first day of the week, came Mary Magdalene."

Admitting the propriety of this division, adopted by Griesback and others, as obviously more correct than that of the common version, we however question the authority for the translation "first day of the week." The entire phrase is unauthorized by the original. There is neither a "first day" nor a "week" in the Greek text. It is precisely the same word which, in the preceding sentence, is rendered Sabbath, ("setting a watch, in the end of the Sabbath,") which is here translated week, ("the first day of the week.") What reason is there for making this difference in the translation of the same word, occurring in consecutive sentences, except the reason which a preädopted theory suggests? In no one of the gospels is the language, in the original, capable, without very great straining, of being rendered "first day of the week." The words are "mia ton Sabbaton," which strictly signifies, literally translated, "One of the Sabbaths"—ton Sabbaton, being in the genitive plural. The two words, "one" and "of the Sabbaths," are not, however, of the same gender, and day is generally understood. It has been farther proposed to supply "appo" (from) and translate, "one [day from] the Sabbaths"—that is "the day after the Sabbath." It will be admitted by every scholar, on examination, for it is undeniable, that mia is not the word usually employed to signify "first," but that it properly signifies, and is generally translated, "one;" while it will be no less readily conceded that Sabbatos is the word uniformly used to signify the Sabbath, when the seventh day of the week is intended. However general the impression that these words, used in reference to the time of our Lord's resurrection, are to be regarded as meaning "the first day of the week," and however much stress has been laid upon cases supposed to justify such a translation, no one acquainted with the meaning of the terms will deny, that, in ordinary circumstances, such texts would be individually translated otherwise. In the New Testament there are several instances in which the words "the first-day" occur, in which, however, as we shall show, the Greek form of expression is totally different.

The unquestionable fact, that mia does signify "one," and Sabbatos, "Sabbath," and the difficulty of giving a satisfactory rendering, have induced some critics to adopt the reading to which I have referred, by interposing the supplementary word from as well as day, and reading "one [day from] the Sabbath." By this the first day of the week is then supposed to be, at least substantially, found, which is regarded as satisfactory by such critics. But according even to this understanding, the Sabbath also is found in the text, and that under its own proper name, and without any intimation that the Resurrection of Christ has in any way affected its sanction or authority—for, according to this reading and interpretation, it was still "the Sabbath," when the resurrection was past, when all the Evangelists penned their accounts of it.

But we have to remember, that Sabbaton, here, being in the plural, would, literally translated, be "the Sabbaths." It is proper also to state, that it is true the different genders of mia and Sabbaton render it impossible, as it would be ungrammatical, for us so to connect them as to read "one of the Sabbaths." A word agreeing in gender with mia would require to be supplied; but, whatever that word may be, it cannot, without violation of all propriety, be made the occasion of changing the signification of words which are in themselves clear and distinct. I am not aware that there is any instance in which Sabbatos is used, either in Scripture or by Greek writers, (although it may possibly be so used, in cases to serve a purpose by the corrupting Fathers) to signify any thing else than the Sabbath—either weekly, or festival, or glorious. The word here is the ordinary word for Sabbath, and, as we have said, is in the plural number, and no sufficient reason has been shown why here it should be rendered "week."

In the words, "first day of the week," our translators, by printing "day" in italics, have acknowledged that it is supplied by them, there being no corresponding word in the original, while, as we have stated, some supplementary word is required, agreeing in gender with mia, the word signifying one, which, however, they have unnecessarily and improperly rendered "first." This is altogether unwarranted by the analogy of the language of the inspired authors of the Greek Scriptures. There are different words constantly used in the original of the New Testament to express "one" and "first," which the translators have here confounded; while, although occurring very frequently, as we shall see, in almost every instance except when seeking to give countenance to the idea of a first-day Sabbath, our translators themselves have carefully distinguished, rendering them correctly by the two corresponding English words.

As this is a point not only of importance in the consideration of the subject, but one which those who are capable, by their acquaintance with the original language, to explain, very studiously conceal from those who are not, I shall illustrate their true meaning by exhibiting the manner in which these words mia, "one," and protos, "first," are used respectively throughout the New Testament. To put the matter fully, as well as fairly, before the English reader, I shall give, in order, the whole of the instances in which both words occur. This, although occupying considerable space, will afford opportunity of observing the unvarying use of both, as perfectly distinct; and by giving the translations, as in our common version, it will be perceived how entirely our translators, in those few cases which have been used in support of the sanctification of Sunday, have departed from their own ordinary rendering of mia, when they have translated it by the English word "first."

In the Greek New Testament mia occurs, and is translated as follows:—

"Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law." Matt. 5: 18.

"Whosoever therefore shall break one of these least commandments." Matt. 5: 19.

"Thou canst not make one hair white or black." Matt. 5: 36.

"Let us make here three tabernacles; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias." Matt. 18: 4.

"For this cause shall a man leave father and mother, and shall cleave to his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh. Wherefore, they are no more twain, but one flesh." Matt. 19: 5, 6.

"These last have wrought but one hour." Matt. 20: 12.

"And when He saw a figtree in the way." [Marg. "one figtree."] Matt. 21: 19.

"Two women shall be grinding at the mill; the one shall be taken, and the other left." [Rather, and "one shall be left."] Matt. 24: 41.

"Could ye not watch with me one hour." Matt. 26: 40.

"A damsel came unto Him." [One damsel.] Matt. 26: 69.

"Toward the first day of the week." Matt. 28: 1.

This last text, which relates to our Lord's resurrection, is therefore the only one in all the Gospel of Matthew in which this word mia is rendered first, even by the translators themselves. But we proceed:

"Let us make three tabernacles; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias." Mark 9: 5.

"For this cause shall a man leave his father and mother, and cleave to his wife; and they twain shall be one flesh; so then they are no more twain, but one flesh." Mark 10: 8.

"There came a certain poor widow." [One poor widow.] Mark 12: 42.

"There cometh one of the maids of the high priest." Mark 14: 66.

"In the first day of the week." Mark 16: 2.

Here, again, this last text, also relating to our Lord's resurrection, is the only one in Mark's Gospel in which mia is rendered "first," even by our translators. But we advance:

"And it came to pass, when He was in a certain city." Luke 5: 12.

"And it came to pass on a certain day, as He was teaching." Luke 5: 17.

"Now it came to pass on a certain day, that He went into a ship." Luke 8: 22.

"Let us make three tabernacles; one for Thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias." Luke 9: 33.

"And He was teaching in one of the synagogues on the Sabbath." Luke 13: 10.

"And they all with one consent began to make excuse." Luke 14: 18.

"What woman, having ten pieces of silver, if she lose one piece, doth not light a candle?" Luke 15: 8.

"And it is easier for heaven and earth to pass, than one tittle of the law to fail." Luke 16: 17.

"The days will come when ye shall desire to see one of the days of the Son of Man, and ye shall not see it." Luke 17: 22.

"I tell you, in that night there shall be two men in one bed, the one shall be taken, and the other shall be left. Two women shall be grinding together; the one shall be taken, and the other left." Luke 17: 34.

"And it came to pass, that on one of those days, as He taught the people in the temple." Luke 20: 1.

"And about the space of one hour after, another confidently affirmed, saying, Of a truth this fellow also was with Him." Luke 22: 59.

"Now when the first day of the week." Luke 24: 1.

Here, again, we have to remark, that this last text, concerning our Lord's resurrection, is the only one in the Gospel of Luke in which our translators have rendered mia "first." Still we proceed:

"Other sheep I have, which are not of this fold; them also I must bring, and they shall hear my voice; and there shall be one fold, and one shepherd." John 10: 16.

"The first day of the week cometh Mary Magdalene early." John 20: 1.

"The same day at evening, being the first day of the week, when the doors were shut." John 20: 19.

The instances in which mia occurs in the Gospel of John are thus only three; and two of these, as relating to our Lord's resurrection, are, like those of the other gospels referring to this day, translated "first," or rather "first day," contrary to their own rendering usually given by the translators of this word. But there is no reason for believing that these cases should be translated "first," more than any other; nor is there any reason for believing that they would have been translated differently from the ordinary signification of the word, but for the view entertained concerning the day of Christ's resurrection, which our translators have thus lent their aid to support. [*] It may not be uninteresting here to notice, that although, in some of the writings of the Fathers, the resurrection of Christ was, among other reasons, assigned for the observance of the first day of the week, yet so late as the 7th century we find that the Armenians taught, and are classed by Romish writers as heretics because they taught, "that Christ rose from the dead on the Sabbath day;" whereas," says the Popish author from whom I quote, "the Scripture tells us plainly that He arose the third day." [Ross' View of All Religions, Sect. VIII, p. 219, 2d edition, 1655. The Scriptures do testify that He did rise upon the third day, but is this a proof that it was on the first day of the week?

IT IS NOT ALWAYS NIGHT.

It is not always night! Though darkness reign
In gloomy silence o'er the slumbering earth,
The hastening dawn will bring the light again,
And call the glories of the day to birth.
The sun withdraws awhile his blessed light,
To shine again—it is not always night.

The voices of the storm may fill the sky,
And tempests sweep the earth with angry wing,
But the fierce winds in gentle murmurings die,
And freshened beauty to the world they bring:
The after calm is sweeter and more bright;
Though storms arise, it is not always night.

The night of Nature, and the night of Storm,
Are emblems both of shadows on the heart,
Which fall and chill its currents quick and warm,
And bid the light of peace and joy depart:
A thousand shapes hath Sorrow to affright
The soul of man, and shroud his hopes in night.

Yet, when the darkest, saddest hour is come,
And grim Despair would seize his shrinking heart,
The dawn of Hope breaks on the heavy gloom,
And one by one the shadows will depart:
As storm and darkness yield to calm and light,
So with the heart—it is not always night.

THE DEATH OF SALADIN.

BY REV. J. S. C. ABBOTT.

In the middle of the eleventh century there arose a Mohammedan prince in Egypt, by the name of Saladin. Ascending the throne of the ancient Pharoahs, and guiding the Moslem armies, he rolled back the tide of European invasion with which the Crusaders were inundating the Holy Land. His legislative genius constituted him the glory of his own country, while his military exploits inspired Christendom with the terror of his name. The wealth of the Orient was in his lap, the fate of millions hung upon his lips, and one half of the world was at his disposal.

At last, death, the common conqueror of us all, came to smite the crown from the brow, and to dash the sceptre from the hand of this mighty monarch. As he lay upon his dying bed, looking back upon the visions of earthly glory, fast flitting away, and looking forward into the impenetrable obscurity of the future, his soul was overwhelmed with those emotions which must, under such circumstances, agitate the bosom of every thinking being. For a long time, his unbroken silence indicated the deep absorption of his thoughts by the new subjects which now engrossed his spirit. At last, rousing himself from his revery, with that firm voice which had ever commanded obedience, he said,—

'Prepare and bring to me my winding-sheet.'

It was immediately done as commanded, and the winding-sheet was unfolded before him. The dying Sultan gazed upon it silently, and then added,

'Bring here the banner round which my chosen guards have rallied in so many victories.'

The banner was immediately presented at the royal couch, and all in silence awaited the further directions of the monarch. He paused for a moment, and then said,

'Remove those silken folds, and attach to the staff, in their stead, this winding sheet.'

It was done with the promptitude with which the directions of the Sultan ever were obeyed. The dimmed eye of the dying monarch gazed upon the mournful emblem of mortality, as it hung from the staff, around which he had so often rallied his legions on fields of blood, and said,

'Let the crier, accompanied by the musicians in a funeral dirge, pass through all the streets of Damascus, and at every corner wave this banner, and proclaim—This is all that remains to the mighty Saladin!'

There was then seen such a procession as the imperial city had never before witnessed. Gathered in front of the portals of the palace, were the musicians, the crier, with the strange banner, doing homage to this memorial of death. Silence pervaded the thronged city, as the wailing of the dirge floated mournfully through its long streets. The crowds in silent awe gathered at the corners. Suddenly the dirge dies away, and all is still. The hearts of the multitude almost ceased to beat as the cold, white sheet, soon to enshroud their beloved monarch's limbs, is waved before them. Not a sound disturbs the silent city, as the clear voice of the crier exclaims, 'This is all that remains to the mighty Saladin!' Again the soul-moving strains of the requiem vibrate through the air, and the procession moves along its melancholy way. Not a sound of mirth was heard as that day's sun went down, and tears started unbidden into eyes unused to weep. As the stars came out in the sky, the spirit of the monarch took its flight to the bar of judgment, and the winding-sheet enshrouded his limbs, still in death. Seven hundred years have since that hour rolled away, and what now remains to the mighty monarch of the East? Not even a handful of dust can tell us where was his sepulchre.

Are you young, are you rich, are you powerful? How soon will you point to your winding-sheet, and say—This is all that now remains to me! Are you bereaved, world-weary, broken-hearted? How soon may you be able to say—This winding-sheet is all that remains to me of every conflict, and of every sorrow!

THE JEWS IN FRANCE.

Though the Jews of France resemble their countrymen in the spirit of unbelief which, unhappily, prevails among them, they are still, for the most part, separated from the rest of the nation by their character, manners, and habits. Some Israelites have, it is true, entered the liberal professions, or are engaged in industrial pursuits, and have thus become blended wtih the people at large. But these are a small minority. The great mass of the Jews retain their ancient customs; for it is easier to renounce religious convictions than usages which have been handed down through a long series of generations.

Very few among them give themselves to agricultural operations, even in those provinces where, as in Alsace, they form distinct villages. The children of Abraham, in modern times, appear to entertain an antipathy to agriculture. They forget that their ancestors patiently tilled the plains of Palestine. The cause of this repugnance to the cultivators of the soil is probably the long persecutions they have endured. A farmer is necessarily attached to the soil; he cannot quit his calling and residence, and carry away his property in a day. What inducement, then, existed for the Jews to become husbandmen, when they were never certain of remaining long enough in one place to gather the harvest, which they might sow, or the fruit of the trees which they might plant?

The same reason serves to explain why so few Jews are devoted to manufactures. A large manufacturer is, like a farmer, fixed to a certain spot; he requires a large floating capital, which cannot be immediately concentrated or withdrawn from his business. If the proprietor of a large factory is driven into exile, his business is almost ruined, and he has no means of averting the loss of his property.

The Jews, suffering from the laws of former times, are generally, therefore, neither agriculturists nor manufacturers. In the lower classes of society, they pursue a contemptible traffic in trinkets, old clothes, and similar articles. You may meet, in the streets of our large towns, certain men, of a cunning and suspicious physiognomy, in slovenly attire, obsequious and cringing in their address, who request you to barter with them for some trifling commodity, or offer to sell you a spy-glass, spectacles, fans, drugs, and a host of gewgaws, which, although very splendid in appearance, have no real value. These men are Jews. They lie without the slightest scruple, cheat on system, and congratulate themselves when they have duped a Christian, not only because they have thereby gained some money, but because they seem to have taken revenge on one of the descendants of their spoliators. I believe that among these merchants of low life, there are some very honest and upright men. I should do violence to my own feelings were I to level the charge of dishonesty against the whole of the Jews; but the plain facts to which I have here adverted are beyond contradiction.

Among the more respectable classes of this people, it is still money which is the engrossing pursuit. They are stock-brokers, bankers, and money-lenders, speculators on Change, occasionally usurers, and some of them have acquired immense fortunes. It is obvious why they have displayed this preference for money affairs. Gold is easily convertible into bills of exchange, and these may be carried in a pocket-book. Historians relate that bills of exchange were invented by the Jews in the middle ages. They were already accustomed to lend money at a high rate of interest; they exacted as much as possible from the nobles, who fully retaliated this conduct on other occasions; and when they were about to quit a country, they endeavored to carry with them their entire fortunes. In the present day, their position is much more secure; and they adhere to their old occupations, because they find them extremely lucrative; and were the wealth of all the French Jews, including M. de Rothschild, brought into view, it would be found that they own a very considerable portion of the personal property possessed in France.

It is probable that the habits of this race will gradually become modified, under the twofold influence of their participation of political rights, and a more liberal system of education. This influence, however, will operate slowly, and for some ages to come a Jew will be a Jew still.

VANITY OF WEALTH.—Who would not be covetous, and with reason, if health could be purchased with gold? Who would not be ambitious, if it were at the command of power, or restored by honor? But, alas, a white staff will not help gouty feet to walk better than a common cane; nor a blue ribbon bind up a wound so well as a fillet; the glitter of gold or of diamonds will but hurt sore eyes instead of curing them; and an aching head will be no more eased by wearing a crown than a common nightcap. ### THE THIEF DETECTED.

'Be sure your sins will find you out,' is a maxim true as facts can make it. We give a remarkable instance of it, which came to us well authenticated.

Somewhere in Maine, the precise whereabouts we cannot specify, lives a merchant, whose store is situated near a wharf, on the bank of a river. It happened, some years ago, that he had a large stock of pork ready barrelled in his cellar.

Going into the cellar one morning, he discovered the door leading to the wharf to be open, and the key to be in the lock. Suspecting something was wrong, he examined the contents of the cellar, and found that one barrel of pork was missing.

Not knowing on whom to fix the charge, he concluded to say nothing about it, but to wait the development of time.

Several months elapsed, and he gained no clue to the thief; when, one morning, a man, who lived a few miles down the river, entered his store. The merchant remarked some considerable uneasiness of manner in him, but knowing him to be a man of property and reputed integrity, he thought it could be occasioned by nothing but some petty trouble that afflicted him.

The man lingered around for several hours, as if he wanted something; and at length, when there were no persons present but the merchant and himself, he said, 'Mr. B——, did you ever discover who stole that barrel of pork you lost a few months ago?'

'Yes, sir; you did,' was the prompt reply of the merchant.

'Me, sir! How do you know that?' replied the man, covered with confusion.

'Why, sir, no one but you and I know anything about the matter. I have never mentioned it, and had you not stolen it, you could not have known anything about it.'

Confounded, the thief made no reply. The merchant stepped up to his desk, drew out an old account of some fifty dollars, and adding to it the price of the pork, he told him to pay that bill, or he would expose him. The bill was paid, and the guilty man went home full of shame and chagrin. We conclude as we began, by saying to the reader, as the best moral to our story, 'Be sure your sins will find you out.' ### ALMOST BURIED ALIVE.

It is difficult to conceive of a situation more trying and alarming, or more calculated to fill the mind with dread and horror, than the idea of being buried alive. The late eminent and most worthy Doddridge was once very near incurring that dreadful fate of being buried alive; and what made it worse, with a perfect consciousness of all that was passing.

He was supposed to be dead, having fallen into a state exactly resembling death, so far as the body is concerned. His pulse and respiration ceased, his limbs became rigid, his features assumed that sharp outline characteristic of death, and he remained in this condition until all the family, physicians, and friends, (all but one,) supposed his spirit had passed. That one was Mrs. Doddridge; her love refused to despair, and she continued to apply remedy after remedy to restore animation; finally she poured a spoonful of brandy down his throat, and the powerful stimulus almost immediately dissolved the trance, and restored Mr. Doddridge to the command of his limbs, and to many years of distinguished usefulness. But for it, he would in all probability have been buried alive, as the weather was warm, and he already shrouded for his last abode.

He used to relate, with thrilling effect, his sensations during the time of his supposed death. He could not move a little finger to give notice of his being alive, but his sense of hearing remained perfect, and his mind collected. He heard the fact of his being dead announced, and the outburst of grief that ensued, the directions for shrouding him, and the usual preparations of the chamber of death. Desperate, but vain as desperate, were his efforts to give some token of life—not a muscle could he move. Even despair, and the immediate presence of a fate so appalling, could not stimulate his body to perform the slightest of its functions. At last he heard Mrs. Doddridge call for the brandy, with a delight and rapture of love for her which the horrors of his situation may easily explain. He felt that he was saved, and he was saved.

DAVID BRAINERD'S MANNER OF PRAYER.

His manner of prayer was becoming a worm of the dust, and a disciple of Christ, addressing an infinitely great and holy God and Father of mercies. Not with florid expressions, or a stupid eloquence; not with any intemperate vehemence, or indecent boldness; at the greatest distance from any appearance of ostentation, and from everything that might appear as though he wished to recommend himself to those around him, or set himself off to their acceptance—free from vain repetitions, without impertinent excursions, or needless multiplication of words. He expressed himself with the strictest propriety, with weight and pungency, and yet what his lips uttered appeared to flow from the fullness of his heart, deeply impressed with a great and solemn sense of our necessities, unworthiness, and dependence, and of God's infinite greatness, excellency, and sufficiency, rather than merely from a warm and fruitful brain.

In his prayers he insisted much on the prosperity of Zion, the advancement of Christ's kingdom in the world, and the propagation of of the gospel among the Indians; and he generally made it one petition in his prayer, that we might not outlive our usefulness.'

"DO ALL TO THE GLORY OF GOD."

Many good people seem to think, that the ministry is the principal field in which all things can be done for the glory of God. Hence they are very strict in their scrutiny of ministerial character, and very liberal in their judgment of those who have never assumed that character. Now it is hardly necessary to say, that the notion which they entertain of the superior advantages and obligations of the ministry, is alike unscriptural and injurious. It is unscriptural, because in direct opposition to the general apostolic injunction, "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." It is injurious, because it leads many persons to abandon stations for which they are qualified, and in which they might be useful, to seek stations for which they are not qualified, and in which they cannot reasonably expect to be useful. In the Church of Christ may be found a great variety of gifts, and for each there are appropriate duties. But what a state of things would be produced by a general scramble, on the part of persons possessing various gifts, for one station, as though that were the only station in which they could glorify God and serve their fellow men! Every one can see, that such a procedure would be most disastrous in its consequences. And yet it would be but the natural result of carrying out the notion to which we have alluded. Let those who would see the Church, as a whole, become what it ought to be, "the light of the world, and the salt of the earth," guard against such a notion. There is room for every variety of talent, and all may be used in strict accordance with the injunction of the Apostle, to "do all things to the glory of God." The husbandman on his farm, the mechanic in his shop, or the merchant in his counting-room, may be the servant of God, wielding all his powers with direct reference to God's glory and the advancement of His cause. Not until this doctrine is generally believed—not until all the members of Christ's visible body come to feel that whatever they possess, whether in the form of character, reputation, practical wisdom, or wealth, belong to their Saviour—will the full power and glory of the Church be witnessed.

—But we began this article for the purpose of introducing to our readers what we regard as a happy illustration of the text, "Do all to the glory of God." Nathaniel R. Cobb was educated in Boston for a merchant. Having been brought in early life to a knowledge of the plan of salvation, and not regarding it as his duty to enter the ministry, he determined to devote his mercantile life to the advancement of Christ's cause. Though called from the world at the early age of 36 years, he lived long enough to show what may be done by one acting upon such a determination. The following sketch of his life, from the American Baptist Magazine, is the best we have seen. Read, ponder, and imitate.

"Mr. Cobb resolved, at the commencement of his religious life, that he would serve the Saviour with all his power, in that sphere which seemed to be particularly assigned to him. He had not an opportunity to acquire extensive learning, and he could not serve the church, to any considerable extent, by his voice or by his pen. But God endowed him with very unusual talents for business. He had great activity, acute penetration into the characters of men and into the signs of the times, rapid decision, and unconquerable perseverance. He displayed in the counting-room some of the mental qualities which made Napoleon the irresistible victor on a hundred battle-fields. As a natural consequence, Mr. Cobb accumulated property with great rapidity; and if he had chosen to devote himself to the narrow work of amassing wealth, he might perhaps, if he had lived, have become a rival of Girard. But he justly regarded his talent for business, as an instrument, which he ought to employ for the glory of his Saviour. He felt it to be his duty to use it in earning money for the cause of God, on precisely the same principle, that it is the duty of the minister to devote his talents for preaching to the service of the Lord Jesus. He accordingly, in Nov. 1821, drew up and subscribed the following very remarkable document:—

"'By the grace of God, I will never be worth more than $50,000.

"'By the grace of God, I will give one-fourth of the profits of my business to charitable and religious uses.

"'If I am ever worth $20,000, I will give one-half of my nett profits;—and if I am ever worth $30,000, I will give three-fourths;—and the whole, after $50,000. So help me God, or give to a more faithful steward and set me aside.

"'Nov., 1821. N. R. Cobb.'

"To this covenant, he adhered with conscientious fidelity. He distributed the profits of his business, with an increasing ratio, from year to year, till he reached the point which he had fixed as the limit of his property, and then he gave to the cause of God all the money which he earned. At one time, finding that his property had increased beyond $50,000, he at once devoted the surplus, $7,000, as a foundation for a Professorship in the Newton Theological Institution, to which, we may add, he gave on various occasions during his life, at least twice that sum. So scrupulous was he in his adherance to the covenant which he had made, that, when peculiar circumstances required him to retain in his possession more than $50,000, he consulted judicious friends, whether he might do so consistently with the spirit of his pledge, provided that he always held the surplus as really belonging to the cause of God. Here is the secret of that wonderful liberality, which cheered so many hearts, and gave vigor to so many institutions and plans of benevolence. It sprung from steady religious principles. It was a fruit of the Holy Spirit. He always felt that God had bestowed on him a rich blessing, in enabling him thus to serve his cause. On his death-bed, he said to a friend, in allusion to the resolutions quoted above, 'By the grace of God,—nothing else,—by the grace of God, I have been enabled, under the influence of those resolutions, to give away more than $40,000. How good the Lord has been to me.'"

THE WAY TO GET RID OF FREE NEGROES.

The Governor of Virginia, in his recent message to the Legislature, repeats and urges his recommendation of last year in regard to removing the free colored people from that State. Perhaps he has some way of justifying to himself this crusade against a portion of the freemen of the State over which he presides; but we think he will find it difficult to justify it before enlightened and liberal men. There are, we believe, some fifty thousand colored people in Virginia. Only think of a Governor—whose official station ought to make him the friend and protector of the whole people—setting himself at work to drive fifty thousand of his subjects from the land of their birth, thus breaking up all their cherished associations, and sundering their tenderest ties. Yet such a proceeding is no doubt necessary to ensure the permanency of the system of slavery. What an idea does this give of the nature of that system! Were it not that the enterprise of colonizing free blacks in Africa—an enterprise which meets with favor among slaveholders because it gives a greater security for their slave property—is sanctioned by influential and reputedly pious men, the proposition of Gov. Smith would be universally execrated. The following extract from his message will give some idea of the plan:—

"Of the right to consummate this measure, I entertain no doubt. I attempted to make that plain in my last message. The details of the plan are few and simple, and can be easily executed. Nor is there any difficulty in finding places to which to send them. Liberia, the French and English Islands, and some of the free States, especially New York and Massachusetts, are all eager, if I am to believe the evidences before me, to receive them. The British, I have no doubt, from information in my possession, would pay all the expense of those sent to them. And Massachusetts, a few years ago, in an elaborate exposition to the American people, admitted, and undertook to convince others, that the free negro is an American citizen, and entitled to go and come at will. With this acknowledged right, he could there find a home, and not a vessel would sail from our shores for that ancient and prosperous commonwealth, but would be happy to take, at a cheap rate, from 50 to 100 passengers. Then where is the difficulty? In ten years, at an expense of $20,000 a year, our State may be freed from the curse of all free negro population. Profoundly convinced of the wisdom and humanity of this measure, and its all-pervading importance to our beloved commonwealth, I earnestly recommend it to the General Assembly."

LETTERS FROM ILLINOIS—NO. 3.

Pleasant Hill, near Farmington, Ill.,
12th of 12th mo., 1848.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Having given your readers an outline of the situation of the Sabbath-keepers in Illinois, it is due to the denomination at large, and the requests of many friends in particular, to give them a just account of the country and its prospects. We hope the West will yet afford a fair field for the discussion of our views of God's holy law, and its perpetuity under the gospel dispensation; but, as a preparatory movement, one of our first objects is to assist our migrating brethren and their families in gathering into concentrated societies, so as to form efficient churches in some of the most central and promising portions of the rising States of our western country. I regard it as an important part of my duty, therefore, to collect as much information as I can respecting the opportunities and facilities for promoting such settlements; and shall avail myself, from time to time, of all the means in my reach to acquire the same from the most reliable sources and my own observation, the result of which I propose to give you. It is not unlikely, that in doing this I may write some things which others have written a hundred times before; but, as I write specially for our own people, and the objects above specified, I intend to write irrespective of those considerations, and give all, and no more, accounts of things than such as I suppose will subserve the objects of the mission.

The history of our denomination for some ages past, shows that many of our people have often been crowded into by-places and forbidding circumstances, by the operation of arbitrary State laws, and the unjust prejudices of the observers of the first day. Deprived of the usual opportunities for social improvement enjoyed by the bulk of the religious world, it were no wonder, that so situated they sometimes entertained contracted views of men and things, and contracted habits, unfavorable to the most successful propagation of their views of divine truth. But it is illogical, and unjust, to attribute these things to their observance of the Sabbath of Jehovah; as though he that was the most strenuous observer of the holy laws of the Maker of heaven and earth must of necessity be the most unenlightened and narrow-minded of men; while the fact is, that the men whom of old God most delighted to honor, were the men who the most delighted in rendering this homage to the Lord, like David, Moses, and Abraham. There is still a prevailing disposition, in many of the older States, to KEEP them crowded into such by-places, that they shall have little or no opportunity to expand, and to diffuse their sentiments. There are men who come to the West bringing the same prepossessions and prejudices with them; but the prevailing turn of the rising democracies of the West is so much in favor of the greatest extent of constitutional liberty, that at present it is impossible for such persons to carry out their prepossessions; and it only remains for a sufficient number of intelligent and pious Sabbath-keepers to associate together, so as to form an effective society, maintaining their own conscientious observances and customs, and they will have their full share of sympathy and support from the surrounding population, and ample protection from the laws of the State. The advantages of a new country are as available to us as they are to any other denomination, provided we act with the same wisdom and energy. They usually contrive to settle in sufficiently connected neighborhoods to associate in the maintainance of religious meetings after their own order and observances, and others soon unite with them, until they grow up into efficient societies or churches, who maintain their own social institutions, and thus receive the support of the community around them, and so find way to other families, who, as they receive their views in the love of them, become members with them. The same course is as open to us as to them; and we think there is no field in the West which affords a better opportunity for this policy to be adopted, than the State of Illinois. Let the reader take his map of the Western States, and he will see that this State lies in a central situation to a perfect circle of the great States, that are more rapidly filling up with an enterprising and industrious population, than any other similar extent of territory in the United States. The two counties of Peoria and Fulton occupy as central a position to the State itself as any that can be found; and, as we purpose to show, are unrivaled for their commercial facilities, and the agricultural and mineral resources of their soil.

Illini, in the language of the aboriginal inhabitants of this very district, signifies, "a perfect and accomplished man," and was apparently associated with their pride of country as of superior fertility and beauty; and those who have once seen the beautiful prairies, rolling, swelling, and undulating, from grove to grove, may easily sympathize with the poor Indian, who, in his natural freedom, prided himself on belonging to a tribe that possessed so rich and beautiful a domain. Its river, too; I have seen none that I admire more. It is not so majestic as the Mississippi, nor so large, or serpentine, or long, as the Ohio; but for the purity of its waters, the softness and primeval beauty of its scenery, it excels all the western waters that I have seen. And when I look upon its location, the resources of its border soil, and the commercial importance of its canal, connecting with the great lakes of the North-west, and its own termination in the bosom of the great Mississippi, I feel persuaded that there is no river of its magnitude that is destined to bear upon its surface a greater amount of agricultural commerce, or that will sooner or more amply enrich those that will improve the advantages it offers. From its mouth to Peru, a distance of 197 miles, it is navigable for steamboats of very good capacity. From Peru to Chicago, it has a tow-boat canal 100 miles long, which is now doing a profitable business. Its waters are clear and beautiful, and its bottom and shores are lined with a bright coarse pebbly gravel, with here and there a sand-bar. As to its being choked up with growing weeds, as some have represented, I could not see a single standing weed in it, from its mouth to Chilicothe, 156 miles, which is as far as I have been up it. Others have assured me, that it has the same characteristic to Peru, where the canal comes in. The only occasion for such a remark, I believe, is found in the circumstance of its periodical floods having formed a number of large lagoons in the lower part of its course, which, though united during its flood, lie in detached sleuces or ponds at low water; and these are the chief causes of the miasma which has sometimes been represented as so pestilential. Of course they are of a very limited local influence. I counted twenty-five little towns, or places for landing goods, scattered along both shores. Several of them are already places of considerable commercial importance; others are destined to rise as the population increases and multiply its agricultural productions. There is yet room for others to begin where nothing of the kind is now attempted. Peoria City, 137 miles from its mouth, on the west side of the river, is the principal place. It is beautifully situated, on a small prairie about three-quarters of a mile wide, and nearly two miles long, upon the river. It rises from the water twenty feet to the first street, and then gradually ascends nearly a quarter of a mile, where it forms a beautiful level plat, extending half a mile farther to the bluffs, which rise abruptly about seventy or eighty feet. The sides and summits of this bluff are shaded with white-oaks, and there are a number of very good houses built on the most commanding eminences, which overlook the city and the river, forming as picturesque scenery as any gentleman can possibly desire. A few miles farther to the north-west, the bluffs rise above all the forest trees in the vale below, and afford a view of the river for 20 miles, to Chilicothe, and beyond. Nothing can surpass the beauty of this scene, where the gallant steamer is gaily gliding along the silvery river, while nature and art, intermingling towns and forests, farms and prairies, hill and dale, give the visiter a panoramic view of scenery which is rarely equaled. This view stretches all along what is called the Lake of Peoria; but which is no lake at all, any more than the Tappan Sea, in the Hudson River, is a sea. It is a mere expansion of the breadth of the river. Peoria is situated at the foot of this broad expanse of the river. At the lower extremity, where the river contracts to less than its natural width, the Peorians have this year completed a very substantial bridge, seven hundred feet long, with a draw for boats to pass. The abutments rise twenty feet above low water, and thus form a level with the level before mentioned. A little higher up, in the expanse before mentioned, the water is 3,000 feet wide; at flood water, it spreads out on the other side to the distance of 10,000 feet, and is from twenty-five to thirty feet deep in the channel. The City now contains 5,500 inhabitants. Some estimate may be made of the commerce of the place, and the agricultural prospects of the country, by the following facts: One establishment slaughtered in one season 1,108 head of cattle, averaging 617 lbs. per head; 4,230 hogs, and bought ready slaughtered 1,680; packed 2,600 bbls. of navy beef, 2,400 bbls. of navy pork, 325 bbls. beef hams, 22 bbls. of beef tongues, and 40 bbls. of rump pork. The yield of lard from the hogs was 1,164 bbls.; the yield of tallow, 61,400 lbs.; 27 bbls. of neats foot oil; 123 bbls. of steam grease; 92,100 lbs. of hides; the average weight of the hides was 83 lbs. each. There are two steam mills, which ground last year 147,445 bushels of wheat, or 29,500 bbls. of flour. There are similar establishments doing a like business in Lewiston, Canton, and Farmington. The navigation of the river opened during the first month of the present year, 1848, and up to the time I was last in Peoria, the 22d of 11th month, there had been 1,127 steamboat arrivals, and 485 canal-boat arrivals, since the opening of the canal. If it were not for taking up too much space, I could give other items on the same subject equally flattering to the character of the country and the commerce of the river. It is estimated that not more than one-third of the land is as yet under tillage. What then must be the products of the country, and the commerce of the river, in ten years from this time? The trade of the river is principally with St. Louis and Chicago. The exports of St. Louis are now estimated at $50,000,000 per annum! How soon has this western wilderness become a fruitful field? May the cause of truth and righteousness prosper as prospers the wealth and commerce of the people. Samuel Davison.

SUNDAY LEGISLATION.

Religious liberty has long been considered a matter of great importance by intelligent Christian men. The rightful claim of all men to this liberty, was asserted by our Lord, when he said, 'Render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's, and to God the things that are God's.' This direction implied a distinction between civil and ecclesiastical matters,—that the Governments of this world have nothing to do with the affairs of Christ's Spiritual Kingdom. Said he, 'My kingdom is not of this world.' The true church has never asked any favors of Kings or Emperors, Governors or Legislators, but to be left alone.

A union of Church and State, to any extent, is an unnatural and unholy amalgamation. Other nations, and past ages, have proved that the curse of God is upon it. The Father of our Republic, familiar with the fruits of such unholy union, early engrafted on the Federal Constitution an article prohibiting Congress from making any law tending to the 'establishment of religion,' or hindering 'the free exercise thereof.' The several States of the Confederacy, in forming their Constitutions, took like precautions to avoid an ecclesiastical hierarchy. But nothwithstanding these constitutional prohibitions, nearly every State in the Union has enacted laws requiring the universal observance of some of the dogmas of the more popular of the Christian sects.

The starting point in religious legislation in this country has been, by general consent, the 'establishment' of Sunday as the Christian Sabbath, and the demand that all should hallow it as such by abstinence from labor. It is true, that owing to occasional expressions of the public mind in regard to these laws, they have most of the time since their enactment been but a dead letter upon the statute book; yet, unrepealed, they constitute a most fearful weapon, always at hand, for the bigot or fanatic to wield to the injury of dissenters, whenever his prejudices or his passions may dictate. Instances of this kind have not been wanting within a year or two past.

That the observance of a Sabbath, Fast, Thanksgiving, or Christmas-day, whether of a yearly, monthly, or weekly recurrence, is strictly a religious matter, is so evident, that it will not be denied by any intelligent man. Indeed, it is a self-evident axiom, that the setting apart of a specified day or portion of time to religious duties is a religious regulation. And power to establish or enforce a religious regulation, is explicitly disavowed by the Federal Constitution, and the several State Constitutions. If our State Legislature have the right to appoint and enforce the observance of a weekly Sabbath, they have equal right to enforce the observance of a Fast, Thanksgiving, or Christmas-day, or of any or all the holy-days of the English or Romish Church. If they have a right to require the observance of the first day of the week, they have equal right to require the observance of the seventh day, or fourth day. And if they have the right to require the observance of any day, they have of course the right to determine how it shall be observed. If they may legislate on religion in the least, who shall determine the stopping point? Let us beware; a precedent for religious legislation is being established, which, if unchecked, may be used hereafter to justify an established church, tithing, and their concomitants.

But it is objected, that exceptions are made in favor of those who religiously observe some other one day in seven. True, in some States this is the case; but the same principle is involved in the one case as in the other; for, in both cases, an external religious observance of one day in seven, by abstinence from labor acknowledged to be necessary and right on other days, is required. Admitting the popular error, that this is a Christian country, and, therefore, the religious liberty guaranteed by the Constitution is only an equal liberty to all the Christian sects; still, the Government has transcended its constitutional prerogative; for the observers of the Mosaic weekly Sabbath, either on the first, seventh, or any other day of the week, do not embrace all the acknowledged Christians in our land. There are many undoubted Christians among us, who believe, as did Luther and Melancthon, Tindale and Bunyan, Paley and Roger Williams, that the Sabbath belonged exclusively to the Mosaic Dispensation, and consequently expired by limitation with that dispensation—who regard all time as alike holy, believing it to be offensive to God for men to do wrong on any day, and pleasing to him for them to perform works of justice, mercy, and usefulness, on any day—that although, under the Mosaic economy, time, place, and mode, were considered essential to acceptable worship, yet, under the spiritual reign of the Messiah, time, place, and form, are of no account with God; but that it is only essential that they who worship him should do it in spirit and in truth. But it is not my business at this time to prove this theory correct, neither to establish or disprove any religious theory, but to insist upon the right of all persons to worship God at such times, in such places and modes, as their own consciences shall dictate, being amenable to God only, save wherein their course may conflict with the civil rights of others.

Thank God, the clarion of reform has sounded, and the watchword is, Repeal! And let all lovers of equal religious rights respond, Repeal! The superstitions of ages are being broken; the shackles are falling from minds long chained in ignorance; and the light of truth is piercing where moral and mental darkness long have reigned. In vain do bigots, and those who would lord it over God's heritage, endeavour to smother free thought, and check investigation, by whispering 'heresy,' or crying 'infidelity,' forvinc bleuth is in !

> "Truth, crushed to earth, will rise again;
> The eternal years of God are her's;
> While Error, wounded, writhes in pain,
> And dies amid its worshipers."

RELIGIOUS FAIRS.

A Religious Fair was held at Pawcatuck, R. I., a few evenings since, at which a most serious accident occurred. A new Congregational church having been lately erected in that village, a fair was held for the purpose of helping defray the expense of finishing the house. Several hundred persons being assembled, the center beam of the building suddenly gave way, whereby most of the assembly were precipitated into the basement, and the stove, lamps, tables, with all the articles exposed for sale, followed. The groans of the wounded, the shrieks of the frightened, and the blazing of dry combustibles, ignited by the falling of the stove, rendered the scene one of alarming and heart-rending confusion, while broken bones, dislocated limbs, and bruised bodies, remain to tell the sorrowful tale.

—Without casting any reflection upon the fair above alluded to, permit me to say, I have serious doubts concerning the raising of funds for religious purposes by such means. The Fair that was held in the Temple in the time of Christ, is the only scriptural example I think we have. To be sure, the flooring of the house did not give way, and swallow them up; yet the buyers and sellers were hurried out of the sacred place rather unceremoniously, suffering severely from being scourged for engaging in such speculation, in such a place. By this I do not mean to say, that religious fairs of modern times are speculations, but I do wish to be understood, that they involve that which is incompatible with religion. Look at the articles generally offered for sale at such times. Ar they the comforts and substantials of life? Nay; on the contrary, they are mostly of a character to excite pride, vanity, and extravagance. At the fair mentioned, letters or billet-doux composed a prominent article of traffic. Had not the accident occurred, I have been told that a mock marriage was to have graced the occasion. As much as this world needs religion, and the worshipers need temples, I doubt the expediency of advancing the interests of either by such means. It was hoped, that when the church abandoned gambling in lotteries, she would keep herself unspotted in the future. But how much religion has gained by exchanging the name of lottery for the more euphonious name of a fair, remains to be shown. Upon strange times have we fallen. Extravagance is the order of the day. Competition to outvie each other in costly temples, is a growing sin of the church. And to effect this object, means of a very questionable character are often resorted to. When will the church learn, that it is not by might, nor by power, that the temple of Christianity is to be reared, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of Hosts. Omicron.

Hopkinton, R. I., Jan. 4th, 1849.

Religious Freedom.—At Paris, the 'Society for the Application of Christianity to Social Questions,' have published—An appeal to public opinion for the abolition of state payments to the clergy. It is to be deeply regretted that the Voluntary Principle had so few defenders in the National Assembly which has just passed the Constitution.

General Intelligence.

Doings at the Capital of New York.—The new Governor, Hamilton Fish, and Lieut. Governor, George W. Patterson, were inaugurated on the 1st of January. On the following day the Governor sent in his Message to the Senate and Assembly. It is a short, straightforward, business-like document, and meets with general approval. He expresses his hostility to the extension of slavery, and says that it is the unanimous decision of the people of this State, that under no circumstances will their assent be given to any action whereby the institution of slavery shall be introduced into any part of the territory of the United States, from which it is now excluded. The Senate and Assembly have given their sanction to this doctrine by passing a series of resolutions against slavery in the new territories and the slave-trade in the District of Columbia, and requesting their Senators and Representatives in Congress to act accordingly.

Independent Church in France.—Messrs. Monod, Gasparin, and others, who have withdrawn from the National Protestant Church in France, have taken the necessary steps for organizing an independent church. The plan is simply this: The reformed churches of France must constitute themselves; whoever declares that he adopts the Confession of Faith which they have published, will be a member of these churches. There will be in Paris a Consulting Commitee, composed of the Rev. Armand Delille and Rev. Frederic Monod, and M M. Agenor de Gasparin and de Mimont. The representatives of the churches will meet together in Paris, God permiting, in the month of May next, for the purpose of drawing up the constitution of the faithful Church. The projectors of this movement express the hope, that all faithful independent churches will unite with the new church forming in France, a church having the same Confession of Faith, and the same organization.

Melancholy Accident at Westerly, R. I.—We learn from the "Independent," that on Monday evening, Jan. 1, the ladies of the Congregational Society in Westerly held a fair, in aid of the new meeting-house now in progress. They met in the area of the house. About 8 o'clock the floor suddenly gave way, and about 200 persons were precipitated about twelve feet into the basement. Men, women, and children, with tables, chairs, confectionery, lamps, crockery, and fancy work, were all thrown into one promiscuous heap. Still, no lives were lost, and none are dangerously hurt. About twenty are badly hurt, with broken limbs, severe cuts, bruises, and burns, and many others partially hurt. Medical aid was immediately procured from towns adjoining, as well as W., and the wounded well cared for. Our correspondent says the sight at the moment was truly horrible, to see such a company, all enjoying the hilarity of the moment, and in an instant plunged into this fearful condition. The cries and groans, prayers and entreaties, were truly appalling!

Aboriginal Industry.—By the census of the Indian tribes, which is now being taken, it is shown that seven bands of Ottawas about Michilimackinack, numbering about 700 souls, who rely wholly upon agriculture for subsistence, have raised during the last year, 25,000 bushels of corn, and 40,000 bushels of potatoes. They also made during the last spring, 355,000 pounds, or over 149 tons, of maple sugar, which is worth in the Merrimack market, seven cents per pound, making $22,750 on sugar alone. Corn is worth at the same place, 50 cents, and potatoes 37 1-2 cents per bushel. This single example shows what the Indian tribes could do for themselves were they all to make a bold appeal to agriculture for a living, and abandon the chase.

A Great State.—Old Massachusetts, says an exchange, has ever taken the lead in what is great, good, useful, and profitable. She established the first school in the United States, the first academy, the first college. She set up the first press, printed the first book and the first newspaper. She planted the first apple tree, and caught the first whale. She coined the first money, and hoisted the first national flag. She made the first canal, and the first railroad. She invented the first mouse-trap and washing machine, and sent the first ship to discover islands and continents in the South Sea. She produced the first philosopher, and made the first pin. She fired the first gun in the Revolution, and gave John Bull his first beating, and put her hand first to the Declaration of Independence. She invented Yankee Doodle, and gave a name forever to the 'Universal Yankee Nation.' Truly, a great State is Massachusetts.

More Experiments.—A correspondent of the New York Commercial Advertiser recommends a plan for the gradual abolishment of slavery in the United States. It is, among other preliminary acts, that three hundred millions of dollars be appropriated out of the national treasury, to be paid by installments of fifteen million dollars per year, during twenty years, to the owners of the slaves emancipated during the year, to be apportioned in some proper mode to the relative value of the freed slaves.

Jews in Russia—A letter from St. Petersburg, of November 7th, which we find in one of our Paris papers, announces as follows:—'The Emperor has issued an order that sixty thousand acres of land, situated in the provinces of Ekatherinoslow, and of Taurus, shall be distributed to those Israelites whom the government has obliged to quit the western frontiers of Russia in Europe.'

Later from Europe.—The steamship Washington arrived at New York on the 8th, in 19 days from Southampton. She brings four days later advices from Europe, but nothing important. Louis Napoleon's majority is now said to be six millions over Cavaignac. The Pope is still at Gaeta.

LAST WEEK'S CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

January 2d.

In the Senate, Mr. Jefferson Davis, from the Committee on Military Affairs, in pursuance of instructions, reported a contract made between the house of Howland & Aspinwall and the New Granada Government, for a railroad across the Isthmus of Panama, which was ordered to be printed. A resolution was offered by Mr. J. W. Bradbury in favor of the appointment of a Select Committee to make inquiry into the expediency of organizing a Special Board of Commissioners to settle all claims against the United States Government. The resolution, after a brief consideration, was agreed to.

The House, on motion of Mr. Vinton, took up the bill for supplying deficiencies in last year's General Appropriation Bill, which were considered and several amendments offered to the same. Mr. Vinton, from the Committee of Ways and Means, reported the Navy bill; also Navy Pension and Revolutionary Pension bills, which were referred to the Committee of the Whole. The House then went into Committee of the Whole, and took up the bill establishing a Board of Commissioners to settle private claims against the Government.

January 3d.

In the Senate, the joint resolution, providing for the advance of three months' extra pay to certain officers and soldiers who served in the late war with Mexico, came up for consideration, and on motion was referred to the Committee on Military Affairs.

In the House, various petitions were presented and referred. Mr. Giddings, of Ohio, presented a petition for the Abolition of Slavery, from certain females. Mr. Thompson, of Miss., wished to debate its reception and reference, but it was finally laid over. Reports being in order, sundry bills were reported by various Committees, a portion of which were read and referred to a Committee of the Whole.

January 4th.

In the Senate, sundry petitions were presented to-day, among which was one by Mr. John A. Dix, of N. Y., with 94 signatures, praying for the reduction of postage. Mr. Cameron, of Pa., presented another, signed by a large number of persons, praying for a modification of the present Tariff. Several notices of bills were given, and among them was one by Mr. Dix, providing for improvements in the Harbor of New York. Mr. Downes, of La., from the Judiciary Committee, reported the House bill, providing for the punishment of persons guilty of False Swearing in certain cases.

In the House, the principal discussions related to the mileage of Electoral Messengers. A memorial was presented from several of them, praying for an increase of mileage. The House then took up the joint resolution from the Senate, increasing the pay of Messengers' mileage from 12 1-2 to 25 cents per mile. After considerable discussion, the resolution was passed by a vote of 113 to 64.

January 5th.

In the Senate, agreeable to previous notice, Mr. Dix asked and obtained leave to bring in a bill, which was read the first and second times, providing for the improvement of New York Harbor, and the removal of obstructions in Hurlgate. Bills were also reported in favor of granting a reservation of land to the State of Arkansas, and for a grant of land and right of way for a railroad in Missouri. A lengthy discussion arose upon a resolution, previously offered, calling on the President of the United States to communicate to the Senate any correspondence had with the Government at Spain for the purchase of the Island of Cuba. The resolution was laid on the table by a vote of 24 to 19.

In the House, the bill to establish a Board of Commissioners to settle private claims against the Government, was taken up, and discussed at length, but not acted upon.

January 6th.

The Senate was not in session.

The House agreed to terminate the debate, in Committee, on the bill for the establishment of a Board of Examiners of private claims against the United States, at half past one o'clock on the 8th January. The Pacheco slave case then came up. It seems that early in the progress of the Florida War upon the Seminoles, Major Dade hired of Pacheco, at $25 per month, his slave Lewis to guide through the country of the hostile savages the expedition which Major D. commanded. Lewis was a negro of remarkable abilities, spoke four languages fluently, and it would seem was a secret confederate and spy of the Indians at the time. When about half-way to his dertination, the expedition was suddenly attacked by the Indians and almost entirely destroyed, hardly a man escaping. The negro was no more heard of until near the close of the war, when he came in among a band of Seminoles who surrendered, finding longer resistance impossible. He was now claimed by his old master, but, Gen. Jesup resisted the claim, and decided that Lewis must go West with the discomfited savages—and so he did. Whereupon Pacheco claims payment for him by the Government. After a long debate, in which the recognition of property in human beings by the Constitution, was denied, the vote was taken, and the bill passed, 91 to 89. The correctness of the vote has since been denied, and the case will probably come up again on a vote to correct the records.

The N. Y. Express publishes a singular case of fatality. It seems that a few days since a draft was drawn by Mr. Dunbar S. Dyson of New Orleans, on a house in this City, and endorsed by Mr. Geo. B. Deiter. When the draft was presented for payment in Wall-st., it was found that both the drawer and endorser had become victims of the epidemic which is now raging so fearfully in New Orleans. Mr. Dyson was the brother of the late Robert Dyson of this City, whose sudden death on the cars at New Brunswick was noticed a few weeks since.

The Augusta (Me.) Age says that Honorable Ebenezer Knowlton, formerly Speaker of the House of Representatives, was ordained to the work of the gospel ministry and pastor of the F. W. Baptist church in South Montville, on the 17th ult.

AWFUL DISASTER.

The last steamer brought intelligence of a frightful loss of life, resulting from ignorance or carelessness, on board one of the steamers running between Ireland and England. It appears that about four o'clock on the evening of the first of December, the steamboat Londonderry left the harbor of Sligo. There were on board of her three cabin passengers, a number of sheep and oxen, and about 150 emigrants. The vessel was crossing over to Liverpool, whence the majority of the unfortunate passengers intended to proceed as emigrants to America. Toward nightfall a heavy gale came on, and at last blew with so much violence, that shortly after midnight, or rather toward one o'clock on Saturday morning, the decks were cleared of all except the seamen. The steerage passengers, perhaps 150 in number, were crammed into the narrow compass of the fore-cabin, a compartment little more than eighteen feet long, by eleven feet wide, and seven feet high. The space was capable only of accommodating about forty passengers, and here were nearly 150 of both sexes, huddled together indiscriminately, the old and the young, the robust and the sickly, the adult and the infant.

Meanwhile, the sea was running high in the channel, so that the waves repeatedly broke over the steamer. Then it was that, through the negligence of those who were responsible for the lives of the people on board, a measure of momentary convenience was adopted, which led to a catastrophe, the like of which has only occurred before in the notorious prison of Calcutta. The companion-way, the only aperture by which the fore-cabin received ventilation, was closed, and over the companion-way was nailed down a piece of tarpaulin! This was at about midnight between Friday and Saturday. The result proved to be only such as common sense would tell every one was inevitable. The dizziness and qualms of sea-sickness were very soon forgotten in the unendurable sensations of suffocation. Efforts were made to force a way out of the confinement; they were found to be unavailing. Shouts were raised to attract attention; they were drowned in the roaring noise of the storm.

And then, according to the description of the few survivors, ensued a spectacle such as sets the imaginations of even the most morbid at defiance. The steamer drove bravely through the tempest, while those who directed her remained wholly unconscious of the frightful conflict for life and death which was then raging in her very entrails. The tramping and beating sounds within the cabin were rendered inaudible by the throbbing of the pistons, and the shrieks and groans of the sufferers only died away with the gale toward morning. Not till then were the seamen aware of the tragedy which had been enacted under their feet.

Out of the one hundred and fifty passengers who had been driven down the companion-ladder a few hours before, seventy-two were found to have perished! Men and women and little children, husbands and wives, sons and mothers, were heaped about the floor of the cabin in disorder, some with their clothes torn from their backs in tatters, some with their hands and faces lacerated, some with their features trodden into a mummy by the iron-shod 'brogues' of their fellow-sufferers; here a father locked in the arms of his daughter; there a sister clinging to the corpse of her brother, their countenances black and distorted with the convulsions produced by suffocation.

The coroner's jury found Alexander Johnstone, captain, Richard Hughes, first mate, and Ninian Crawford, second mate, of the Londonderry, guilty of manslaughter, and have expressed in the strongest terms their abhorrence of the inhuman conduct of the other seamen on board, throughout this unhappy transaction.

SUMMARY.

The Missionary Society of the Methodist Church has now forty-nine missionaries employed in Oregon, Africa, and South America, and three hundred and fifty-eight laboring among the Germans, Indians, Swedes, and Norwegians, in the United States. The total number of church members under missionaries' charge is 31,699. There are seventy-two missionaries among the Germans, of whom six thousand have become church members.

The death of Elder Andrew Broaddus is announced in the last Richmond Herald. He was the oldest and most eloquent Baptist minister in Virginia, and was called the Robert Hall of America. With all the splendor of his powers, he united the most childlike simplicity and singular diffidence.

Forty-three monks, of the order of La Trap, direct from France, arrived at New Orleans a few days since, and proceeded directly to Bardstown, Ky., where they own fourteen hundred acres of land. There are six priests among them.

There is a small colored Baptist church in the village of Stonington, Conn. The church has been in existence some two years, during which period they have erected a small house of worship, which is yet in an unfinished state.

The Jury in the Kentucky Slave Case, in which several citizens of Marshal, Michigan, were defendants in a prosecution for rescuing fugitives from the hands of their owners or agents, which has just closed at Detroit, gave a verdict for the plaintiff of one thousand nine hundred dollars and costs.

The Rainbow, Canton ship, belonging to Messrs. Howland & Aspinwall, which is over due eight months at Valparaiso, is given up as lost by parties interested, and the insurance losses in some instances have been paid. One office has paid about $55,000 on her.

A new banking institution has commenced operations at Essex, Conn., called the 'Saybrook Bank.' Hon. Samuel Ingham is the President, and Edward U. Pratt the Cashier. The 'Manufacturer's Bank' has commenced operations at Birmingham.

A slip from Thompson's Bank Note Reporter announces the failure of the banks of Sandusky and Norwalk, Ohio.

The Governor of New Hampshire has appointed Thursday, April 5, as the day of fasting and prayer.

A dispatch from New Orleans, dated January 6, says that the cholera for a day or two past has been less destructive in its ravages, the number of deaths from cholera within the past 48 hours being only 77. The number of deaths from cholera and other causes during the same time was 131. Citizens generally are returning to their homes, and the late rains had subsided and given place to pleasant and wholesome weather.

A North Carolina paper says that the bill appropriating eighty-six thousand dollars to provide for the establishment of a hospital for the insane in this State, passed its third reading in the Senate on Thursday last, and is consequently a law. The place of its location is yet to be selected.

The Washington correspondent of the New York Express, under date of January 3d, says: The Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, this morning, delivered an elaborate and able report upon the Rhode Island Dorr Case, affirming the judgment of the Circuit Court of Rhode Island. The Court met the question in all its forms, and are unanimous in their judgment of condemnation of the Dorr rebellion.

Mrs. Mary Dickson, the Post-mistress of Lancaster, Penn., acknowledges through the letter-box the receipt of an anonymous letter, enclosing fifteen dollars in gold. The writer says—'It was unlawfully taken from you about ten years ago, for which I ask your forgiveness and also that of my God, in whose presence I expect soon to appear.' The receipt of the letter is acknowledged at the request of the writer.

We learn from the Fond du Lac (Wis.) Journal that during the night of the 12th ult. the Congregational, Baptist, and Methodist churches, the former court-house, the academy, town-hall, lyceum, &c. &c., in that village, were destroyed by fire. They were all, we should add, included in one and the same building, which was the village school-house.

The Collector at Barnstable, Mass., paid on Monday four thousand four hundred dollars to the officers and crews of cod-fishing vessels. This is said to be but a small portion of the sum claimed by the fishermen of the district, but the circulars from the Treasury Department are very rigid in their instructions, so that many went away disappointed.

Apples will not freeze until at a temperature of from five to ten degrees below the freezing point of water, and it is beneficial to keep them as cool as possible, even down to thirty degrees. Apples enclosed in a water-tight cask may be left in a cold loft or garret all winter without further care, and will be sound in the spring, and perfectly fresh.

An elegant silver pitcher and tray were presented to ex-Mayor Quincy at Boston, on Monday evening, by some of the members of the Massachusetts Temperance Society, and other citizens, in compliment for his deciding vote in the Board of Aldermen, against the license system.

The New York and New Haven Road is now doing a very large business. The regular time between the two cities is to be three hours. The distance by the road from New York to New Haven, according to the admeasurement of the Company, is 75 miles 98-100. The fare has been fixed at $1 50 from New York to New Haven—that is, two cents a mile, and any shorter distance at the same rate.

The total number of arrivals at New York from foreign ports for the year 1848 is 3060, of which 754 were British. The total number of passengers, 191,909. The number of arrivals in 1847 was 3,174, and passengers 166,110.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality it is not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house.

THE BOOK

For every Clergyman—For every School District—For every Educated Man.

WEBSTER'S QUARTO DICTIONARY, Unabridged. Price $6.—Published by G. and C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass., and for sale by Booksellers generally.

"Will not the enlightened and liberal furnish their clergymen with a copy, as an indispensable volume in their libraries?"—Rev. T. H. Gallaudet.

Extract from a Lecture addressed to a Teacher's Institute, by William Russel, Principal of the Merrimack [N. H.] School for Teachers, and formerly Editor of the American Journal of Education:

"The edition of Dr. Webster's Dictionary, revised by Professor Goodrich, I would earnestly recommend to the attention of all teachers who are desirous of becoming fully qualified to give instruction in the English Language. The copious information which that work embodies, on all topics connected with Etymology—the extreme exactness, as well as the number, extent, and fullness of the definitions which it furnishes to every important word, render it a mine of philological wealth to instructors. The volume is, in fact, the teacher's encyclopedia, as well as lexicon, for daily reference. Could a copy of it be provided, as the permanent property of every district school, the effect, as regards the improvement of instruction, would be deeply and extensively felt, in the increased skill of the teacher, and the higher attainments of his pupils, in the most important part of education—the acquisition of an adequate knowledge and proper use of our own language."

"It has come to be a necessity to every educated man."—Lord Brougham

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY

W. C. KENYON, A. M., } Principals.
IRA SAYLES, A. M., }

As isted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage.

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848-9 consists of three terms as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term; and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

EXPENSES.

THINGS THAT CHANGE.

BY MRS. HEMANS.

Know'st thou that seas are sweeping
Where cities once have been?
When the calm wave is sleeping
Their towers may yet be seen;
Far down below the glassy tide,
Man's dwellings where his voice hath died.

Know'st thou that flocks are feeding
Above the tombs of old,
Which kings, their armies leading,
Have lingered to behold?
A short, smooth greensward o'er them spread,
Is all that marks where heroes bled.

Know'st thou that now the token
Of temples once renowned,
Is but a pillar broken,
With grass and wall-flowers crowned?
And the lone serpent rears her young,
Where the triumphant lyre hath sung?

Well, well I know the story
Of ages passed away,
And the mournful wrecks that glory
Has left to dull decay.
But thou hast a tale to learn
More full of warnings sad and stern.

Thy pensive eye but ranges
O'er ruined fane and hall,
Oh! the deep SOUL has changes
More sorrowful than all.
Talk not, while these before thee strong,
Of silence in the place of song.

See scorn, where love has perished;
Distrust, where friendship grew;
Pride, where once nature cherished
All tender thoughts and true?
And shadows of oblivion thrown
O'er every trace of idols gone.

Weep not for tombs far scattered,
For temples prostrate laid;
In thine own heart lie shattered
The altars it had made.
Go, sound its depths in doubt and fear;
Heap up no more its treasures HERE.

MARRIAGE IN DIFFERENT NATIONS.

In Ceylon, one of the principal of the marriage ceremonies consists in tying together the clothing of the bridegroom and bride, to signify that they are bound together for life. This ceremony is performed in the presence of their friends, and with such festivities as the means of the parties will admit.

In Java, there are three kinds of marriages. The first and most common is, where the parties are of equal condition, or the bridegroom is the superior of the bride; the second is, when the wife's station is much higher than that of the husband; and the third is a kind of half-marriage, the offspring of which are not admitted to an equality with other children. This marriage is quite unceremonious, but the two other modes are celebrated with some display. The first wife is always the head of the family.

Girls in Java are married at so early an age, that a single woman of twenty-two is almost unheard of. A price is always paid by the bridegroom. The bridegroom, splendidly mounted, accompanied by his friends, with music, goes to salute his bride. She comes out and meets them with a low obeisance. They sit together on an elevated seat, and eat out of the same dish, after which they go to the mosque, and the nuptials are celebrated according to the Mohammedan ritual. Then ensues a wedding procession through the village, a grand feast, and at the end of five days, another procession, in which the bride is conducted to the residence of her husband. In some places, the spinning-wheel, loom, and kitchen utensils, are carried in the bridal procession. In others, the bride washes the bridegroom's feet, in token of subjection.

In Sumatra, the Battas have as many wives as they please, generally five or six, who all live in the same apartment with their common husband; but each has a separate fire-place. Husbands purchase their wives of their father-in-law, and gamble them away, or sell them, whenever they choose.

Among the Redjangs, another tribe, besides the purchase of wives, a man is sometimes adopted by the girl's father as a son-in-law, and both are subject to the parent; and there is another marriage, where both man and woman pay an equal price, and are on perfect equality. The ceremonies are very simple.

In Borneo, no man is allowed to solicit a damsel in marriage, until he has cut off the head of an enemy. When this condition is fulfilled, the lover makes presents to his mistress; if they are accepted, an entertainment is given by her parents, and on the ensuing day by his parents. After the feast, the bridegroom is conducted home to the house of the bride. At the door, a friend sprinkles him with the blood of a cock, and her with the blood of a hen; the parties then give each other their bloody hands, and from that time they live together. If a man loses his wife, he cannot marry a second until he cuts off the head of another enemy.

In Celebes, the husband receives no other dowry with his wife than the presents she obtains before the ceremony. As soon as the young couple are married, they are shut up in an apartment by themselves for three days; a servant brings them the necessary food, while their friends are entertained with great merriment by the bride's father. At the end of this time they are liberated, receive the congratulations of their friends, and are conducted home.

The marriage customs of the natives of New Holland, are rather more curious than agreeable. Before a girl is given to her husband, her two front teeth are knocked out. The lover then throws a kangaroo skin over her shoulder, spits in her face several times, marks her with painted stripes of different colors, orders her to march to his hut with his provision bag, and if she does not move fast enough to please him, he administers a few kicks by the way. These savages generally steal wives from the tribes with whom they are at enmity. As soon as they observe a girl without any protector, they rush upon her, stupify her with blows of a club, and drag her through the woods with the utmost violence. Her tribe retaliate merely by committing a similar outrage. There are no other wedding ceremonies among these savages.

The Moors marry at a very early age. Wives are always purchased; and the father of a girl cannot refuse an offer, unless there is some stain upon the young man's character. The bridal tent is adorned with a small white flag, and the bridegroom's brow is encircled with a fillet of the same color. The bride is conducted to the tent by her parents, where the lover presents her with garments and jewels, according to his wealth. A grand entertainment is given, and the young women dance all night to the sound of the instruments, while the spectators regulate their motions by clapping their hands. These dances are not very decorous.

The marriages among the negro tribes are conducted with but little ceremony, except an abundance of pastimes and dancing.

Among the Jereres, when the lover has secured the consent of relations, he summons his friends to assist him in carrying off his bride, who shuts herself up in a hut with her companions, where they maintain an obstinate siege before they conclude to surrender.

In Brambuk, the bride comes to the hut of her husband with a calabash of water, with which she washes his feet, and wipes them with her mantle.

In Congo, the negroes take their wives for a year on trial; if at the end of that time they are satisfied, the wedding is celebrated with a feast. The missionaries endeavored to abolish this custom, without success; the mothers declaring that they would not risk the happiness of their daughters by urging them to an indissoluble union with persons, with whose tempers and habits they were unacquainted.

In Abyssinia, there is no form of marriage ceremony. Parties live together as long as they choose, and these connections are dissolved and renewed as often as the parties may think proper.

African princes have an unpleasant way of furnishing dowries for their daughters. When the Sultan at Mandara married his daughter to an Arab Sheikh, 'the nuptials were celebrated by a great slave-hunt among the mountains, when, after a dreadful struggle, three thousand captives, by their tears and bondage, furnished out the materials of a magnificent marriage festival.'

In Dahomey, all the unmarried females, throughout the kingdom, are considered the property of the sovereign. Once a year they are all brought before him; he selects the most engaging for himself, and sells the others at high prices to his subjects. No choice is allowed the purchaser. He pays twenty thousand cowries, and receives such a wife as the king chooses to award him; being obliged to appear satisfied with the selection, whatever may be her aspect or condition. This monarch has three thousand wives; but the king of Ashantee has exactly three thousand three hundred and thirty-three, and the safety of his country is supposed to depend on his keeping up this mystical number. ## PERSIAN VIEW OF THE SLAVE TRADE.

We find in the London Anti-Slavery Reporter extracts from the papers on the Slave Trade recently laid before Parliament, among which is the correspondence between Col. Shiel, on behalf of the British Government, and Hajee Meerza Aghasei, on behalf of the Shah of Persia. It appears that the latter dignitary, who is said to rival even the "Royal Jewish voluptuary," in the number of his wives and female slaves, had virtually promised to issue a Firman prohibiting the traffic in slaves, provided it should be found consistent with the Mahommedan religion so to do, and the Ottoman Empire concurred in the measure. The first document copied by the Reporter is from the pen of the Hajee Meerza, the principal Minister of the Shah, by which it seems that the wily Mussulman made a matter of conscience of his refusal to comply with the request of the British agent:

"His Majesty's commands are," writes the Minister, "that the purchase and sale of negro men and women are sanctioned by the precepts of our resplendent faith, and we cannot, therefore, issue commands to the people of Persia that that which is lawful by the law shall be unlawful to them."

In consequence of this scruple of the devout Mussulman, Col. Shiel procured from several learned Moollahs and Doctors of Mahommedan Theology, at Teheran, decisions as to the lawfulness of slavery.

They generally agree that it is disgraceful, an abomination, but at the same time recommend its discontinuance.

With these answers from the highest ecclesiastical authority in Persia, Col. Shiel renewed his request to the Shah, at the same time laying before him the fact that the Turkish Government had agreed to the suppression of the traffic—thus removing both his religious and political scruples, as expressed in his former reply. The ingenuity of the Shah was evidently greatly taxed to evade the performance of his promise. After attempting to show that the English Government had encouaged slavery in other places, he again entrenches himself behind his religious obligations. Taking up the old plea, that the slaves are benefited and God glorified by their removal from a land of Paganism to one blessed with Gospel ordinances, the Shah thus clenches his refusal to keep his promise, and prohibit the trade in human beings:—

"The meaning of the auspicious handwriting of his Majesty," says Hajee Meerza, "is as follows:

"If, by prohibiting the importation of black slaves, I should be the means of preventing 5000 individuals from embracing the Mahommedan creed, according to our religion I commit a great sin, and our name will be of very bad repute."

It appears that the British Resident at Teheran, not satisfied with this conscientious excuse for the non-fulfillment of a solemn engagement on the part of the Shah, still continued to urge the matter, and to remind the devout equivocator of his promise. Hajee Meerza replies, showing that the Mahommedan doctors had found it expedient to conform their interpretations of Moslem texts to the necessities of the Royal diplomatists.

The British Government, through Lord Palmerston, under date of the 30th of the 3d month, 1848, had instructed its Resident at the Court of the Shah to continue to press the matter in the most earnest manner. The Resident has given the Shah notice, that all vessels in the Persian Gulf suspected of slave-trading will be examined, and the slaves found on board set at liberty, and that he will probably be called upon to pay the owners of these vessels for the loss thereby sustained. Whether this appeal to the pocket will have the effect to induce the Shah to give a new reading to the Koran, on the subject of slave-trading, remains to be seen.

A MILITARY HOSPITAL AFTER A BATTLE.

On the afternoon of the 29th of January, after the fight of Aliwal, the field hospital, with the wounded, was removed into Lodiana. I rode over to see a brother officer who had been seriously wounded, and I shall never forget the sad scene of human suffering which I there witnessed. Outside the hospital-tents were laid the bodies of those who had recently died; many of them in the contorted positions in which the rigid hand of death had placed them; others more resembling sleep than death, had calmly passed away, struck down in full vigor, and robust bodily health, when the human frame, it was natural to suppose, would have struggled more fiercely with its arch enemy; but the groans of the sufferers undergoing painful surgical operations were more grievous to the senses than the sight of those who needed no mortal aid. Pain, in all its degrees and hideous varieties, was forcibly portrayed on every square yard of earth which surrounded me; and, passing from sufferer to sufferer, I felt, or fancied I felt, each patient's eye following wistfully the movements of such fortunate visitants as were exempted from the service of the lancet or knife, and sometimes dwelling reproachfully on the useless spectator of their sufferings. I felt it was almost a sacrilege to remain in such a place without being useful; but the medical officers, and the hospital assistants, so zealously performed every minute detail for the relief of their patients, that sympathy was the only offering we could present to our stricken comrades. While raising the canvas door of a dark tent which I was entering, I stumbled, and nearly fell, over the leg of some one stretched across the entrance. When I turned to make an apology to the owner, I found it had none, but, on a pallet beside it, lay its former possessor, who had just been amputated; beyond him lay a dead artilleryman; and further on, among stumps of arms protruding from the pallets, lay my wounded brother officer, who appeared to suffer much more from the surrounding objects, than from his own personal injuries. But the attention bestowed on those wounded at Aliwal differed much from a preceding occasion, where the hospital-stores and conveniences had been so far outmarched that only two rushlights were to be procured to illuminate the hospital.

REAL FAME.

Scott had tasted at our house the Yarmouth bloaters, (then an article of less savoury notoriety than at present,) allowed their superiority to the Finnan haddies, and inquired where they might be procured. My mother, having undertaken the commission, applied to our fishmonger, Mr. B., of Billingsgate, a most worthy and matter-of fact Triton, whom no one could have suspected of an addiction to poetry and romance. Hearing that the half-hundred small fishes were to be sent as far as Sussex Place, he rather shook his head at the inconvenient distance. 'Rather out of our beat, ma'am; there are plenty of places where they can be got good.' 'I am sorry for that; for I am afraid Sir Walter Scott will be disappointed, having learned that yours are the best.' 'Sir Walter Scott, ma'am! God bless my soul; is Sir Walter in town? Tom, go and pick the very best half hundred you can find in that fresh lot from Yarmouth. Well, ma'am, and how is he looking? Why, if you had told me they were for him, I would have sent to Jerusalem or Johnny Groat's house. Now mind, Tom, that the boy starts directly—remember, 24 Sussex Place, and no mistake about it.' This circumstance being related to Scott, he cordially exclaimed—'Well, now, this is something like real, tangible fame. I like this more than all the minauderies of the old French Countesses who used to bother me at Paris with their extravagant compliments, and were only thinking of their own vanity all the while.'

TANNER'S SUMACH.—The Venetian sumach (Rhus corraria) so much used in tanneries, is imported in large quantities from Sicily, and from the South of France, and sells at $45 to $50 per ton. It is very distinct from all the American species in its growth and general appearance, with the exception of the Rhus copallinum, and it is superior to them all for manufacturing purposes. The best mode of forming plantations would be from seeds, which may be imported from Naples, or the South of France. It is of easy culture, and propagates rather freely from suckers. The Rhus corraria, being a native of the South of Europe, it will not flourish to the northward of New York. On the light soils of New Jersey, which are there so prevalent, it would, no doubt, grow well; but it would, probably, produce more shoots in the lower sections of the southern States, where the climate is more congenial and mild.

"THE BENEFIT OF CLERGY."—This phrase hed its origin in the dark ages, when literature, what little there was in the world, was almost all found among the clergy; and when a clergyman died, it was felt to be a public loss, as the State was deprived of his learning. So highly was literature prized, that it became a law that a clergyman, who could read, when convicted of a capital offence, might escape the penalty of the law, so that the State might not lose the benefit of his learning. In process of time this was so extended that any man, who could read, should have the benefit of the clergy, that is, should escape the death penalty in consideration of his intelligence.

[Cong. Jour.

RICH PRESENTS.—Collector Morton, of the port of Boston, recently received from the British Government, an elegant gold medal, to be presented to Capt. Thomas Harris, of the bark Peru, as a token of esteem for his humane conduct in rescuing the crew of the British brig Britannia from death in 1846. There was also entered at the Custom-House, the other day, an elegant gold brooch, studded with diamonds, intended as a present from the Sultan of Turkey to Professor Morse, the inventor of the Magnetic Telegraph. The duties on this token of esteem amounted to over $120.

A man who has returned from California, being asked what goods were the best investment for the California market, replied, 'Green spectacles, by all means; for they are needed to protect the eyes of the gold-diggers from the brilliancy of the metal.

RAILROADS AT THE CLOSE OF THE YEAR 1848.—The Railroad Journal, summing up the extraordinary influence of railroads upon the country, and upon the world, says it may be safely estimated that the entire expenditure, within the last twenty-five years, in the projection and construction of railroads, will not fall below one thousand millions of dollars! and that their influence in facilitating business, in reducing the expense and time of travel, and in opening up new regions of country, has given an increased value to property of twice that amount; and yet their influence is only beginning to be felt. We may add, that within a month, two hundred and eighty-two miles of new railroad has been added to that already in use in this country. This addition is made up as follows: New York and Erie, 127 miles; New York and New Haven, 80 miles; Nashua and Worcester, 45 miles; Harlem, 30 miles; total, 282 miles.

RAILROADS IN NEW YORK.—There are in the State of New York about 778 miles connected, on which cars are running, the total cost of construction of which amounted to $20,944,141. The number of passengers who passed over them in 1847 was 3,866,718, from which, and all other sources, the gross earnings of the same year were $6,084,410. The expenses, including those of running and repairing, were $4,551,361, leaving a profit of $1,531,851. The income of five of the companies increased from 1847 to 1848, $263,734, and their expenses for running and repairs during the same time increased $117,000, which result shows a satisfactory business.

SEVERE BUT JUST SENTENCE.—The Poughkeepsie Journal of Saturday says that a man named Charles Smith was found guilty at the recent Oyer and Terminer in that village, of gouging out the eye of another man, with whom he was fighting, and Judge Barculo sentenced him to twenty-one years' imprisonment in the State Prison. The laws of this State in reference to maiming are very severe, and we think very justly so. It is one of the most heinous crimes of which man can be guilty.

VARIETY.

William Lawrence, of Boston, lately deceased, left by his will, twenty thousand dollars to the Groton Academy, says the Springfield Republican. The amount is to remain on interest until it reaches thirty thousand dollars, and then to be appropriated to purposes of instruction, charity to the indigent pupils, &c. This institution has heretofore received large sums from the Lawrence family. Groton was their native town.

Captain Dutch, distinguished as the most daring and successful chief of the Cherokee nation, in the Cherokee and Osage wars, that were waged on the Western frontier some twenty years ago, died at his residence in Canadian District, Cherokee nation, on the 14th ult. At the time of his disease he was a member of the National Council, and was considered the most influential man of the 'Western,' or 'Old Settler,' Cherokees.

James T. Sasser recovered a verdict of five thousand dollars damages against the city of Memphis, for injuries sustained by falling into a cistern, authorized to be dug by its agents at the north-west corner of Main and Jefferson streets. The cistern was about twenty-five feet deep, and the thigh of the plaintiff was fractured, and other injuries sustained.

The Doylestown Democrat relates the following: On Tuesday morning last, a young lad, engaged in taking care of the horses, at the livery stable of John Welkel, in this Borough, had his nose bitten off by a horse. He was in front of the animal playing off some pranks, which the beast did not like. It made one dab at him, and he came off minus a nose. It was fixed up by a physician, and he is doing well.

The steamer Empire burns, on some trips between Chicago and Buffalo, 700 cords of wood, and, it is stated, averages 600 cords. Calculating that she averages thirteen trips, the usual number during the season, she will consume 234 acres of timber, and employ forty wood-choppers, at an average cost of over $10,000.

While Kings in Europe are shaking on their thrones, in republican America they are acquiring new honors. The next session will contain no less than five of them, viz: James G. King, of New Jersey; Preston King, and John A. King, of New York; T. Butler King, of Georgia; and William K. King, of Alabama.

A singular wager was laid on the presidential election, by a couple of politicians in Connecticut, who agreed that he whose candidate was defeated should saw a cord of wood in the street. The wood was sawed on Monday, in presence of a large committee of amused spectators.

Hiram Powers, the Sculptor, has been engaged by the Louisiana Legislature, to make a statue of Washington for the State House. Five thousand dollars is appropriated, but the sculptor says it is not enough.

One of the principal commercial houses in Constantinople, which has the monopoly of the supplies for the court of the Sultan, has recently ordered in Paris 4,800 corsets, for ladies, in the richest styles.

The Nantucket Inquirer says—'A branch was recently shown us, taken from a Japan pear tree, growing in the open air, with flowers in full bloom—quite a curiosity, considering that next Monday will be Christmas.'

BRITISH PERIODICAL LITERATURE.

REPUBLICATION OF

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor, and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Tory, Whig, and Radical—"Blackwood" and the "London Quarterly" are Tory; the "Edinburgh Review" Whig; and the "Westminster Review" Radical. The "North British Review" is more of a religious character, having been originally edited by Dr. Chalmers, and now, since his death, being conducted by his son-in-law, Dr. Hanna, associated with Sir David Brewster. Its literary character is of the very highest order. The "Westminster," though reprinted under that title only, is published in England under the title of the "Foreign Quarterly and Westminster," it being in fact a union of the two Reviews formerly published and reprinted under separate titles. It has, therefore, the advantage, by this combination, of uniting in one work the best features of both as heretofore issued.

The above Periodicals are reprinted in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals, Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac simile of the Edinburgh edition.

TERMS.

CLUBBING.

Four copies of any or all of the above works will be sent to one address, on payment of the regular subscription for three—the fourth copy being gratis.

EARLY COPIES.

Our late arrangement with the British publishers of Blackwood's Magazine, secures to us early sheets of that work, by which we are enabled to place the entire number in the hands of subscribers before any portion of it can be reprinted in any of the American Journals. For this and other advantages secured to our subscribers, we pay so large a consideration, that we may be compelled to raise the price of the Magazine.

☞ Something may therefore be gained by subscribing early.

ALLEDGED CHANGE OF THE SABBATH AT THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

[Section X. of J. A. Begg's Treatise on the Sabbath.]

We proceed to trace the rendering of this word [mia] through the other books of the New Testament.

"And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul." Acts 4 : 22.

"They went out, and passed on through one street; and forthwith the angel departed from him." Acts 12 : 10.

"When they knew that he was a Jew, all with one voice, about the space of two hours, cried out, Great is Diana of the Ephesians." Acts 19 : 34.

"And upon the first day of the week, when the disciples came together to break bread." Acts 20 : 7.

On this instance, in which our translators have given the same rendering of first, to the Greek mia, we shall have occasion afterwards to speak more fully. It is sufficiently obvious, that the same desire by which they were actuated in translating the statement concerning the resurrection of Christ, prevailed with them in translating here.

"And when we had finished our course from Tyre, we came to Ptolemais, and saluted the brethren, and abode with them one day." Acts 21 : 7.

"Let these same here say, if they have found any evil doing in me, while I stood before the council, except it be for this one voice, that I cried standing among them." Acts 24 : 20, 21.

"And after one day, the south wind blew, and we came the next day to Puteoli." Acts 28 : 13.

"Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day, three and twenty thousand." 1 Cor. 10 : 8.

"Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him." 1 Cor. 16 : 2.

On the translation of this text, also, we shall afterwards have occasion to animadvert. It is the last case but one in which our translators have rendered the Greek mia, by the word first, as it is the last instance from which the cause of Sunday sanctification could receive aid from the mistranslation.

"Of the Jews, five times received I forty stripes, save one." 2 Cor. 11 : 24.

"Which things are an allegory; for these are the two covenants; the one from the Mount Sinai, which gendereth to bondage." Gal. 4 : 24.

"There is one body and one Spirit, even as ye are called in one hope of your calling; one Lord, one faith, one baptism, one God and Father of all, who is above all, and through all, and in you all." Eph. 4 : 4.

"That whether I come and see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast, in one spirit, with one mind, striving together for the faith of the Gospel." Phil. 1 : 27.

"A bishop, then, must be blameless, the husband of one wife." 1 Tim. 3 : 2.

"Let the deacons be the husbands of one wife." 1 Tim. 3 : 12.

"And ordain elders in every city, as I had appointed thee; if any be blameless, the husband of one wife." Titus 1 : 6.

"A man that is an heretic, after the first and second admonitions reject." Titus 3 : 10.

On this text Griesbach states that the words "and second" are altogether wanting in some manuscripts; and it will easily be observed, that their insertion in the text could alone account for our translators rendering mia by the English word "first."

"But this man, after He had offered one sacrifice for sins, forever sat down on the right hand of God." Heb. 10 : 12.

"For by one offering, He hath perfected forever them that are sanctified." Heb. 10 : 14.

"Lest there be any fornicator or profane person, as Esau, who for one morsel of meat sold his birth-right." Heb. 12 : 16.

"But, beloved, be not ignorant of this one thing, that one day is with the Lord as a thousand years, and a thousand years as one day." 2 Peter 3 : 8.

"And I saw when the Lamb opened one of the seals; and I heard as it were the noise of thunder, one of the four living ones saying, Come and see." Rev. 6 : 1.

"One woe is past; and behold there come two woes more hereafter." Rev. 9 : 12.

"And the sixth angel sounded, and I heard a voice from the four horns of the golden altar which is before God." Rev. 9 : 13.

"And I saw one of his heads, as it were wounded to death." Rev. 13 : 3.

"And the ten horns which thou sawest are ten kings which have received no kingdom as yet; but receive power as kings one hour with the beast. These have one mind, and shall give their power and strength unto the beast." Rev. 17 : 12, 13.

"For God hath put in their hearts to fulfill His will and to agree and give their kingdom unto the beast." Rev. 17 : 17.

In this verse, in the original, the words "to agree" are precisely the same with those quoted above from the 13th verse of this same chapter, "one mind," which is their express translation. The meaning is the same; for those who are of one mind, of course, do "agree."

"Therefore shall her plagues come in one day; death, and mourning, and famine." Rev. 18 : 8.

"Alas, alas, that great city Babylon, that mighty city! for in one hour is thy judgment come." Rev. 18 : 10.

"For in one hour so great riches is come to nought." Rev. 18 : 17.

In the Greek New Testament, protos also occurs, and is translated as follows:

"The names of the twelve Apostles are these; the first Simon." Matt. 10 : 2.

"The last state of that man is worse than the first." Matt. 12 : 45.

"Cast a hook, and take up the fish that first cometh up." Matt. 17 : 27.

"But many that are first shall be last, and the last shall be first." Matt. 19 : 30.

"Call the laborers, and give them their hire, beginning at the last unto the first." "But when the first came, they supposed that they should have received more." Matt. 20 : 8, 10.

"So the last shall be first, and the first last." Matt. 20 : 16.

"Whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant." Matt. 20 : 27.

"A certain man had two sons; and he came to the first and said, Son, go work to-day in my vineyard." Matt. 21 : 28.

"Whether of them twain did the will of his father? They say unto him, The first." Matt. 21 : 31.

"Again he sent other servants more than the first." Matt. 21 : 36.

"There were with us seven brethren; and the first when he had married a wife deceased." Matt. 22 : 25.

"This is the first and great commandment." Matt. 22 : 38.

"Now the first day of the feast of unleavened bread." Matt. 26 : 17.

"So the last error shall be worse than the first." Matt. 27 : 64.

"Herod, on his birth-day, made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee." Mark 6 : 21.

"If any man desire to be first, the same shall be last of all." Mark 9 : 35.

"Many that are first shall be last, and the last first." Mark 10 : 31.

"And whosoever of you will be the chiefest, shall be servant of all." Mark 10 : 44.

"Now there were seven brethren, and the first took a wife, and dying, left no seed. And the second took her and died." Mark 12 : 20.

"And one of the scribes " asked Him, Which is the first commandment of all? And Jesus answered him, The first of all the commandments is, Hear O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord." "This is the first commandment." Mark 12 : 28, 29, 30.

"And the first day of unleavened bread, when they killed the passover." Mark 14 : 12.

"When Jesus was risen early, the first day of the week,* He appeared first to Mary Magdalene." Mark 16 : 9.

"And this taxing was first made when Cyrenius way governor of Syria." Luke 2 : 2.

"And behold there are last which shall be first, and there are first which shall be last." Luke 13 : 30.

"And they all with one consent began to make excuse. The first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground, and I must needs go and see it." Luke 14 : 18.

"The father said to his servants, Bring forth the BEST robe, and put it on him." Luke 15 : 22.

"So he called every one of his Lord's debtors unto him, and said unto the first, How much owest thou unto my Lord?" Luke 16 : 5.

"Then came the first, saying, Lord, thy pound hath gained ten pounds." Luke 19 : 16.

"But the chief priests, and the scribes, and the chief of the people, sought to destroy Him." Luke 19 : 47.

"There were therefore seven brethren, and the first took a wife and died without children." Luke 20 : 29.

"This was He of whom I spake, He that cometh after me is preferred before me, for He was before me." John 1 : 15.

"He first findeth his own brother." John 1 : 41.

"For an angel went down at a certain season into the pool; whosoever then first after the troubling of the water stepped in was made whole." John 5 : 4.

"He that is without sin among you, let him first cast a stone at her." John 8 : 7.

"Then came the soldiers and brake the legs of the first, and of the other which was crucified with Him." John 19 : 32.

"And the other disciple did outrun Peter, and came first to the sepulchre." John 20 : 4.

"Then went in also that other disciple which came first to the sepulchre, and he saw and believed." John 20 : 8.

"The former treatise have I made, O Theophilus, of all that Jesus began both to do and teach." Acts 1 : 1.

In this text the word rendered "former" is in the Greek "first," which expresses precisely the idea here intended to be conveyed.

"When they were past the first and the second ward, they came unto the iron gate that headed unto the city." Acts 12 : 10.

The distinct character of the two words, the precise meaning of which we are seeking to exhibit, is in this and in some other instances, forcibly illustrated, both words occurring in the same verse, and expressing their respective significations. Formerly we quoted the statement that the angel and Peter passed on "through one street," and now we quote the verse as above, showing that the other word is employed when we are told that they had previously "past the first and the second ward."

* It is not a little remarkable, that this is the only instance in which the Greek word first occurs in any of the Gospels, or indeed in any text in all the New Testament, in connection with our Saviour's resurrection. Were this even an inspired text, it really does not in the Greek speak of "the first day of the week;" but the singularity of its having "first" substituted for "one," as used by Matthew, Luke, and John, in speaking of the resurrection of Christ, and even by Mark himself, in the beginning of this very chapter, may be regarded as evidence corroborative of the opinion of the eminent critics who, on totally different grounds, regard the whole of this chapter, from verse 9th, inclusive, to the end, as spurious.

These verses are wanting in the most ancient and best MSS. of the New Testament, and are marked by Griesbach as dubious. Penn, in his Annotations to the Book of New Covenant, (which is the translation of the famed Vatican MS. of the fourth century,) in which they are wanting, says, "The sequel of this chapter, from ver. 9, inclusive, is evidently taken from one of the apocryphal Gospels current in the first and second centuries; and has been annexed to the conclusion of this of St. Mark, with the design of giving to it an extension and bulk which the evangelical author did not bestow upon it." This large portion of the chapter, in the commonly-received text, is not comprehended in Eusebius' Canon of this Gospel; and is not contained in the Vatican MS. Birch subjoins the following note to this place, in his "Quatuor Evangelia:"—"The last portion of this Gospel, from the 9th verse to the end, is not contained in the most excellent and most ancient Vatican MS., 1209. In the Vat. MSS. 756, 757, an asterisk is affixed, which sign the transcribers employed as a cautionary mark, to all narrations not found in all MSS., to note them as doubtful." He then produces different Greek scholia, from different MSS., (which had been before adduced by Wetstein,) testifying the absence of this passage from most MSS., though it was contained in others; he points out the termination of St. Mark's Gospel, in Eusebius' Canons, with the words "for they were afraid," in the 8th verse; and concludes by observing, "From hence it follows, that the numbers of the last verses of St. Mark enumerated in the Table of Canons, were not placed there by Eusebius, but have been inserted by transcribers, with a sort of pious fraud, in order that they might the more easily maintain the authenticity of the passage." (Proleg. pp. 21, 22.") "These testimonies are sufficient to prove, that the paragraph in question is, at the least, apocryphal, and ought not to be blended with those Scriptures whose genuineness is unquestionable."

THE POOR, GOD HELP THEM!

BY MRS. M. E. HEWITT.

[Here are a few seasonable lines from one of the most charming of American writers. They have been published, we dare say, again and again, but they are not the less attractive on that account.]

Old Winter comes with a stealthy tread,
O'er the fallen autumn leaves,
And shrilly he whistleth overhead,
And pipeth beneath the eaves.
Let him come! we care not, amid our mirth,
For the driving snow or rain;
For little we reck of the cheerless hearth,
Or the broken window pane.

'Tis a stormy night, but our glee shall mock
At the winds that loudly prate,
As they echo the moan of the poor that knock
With their cold hands at our gate.
The poor! we give them the half-picked bone,
And the dry, mildewed bread;
Ah! they never, God help them, know the pain
Of the pampered overfed.

Fill round again with cheering wine,
While the fire glows warm and bright;
And sing me a song, sweet heart of mine,
Ere you whisper the words "good night!"
You will never dream, 'neath the covering warm
Of your soft and curtained bed,
Of the scanty rug and the shivering form,
And the yawning roof e'er head.

The poor! God pity them in their need!
We've a prayer for every groan;
They ask us with outstretched hands for bread,
And we carelessly give a stone.
God help them! God help us! for much we lack,
Though lofty and rich we be;
And open our hearts unto all that knock
With the cry of CHARITY.

PANORAMA IN PALESTINE.

While traveling in Syria and Palestine, one can hardly fail to receive a deeper and more vivid impression of the truthfulness of the Scriptures. The Holy Land is indeed a local commentary on the Sacred Volume. One who visits that land with the love of the Bible deep in his heart, and a competent knowledge of its contents in his mind, will continually meet with illustrations of its geography, history, prophecy, comparisons and images. He will feel that he is in the land of the Bible; and he will find it the best guide-book he can have. I felt this deeply when in that land, and I often remarked, either the Bible must be true, or Judea an unreal thing; and all the objects and scenes which there meet the eye must be visionary. Take a position on the lofty hill on which Safet is built, or on any of the highlands around Nazareth, and a vast panorama is presented to your view, every portion of which reminds you of some locality, some historical event, some great transaction recorded in the Scriptures. Mount Hermon, raising aloft its snowy head, with the sources of the Jordan, and the beautiful vale through which it flows; the Sea of Tiberias, with its interesting localities, and the Mountains of Moab stretching on the east, like a waving line drawn on the horizon—the Mount of Beatitudes, where our Saviour preached to the multitude; Nazareth, where he was brought up; Tabor, where he was transfigured; Nain, where he raised the widow's son to life; Gilboa, where Saul was slain; Endor, where he went to consult the woman who had a familiar spirit; Shunam, where Elijah restored to life the Shunamite's son; Mount Carmel, rising in the distance, where he usually resided, and where he sent his servant to watch the cloud, as it rose from the sea, portending rain; Jezreel, the royal residence of Ahab, and the great plain of the same name, lying below, the scene of many a bloody battle recorded in the Bible;—all these, rich in Scriptural associations, lie spread out before you as on a map; and as you contemplate them, the whole scene of sacred history rises to view, with a new and wonderful sense of reality. The same impression I felt, when from the top of Mount Gerizim, I gazed upon the frowning front of opposite Ebal, and looked upon the charming piece of ground which Jacob delivered up to his son Joseph, visited the tomb of this his beloved son, and the well where the Saviour once sat and refreshed himself, wearied with his journey, and traced for many a mile the road he was wont to travel as he went to and from Jerusalem through Samaria. Being on the spot, amid these sacred localities, and seeing how accurately they correspond with the references made to them in the Scriptures, the truth of the Inspired Volume comes home with increased power to the mind, and impresses itself with a livelier interest on the heart.

So, take a position on the top of Mount Olivet, and view the scenery around you, and you will imagine a thousand voices are speaking to you of Scriptural events, and giving you a new and deeper impression of their reality. As you leave the city, you pass through the St. Stephen's Gate, near to which is the pool of Bethesda—you descend into the valley of Jehoshaphat, cross the brook Kedron, and tread the same road that was wont to be traveled by the Saviour and his apostles, and up which he was led to the hall of Pilate on his way to trial. You enter the Garden of Gethsemane, the place of his last agony, and muse with deep emotion on the scenes of that dreadful night. You reach the summit of the Mount, and near by, a little to the east, is the place whence the Saviour ascended to glory, in the presence of his disciples; a little further on is Bethany, the village of Lazarus and his two sisters, Martha and Mary; at your right is the road leading to Jericho, winding round among the hills and vallies, till it loses itself in the dark, gloomy wilderness of the Saviour's temptation—beyond which is seen the Dead Sea, with all its solemn and affecting associations. At the south-west, distant some seven or eight miles, is Bethlehem, the place of our Lord's birth, hanging upon the slope of a lofty hill, and presenting a fine view of the Church of the Nativity. Beneath you, at the western base of the Mount, winds the deep valley of Jehoshaphat, and on the opposite hill lies spread out before you the Holy City—and as you gaze upon the scene, the 'tide of sacred history flows massively through the soul,' and the events of ages, as connected with this spot, pass in rapid review before the mind. There is the site of the once joyous city, the city that was full of people, beautiful for situation, the joy of the whole earth, the place of kings, and heaven's inspired messengers—the place of the visions of God, and of the ministries of angels—over which the Savior wept as he descended, for the last time, from this lovely Mount—where he taught, and wrought miracles; was condemned and crucified, and rose from the dead. Absorbed in the contemplation of the past, and beholding the present poor, degraded, condition of the city—the site of the glorious temple, now occupied by the dark, unseemly, mosque of Omar, and signs of desolation and ruin on every side, you seem to hear afresh the voice of the Saviour, as, weeping, he uttered the prophetic words, 'If thou hadst known, even thou, at least in this thy day, the things that belong to thy peace—but now they are hidden from thine eyes! For the days shall come upon thee, that thine enemies shall cast a trench about thee, and compass thee round, and keep thee in on every side; and shall lay thee even with the ground, and thy children within thee; and they shall not leave in thee one stone upon another, because thou knewest not the day of thy visitation.' ### SLAVE TRADE IN GEORGIA.

A correspondent of the Independence Democrat, writing from Atalanta, Ga., says:—

When I arrived at this place, from Savannah, I stopped at a foggy little town, built on the South Carolina side of the Savannah river, called Hamburg, notorious as a 'human market.' The State of Georgia prohibits the introduction of slaves into the State, for sale, and the consequence is, Hamburg was built up just opposite Augusta, for the purpose of furnishing slaves to the planters of Georgia. Augusta is the market to which the planters of Upper and Middle Georgia bring their cotton; and if they want to purchase negroes they step over into Hamburg and do so. There are two large houses there, with piazzas in front to expose the 'chattels' to the public during the day, and yards in the rear of them, where they are penned up at night like sheep, so close that they can hardly breathe, with bull-dogs on the outside as sentinels. They sometimes have thousands here, who, in consequence of their number, suffer dreadfully.

While at Hamburg, I saw a drove of these human cattle passing along through the streets in the direction of the market-house. They had been brought up in the country, and were destined for Texas. They were brought to this place to put on board the cars for Mobile. It was the most sickening sight I ever witnesssed, and heaven knows that I have seen things often before, that were enough to affect a heart of adamant. Many of them were young —mere boys and girls—and had traveled barefoot over the sharp burning sands of South Carolina, until their feet were literally cut to pieces, leaving blood at almost every step they took. Added to this was the lash of the cruel drivers, the gnawings of hunger, and other hardships incident to such a tramp, which rendered them the most miserable objects I ever witnessed. One beautiful creature, who, in the land of freedom, would have passed for a white person, was among the number. She observed me gazing with attention upon her, and undoubtedly thought that I wished to purchase; and clasping her hands, and fixing her tearful eyes beseechingly upon me, with a look of the utmost supplication, she exclaimed—'For the love of God, massa, do buy me! I good cook, nurse, ironer, washer—cheap at eight hundred dollars—do buy me!' I afterwards learned that they asked eight hundred dollars for her, which was probably on account of her white complexion. I think it would have been a deed of charity to have purchased her, even to make a slave of—to have redeemed her from the hands of such monsters as these 'nigger-traders' invariably are. I never felt the misfortune of being poor so keenly as I did at that moment. They all seemed so anxious to be sold, and when a purchase was made of one of them, he appeared to be pleased at his prospects, while the rest seemed to envy him. Many of them—whites and mulattoes—are intended for the brothels of New Orleans and Mobile, where a girl from sixteen to twenty years of age, will command from one to two thousand dollars.

When I left Hamburg, for this place, there were fifty or sixty of these wretched creatures in the same train of cars, going on towards the south-west, probably to the 'Lone Star.' They were crowded into an old box car, without seats or any accommodation whatever, and fastened in—so that none might escape at the stopping-places, or precipitate themselves beneath the wheels of the cars, in a fit of desperation. Such things occur often, when not properly guarded against. Sometimes they will even starve themselves to death, to escape the tortures of their condition.

NEW RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT IN GERMANY.

We learn from Alliance and Visitor, that on the 21st, 22d, and 23d days of September last, a company of "above 500 brethren," of the various Evangelical communions in Germany, held a fraternal Christian conference at Wittenberg. The object of the meeting was to consider what measures could be adopted to rescue those churches from the dangers to which they are exposed, by the open infidelity of some, and the latitudinarianism and pseudo charity of others, of their religious teachers. The call for the conference was signed by forty-one names of note in the religious world, and the interest excited by the movement was very general and intense. It was fitting—eminently fitting—that a meeting of such men, and for such an object, should be held at Wittenberg, the principal scene of Luther's labors, and amid the very tombs of the earlier reformers. It was, if possible, a still more felicitous coincidence, that the meeting was convened in the very same venerable Castle-church, where Luther preached, and to the walls of which he affixed his famous ninety-five Theses, on the 31st of October, 1517. From the very same pulpit, too, where 350 years ago, Luther and Melancthon proclaimed the scriptural doctrine of salvation by free grace, in opposition to the errors of the Church of Rome, was testimony now borne to the same imperishable truths, and plans suggested for their revival and spread, by men, who in the nineteenth century, evince a desire to emulate the labors, and follow in the footsteps of those reverend and illustrious reformers.

The Conference was organized by the choice of the celebrated Bethman,—Hollweg, of Bonn, as President, and Professor Stahl, of Berlin, as Vice President. A large number of religious confessions were represented, and acting on the principle of agreeing to differ on all the minor, unessential points, the meeting was one of entire harmony and Christian union. Various resolutions were proposed, discussed, and adopted, which it is expected, will in their practical results, produce a decidedly beneficial effect upon the reviving churches of Germany.

POWER OF FENELON'S CHARACTER.

Fenelon seems preeminently to have exemplified the christian duty, of loving our neighbor. His entire life presents a series of pictures illustrative of that virtue. He has received a reward even among men. His virtues live in the memory of the people of Cambray; the discovery of his ashes was hailed with enthusiastic joy; and the Flemings to this hour call him the Good Archbishop. He rises in their memory, not in the robes of ecclesiastical dignity, but in the white garments of Christian life. His glory is not confined to a single province. Christians of every shade of doctrine, and scholars of every variety of sentiment, have applauded and revered his character. The life of Fenelon was religion in motion. In the course of his walks, —I take the account from one of the most pleasing memoirs of the Archbishop—he would often join the peasants, sit down with them, and console them; he visited them in their cottages, and partook of their humble meals. 'There,' would the old people say, in after times—there is the chair in which our good Archbishop used to sit in our midst; we shall see him no more,' and as they spoke the tears would begin to flow.

SELECT SENTENCES.

Some think that a tender conscience is a weak one, but it is a sign of their weakness who think so.—Beddome.

Keep the truth, and the truth will keep thee. —Wm. Allen.

There is many a wounded heart without a contrite spirit. The ice may be broken in a thousand pieces; it is ice still; but expose it to the beams of the Sun of Righteousness, and it melts.—Middleton.

The sum of that which is revealed of angels is that they serve on earth and sing in heaven. —Luther.

The almost Christian is a most unhappy man, having religion enough to make the world hate him, and not enough to make God love him.—Countess of Warwick.

The true treasure of loving God is to love him without measure.—Ibid.

By how much the more Christ made himself vile for us, by so much the more precious should he be to us.—Ibid.

He that takes up Chrtst's cross handsomely, shall find it a burden, as wings to a bird, or sails to a ship.—Ibid.

God chastises whom he loves, but he loves not to chastise.—Ibid.

Fifteen years ago the population of Texas was not 15,000, but it is now 153,000, according to the statement of the Hon. Asahel Smith, late Minister to England, recently made in his address at Yale College.

POSITION AND PROSPECTS OF THE POPE.

The year eighteen hundred and forty-eight has witnessed political changes and revolutions such as never before occurred in any one year since the world began. Of all these revolutions perhaps none has a more solemn interest or significance than that which has driven Pope Pius from Rome. Yet so accustomed have we become to read of the dethroning of sovereigns, that the news of His Holiness' flight did not at first strike us as peculiarly important, or excite unusual astonishment. Some two years ago the Pope published his celebrated amnesty, which was hailed with a general outburst of enthusiasm, and made him at once the hope, if not the idol, of all the reformers of Italy. But in the short period which has since elapsed, what a change has taken place! The grand movement for reform, to which he, perhaps unconsciously, gave such a powerful impulse, has rapidly gained strength, until he is no longer able to control it, and is actually swept away before its resistless current. We believe that all parties agree in awarding to the Pope a large and universal benevolence. This it was, undoubtedly, which prompted him to favor reforms at the outset of his public career, and which drew towards him the spontaneous affections of his people. But there is reason to doubt whether he has, at any period since he came into power, entertained the plan of bringing about a thorough and general reform in the political affairs of the country. A conviction of this, which has been gradually taking possession of the minds of the radical reformers, has disappointed their extravagant hopes, and checked their sympathy for him as a temporal prince. Thus a desire to lessen the sufferings of his people has partially alienated the affections of those who favored the old abuses, while a refusal to engage in a thorough remodeling of affairs has weakened the confidence of the opposite party. Between the two, the political career of the Pope has apparently come to an end.

The question of the Pope's restoration is of course interesting to all parties in all countries. Papists anxiously look for his restoration, because it is necessary to the life of their system. Some Protestants, however, think the day has come for Popery to fall, and they do not anticipate any improvement in the Pope's affairs. It is generally believed, that the Roman people desire his return as the spiritual ruler of the church, but not as a temporal ruler. The facts connected with his flight, and the character of those with whom he now associates, indicate that if he returns it will be in the character of a spiritual and temporal ruler. But this will meet with strong opposition, and it is therefore doubtful whether he will return at all very soon. Whatever course things may take, the whole world will look on with intense and growing interest.

THE POSTAGE TREATY WITH GREAT BRITAIN.

This document having been duly ratified, is now made public. It places the correspondence between the two countries, the mail packets of each government, and the postage charges, on an equal footing. On each letter, not exceeding half an ounce in weight, posted in the United States, and addressed to any place in Great Britain or Ireland, the charge is to be 24 cents; double and triple letters, (reckoning by weight,) are to be charged double and triple postage. Newspapers may be mailed at any office in the United States, to any place in the United Kingdom, on the payment of 2 cents, and may, on receipt from any place in Great Britain or Ireland, be delivered at any office in the United States on payment of 2 cents. On each pamphlet to be sent to any place in the United Kingdom, and on each pamphlet received therefrom, there is to be prepaid in the first place, and charged and collected in the second, one cent for each ounce in weight, or a fractional excess of an ounce. These are to be sent in bands or covers, open at the ends or sides, so as readily to be examined, and to contain no manuscript whatever. On letters addressed to any place in British North America, not to be conveyed by sea, there will be charged a postage equal to the United States postage and the Province postage combined. United States postage on newspapers to Canada and other British Provinces is to be prepaid.

Such is the substance of the treaty. It reduces the postage between the two countries about one-half from what it has been for a year past. Still there is room for reduction. The system of cheap postage, which has worked so admirably in England and the United States, ought to be carried out between the two countries. It will be, we are quite sure, at no distant day. Meanwhile let us rejoice in the progress already made, and take courage from it to seek greater progress in the future.

Fenelon a Missionary in Western New York.—This annunciation, says a correspondent of the Puritan, will strike all with surprise. Robert Greenhow, Esq., of Washington, D. C., read a paper at the last meeting of the Historical Society, proposing to show the evidence of the fact, that the Archbishop of Cambray and the illustrious author of "Telemachus" was once a missionary in the western part of the State of New York. From the statements it appeared, that in various French colonial transactions his identical name is mentioned in the connection above referred to, and during this period, between 1688 and 1673, his life in France is unaccounted for. Mr. Greenhow, whose occupation is that of a linguist for the Government at Washington, and who is, therefore, every way competent to the task, announced his intention to make farther investigations on this interesting subject, as he was confident he had in his hands ample materials to arrive at definite proof.

LETTERS FROM ILLINOIS—NO. 4.

Pleasant Hill, near Farmington, Ill.,
13th of 12th month, 1848.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

I propose to give your readers, in this letter, as accurate an account as I am able of the climate of this country, and of its effects upon health. The medium length of the State of Illinois, from South to North, is 355 miles, and its average breadth 165 miles. Of course such an extent of country affords opportunity for a considerable variety of climate, and great variation in the healthiness of different locations; and this single fact is of itself sufficient to account for many apparent discrepancies which persons residing 1,500 miles distant, may have noticed, in the accounts they have received of the salubrity or sickliness of the Illinois country. Besides, the formation and local circumstances of a country, always vitally affect the healthiness of any given district. The water of rivers running through a flat, boggy, or swampy country, where there is a great amount of decaying timber, and other vegetable matter, become so impregnated with putrescent substances as to render them unfit for all common household purposes, and during the hot weather their exhalations fill the surrounding atmosphere with pestilent miasm. Suppose, that a friend should write from the neighborhood of the Montezuma marshes, or the immediate borders of the Seneca River from the foot of Cayuga Lake to the Oneida River in New York, to his friend in Illinois, and give him an account of the agues, bilious fevers, and dumb chills, which I have seen there, and he were to receive this as a fair description of the salubrity of the State of New York, he would certainly and truly think, that it was a dangerous place for him to emigrate to. But if he were to receive a letter from Madison County, describing the country and the health of the inhabitants, it would make a very different impression, although these locations are not very far from each other. The same disparity exists in the State of Illinois; and every account that is received of the salubrity or sickliness of any given part, must be balanced against the local features of the particular place from whence it comes. In the immediate vicinity of the rivers, especially where there is a heavy growth of timber, much low land, or stagnant water, whether in natural ponds, or such as are made by the erection of mill-dams, it is confessedly unhealthy. Agues and intermittents, chills and bilious affections, will most assuredly visit the new settlers until they become sufficiently acclimated successfully to resist the debilitating effects of their particular exposures. Even in those locations, much allowance is to be made for the circumstances and habits of the residents thereof. It is often the case, especially with new settlers, that in their concern to improve their lands, or to earn money to buy more, they neglect their habitations, and their families suffer much exposure to the inclement weather, through open chinks of the sides, broken windows, doors badly fitted, and houses neither banked nor under-pinned, and perhaps with a leaky roof. Surrounded by neighbors alike unthrifty, many an one loses the ambition for a tidy house, which the presence of better improvements would inspire; and thoughtlessly he sees his family declining in health, and spends more time and money in going after the doctor, and providing other alleviations of their sickness, than would be requisite to make their habitations sufficiently comfortable to prevent the occurrence of many of those incurable maladies. Similar remarks might be made with respect to their diet and clothing. There is often more loss of time, and more expense, in procuring remedial assistance for sickness occasioned by inattention to these things, than would be necessary to provide all the comfort in clothing, and culinary preparations, to make their families happy and healthy. In all my acquaintance with new countries I have made my observations upon these things; and I am fully convinced, that they have an important bearing upon the health and thrift of new settlers. Yet nothing is more common, than for settlers in new countries to attribute particular attention to these things to pride, or love of luxury. A little candid observation, however, might convince them, that such new settlers as are judiciously attentive to these things, are generally more healthy, and more thrifty in their business, than those who are proverbial for their inattention to them. I think well-prepared clothing suited to the various seasons, well-cooked food, at regularly served meals, tight and warm houses for winter, and well-ventilated to suit the changes of the weather, are as important to the health and thrift of a family, as healthy locations and fertile lands. Sickness and death are inseparable from mankind, but a vast deal of suffering, and many early deaths, may be prevented by a judicious care of our health, and a discreet use of the blessings of Providence. These I regard as solemn duties, which all heads of families owe to those under their care; and were they duly attended to, many mistaken reports respecting the sickliness of new countries might be prevented. These remarks are made, not to account for any unhealthiness among the settlers of this part of the country, for I know of none prevailing. There is but a single case of ague any where near us, that I can hear of, and that is in the person of a young man who has been at work in the woods near the river, quite a distance from this. There are settlers who have been here on the prairies for thirteen years, and have never had a case of ague, fever, or chills, in their families during the whole time. And if they keep away from the rivers during the hot season, I know no reason why it should not uniformly be so with all other well-directed households. I have traveled through both the counties of Peoria and Fulton, and parts of Knox, and in various directions, and I have not yet seen a swamp or a morass in all my travels. I never saw cleaner timber, nor clearer water, in any part of the world. Bro. Daniel Pierce tells me, that in all the ten years that he has been here he has not seen a single mossy tree or bush; not a handful can be gathered in all the two counties. The slues and ravines, that are so often spoken of, are the natural water courses of the country; the drains that the Creator has made to carry off the superabundant waters which fall during the wet seasons. Most of them have a little running stream in them; but the earth at the bottom of them, is as firm on both sides of the running water, and as passable for teams, as the upper lands are. Only a few of them are bridged; and the only inconvenience that occurs on account thereof is, the attrition of the horses' feet, and the wheels of the wagons, wear up the soil so as to mix it with the water, and thus make mud-holes. There are no very lofty hills, and there are no stagnant marshes, except such as I have before mentioned in the low lands, where the floods of the Illinois River some times break over, and on the retirement of the river to its natural boundaries leave a pool or lagoon of standing water. The land generally lies in large rolling swells, or more gentle undulations spreading from grove to grove, or from one brook to another. How can a country thus formed be unhealthy? I have not heard of a single funeral since I have been in the country. The Illinois River Baptist Association consists of 26 churches, lying on both sides of the river, nearly its whole length. It this year reports 955 members, and out of these 11 deaths. I do not know that there is more windy weather here than in most other countries, but the open prairies give a chance for the winds to drive without obstruction. The groves are many of them narrow and open, and the winds circulate through them so easily, that their progress is more rapid. Hence a fresh breeze is oftener perceived than in a thickly-wooded country. It appears to me, that this cause, and the general absence of morass, produces a rarefaction in the air, that makes it purer and more invigorating than in most other countries. This is probably the reason why there are no horses affected with the heaves here; and the reason why persons who have had lung affections, find their health so much improved by a few months' residence on the prairies. It is my candid opinion, that more healthy age, or florid youth, among the human family or vigor, in the animal creation, cannot be found in any part of the world, than on the prairies of Illinois. I have by no means attempted to overstrain this description. I would be willing to submit it to any hundred residents of the prairie country, and have no fear but that ninety-nine of them would endorse it as correct.

The two counties of Peoria and Fulton lie within the fortieth degree of north latitude, very similar to the country between Philadelphia and New York. The mean temperature for the year I have not been able to obtain; but I learn from observations made at Peoria, that in June, 1848, the mean temperature in that city was 68 1-4 degrees, and in July, 1848, the mean temperature was 71 degrees. For a month past, the weather has been cold and stormy, with only a few fine days; but the old settlers all say that out-door labor is seldom suspended during the winter, on account of bad weather. Bro. Daniel Pierce tells me that he has never known more than 14 inches of snow on the ground at one time, and that was half gone in less than 24 hours. The cattle, many of them, lie out the greater part of the winter, and the farmers begin to plough and sow in the third month of the year. Their wheat usually ripens in the last week of the sixth month, and they have never known frosts to come early enough to injure their crops of corn; it is as sure a crop as can be put into the ground. The wind in winter, however, is keenly cold, as it breezes across the prairies. The ground keeps sufficiently frozen to make good wagoning for a number of weeks; and when it thaws out in the spring, it is soon dry and packs down under the tread of the horses. Health, vigor, and prosperity, are to be enjoyed here as fully as in any other part of our land, by all the prudent, temperate, and industrious; but immunity from the common casualities, diseases, and mortality of human nature, none need expect.

Death of a Missionary.—The Singapore Free Press, of the 4th of November, contains the following notice of the death of a member of the American Baptist Mission at that place: 'Died at Bankok, Siam, September 25th, of erysipelas and inflammation of the lungs, Rev. Jesse Caswell, American Missionary, aged 39. He had been nearly nine years in that missionary field, and was suddenly cut down, after a short illness of only a week.'

◆

Apostacy.—Rev. R. K. Sconce, B. A., of Brasenose College, Oxford, has joined the Church of Rome. In publishing his reasons for secession, he urges, that he had, previously to leaving the Church, been permitted by his diocesan to hold and teach the identical doctrines which he now holds in communion with Rome.

◆

Remnant of the Reformation.—The church in Switzerland where Zwingle first denounced the sins and errors of Romanism still stands at Zurich. A recent American traveler says—'The pulpit is of unpainted wood, elevated about thirty feet, and the pews only wooden benches. The exterior is magnificent.'

Burning the Scriptures in Birmingham.—At a meeting of the Birmingham Protestant Association, held a few weeks since, Mr. T. Ragg, the Corresponding Secretary, related an extraordinary occurrence, which had taken place during the preceding week, not many hundred yards from the spot where the meeting was assembled. A poor sick woman, a Roman Catholic, residing in London, Prentice-street, had a daughter, who attended one of the Birmingham schools. From this school she had received a New Testament, out of which she had been reading to her mother, when the priest coming in, and seeing it, tore the contents out of the covers, put them into the fire, and held them down with his stick till sufficiently consumed, remarking that he would so serve all such books that he met with in the houses where he visited.

◆

Faithfulness Rewarded.—One of our exchanges tells of a wealthy man who was recently taken sick with the small-pox, in Philadelphia. He sent for a clergyman, who declined coming, and the second application was equally fruitless. The third pastor invited went cheerfully, continuing to call and comfort the patient with his presence and instruction, until he was restored. This faithful man of God, a few days since, received a silver pitcher, and the inscription told from whom it came, and why it was presented, as a token of personal gratitude. He was surprised at it, especially as he remarked, that he had done nothing but his duty.

Doctorates.—A correspondent of the Presbyterian Advocate gives the number of Doctors of Divinity made in this country in 1848, from which it appears that the business is flourishing. He sets down the whole number at 60, of whom 10 are foreigners, 11 Old School Presbyterians, 8 New School Presbyterians, 6 Congregationalists, 2 Unitarians, 9 Episcopalians, 9 Methodists, 4 Baptists, 1 Lutheran. Of the 50 Americans, 34 are graduates of different colleges. Of the degree of L. L. D., the same industrious hand has prepared the appended summary: Whole number 31; Foreigners 4. Of the 27 Americans, 16 are graduates of 8 different colleges.

New Scheme for Colonization.—In the Senate of Indiana, on the 19th of December, resolutions were adopted, instructing the Representatives of that State in Congress to use their utmost exertions to procure the passage of a law to set apart a portion of the newly acquired territory from Mexico for the colonization of the free people of color from the United States; that at least eighty acres of land be given to each colored person who will emigrate to said territory; and that the proceeds of any sales of lands therein, less the expense of surveying and selling the same, be appropriated to the education of such free people of color as may become inhabitants of the territory.

Rev. Wm. M. Jones.—At the Anniversary Meetings in New Jersey, last fall, some of our brethren had an opportunity to become acquainted with Rev. Wm. M. Jones, Missionary to Hayti, from the Baptist Free Mission Society. In October he sailed for the field of his labors; and we now learn, through the Christian Contributor, of his safe arrival, and of his determination to commence operations at a new station called Port de Paix, some fourteen leagues distant from Port au Prince. At an early day we shall endeavor to find room for a portion of his journal.

Baptist University in Pennsylvania.—Several months ago, we had occasion to notice, that the Baptists of Pennsylvania had determined to raise one hundred thousand dollars for the endowment of a University at Lewisburg. Many doubted the possibility of raising such a sum, and all thought the undertaking a great one. But through the perseverance of the agents, and the liberality of the public, as we learn from the Christian Chronicle, the sum has been raised, and the establishment and permanency of the institution insured.

◆

Temple Fees in India.—At the late Quarterly Court of the East India Company, Mr. Poynder presented eight petitions from Liecester, Nottingham, New Castle, Grimston, Boston, and Leamington, against the continuance of grants of money from the British Government to the Temple of Juggernaut, and other temples in India. They were from Baptist bodies.

◆

Royalty in the Pulpit.—The King of the Feegee Islands occasionally ascends the pulpit and preaches the Gospel to his subjects, and, it is said, with much effect. It would be a very happy thing if others who sit on thrones were to preach the same Gospel by their lives.

◆

Startling Destitution.—Rev. R. S. Cook, of New York, in a late sermon, stated that in Western Virginia there was no bookstore, no schoolhouse, and no church; that this territory furnished large numbers of persons yearly, who emigrate to the West, and whose ignorance and impiety are to bear directly upon the whole country. He also stated that into this section the Tract Society had sent their works, and by their colporteurs had already circulated 60,000 books, 6000 Bibles, and opened one hundred sabbath-schools; and among the fruits of their labors, persons over eighty years of age had heard the gospel for the first time, and been converted.

The Worship of Mary.—The Rev. M. Hobart Seymour, in his Pilgrimage to Rome, says at the present time the image of our Srviour is neglected for the more popular idol. He says:—

'The worship of Mary has become predominant; it is absorbing all else. Her pictures, her images, her worship, her patronage, her intercession, her churches, her convents, are all preferred to all else; and the image of Mary of the Augustinians, has absorbed the image of Christ at the Sopra Minerva. As the serpent-rod of Aaron, swallowed all the serpent-rods of the magicians, so the modern devotion to Mary has absorbed all the offerings, prayers, and devotion to Jesus; so that his image, once an idol, is now an idol no more.'

◆

Preaching the Gospel in Italy.—Mr. Feretti, formerly a priest of the Romish Church in Florence, but for some years a zealous Protestant, writes to a friend in England as follows:

'The Rev. Signor di Menna has established himself at Nizza, where he is preaching the gospel with the blessing of God in the midst of the people. The Government of Turin has ordered the Holy Scriptures to be read in the University and in the public schools; though with annotations of the Popish Church. The canon Mapel is starting for Florence from Liverpool. He has addressed a letter to his brethren in Abruzzi, in which he states why he abandoned the pale of Rome. All the priests of his acquaintance, who have read his letter, have replied to the Rev. canon, avowing that he has done well, and expressing a hope of one day following his example.'

◆

District School Journal.—Mr. Morgan, the Superintendent of Common Schools, has given notice that a destructive fire, which occurred at Syracuse on the morning of the 6th instant, destroyed the mail books, and all the back numbers for the past year, of the District School Journal. The office of the Journal will be immediately removed to Albany, where all letters may be addressed to the care of the Department. The several town superintendents of the State are requested without delay, to report to this Department their names, the name of their town and post-office address, the number of school districts, the school-house of which is situated in their own town, and the post-office to which the Journal shall be directed for each district. The publication of the Journal will not be suspended, the February number being now in press. The papers will be directed to the town superintendents and school districts, according as the returns are received.

Rebuilding of the Temple.—The New York Express says that the Jews, both here and in Europe, are just now making great efforts to raise subscriptions for the rebuilding of the Temple at Jerusalem, permission to that effect having recently been given them by the Turkish Government. The subject has been in agitation in this city, of late. At the Hebrew Festival, the other evening, at the Coliseum, it was prominently discussed. Among the guests was a Greek Rabbi, who comes here specially commissioned to raise money for the enterprise in question; and we are told his errand, thus far, has been pretty liberally rewarded. The Rabbi goes South next, and, before going back to Europe, will visit the Eastern States. However chimerical this new movement may appear, to us there seems a sublimity of purpose about it which must claim the respect, at least, if not the sympathy, of all Christendom.

REVIVALS OF RELIGION.

Ellicottville, N. Y.—A correspondent of the Evangelist, writing from Ellicottville, gives information of the progress of a very gracious revival in that place. The weather was forbidding, 'but I never,' says the writer, 'saw the gracious sovereignty of the Spirit so peculiarly manifested. There seemed to be no excitement, but the people thought, felt and acted. There are 40 or more, who have expressed hope in Jesus Christ.'

Howard, N. Y.—A correspondent of the N. Y. Baptist Register, writes that an interesting revival has been enjoyed, in the town of Howard. 'In some houses whole families are converted. In one extent of three miles on the stage route to Hornelsville, some in every house, I believe, save one, are praying souls, and nearly all the heads of families are taken. Some forty or more, we trust, have been born again, and the work is going on with great manifestations of Divine power.'

Bloomfield, Me.—Rev. N. M. Wood, communicates to Zion's Advocate, some particulars of an interesting revival which has been in progress in Bloomfield, for the last nine months. During this time, about 75 have professed faith in Christ, 59 of whom have been added to the church.

Society Hill, S. C.—We have been favored, says the Charleston Southern Baptist, with the following extract, from a private letter, to a brother in this city, from Rev. R. Furman, of Society Hill: 'We have had, for some time, a happy state of things in my church. On the fifth Sunday in October, it was my privilege to lead fourteen willing converts down into the water. For nearly two months previous to this time, I held frequent evening meetings, which were crowded, with signal manifestations of the Divine presence and blessing.'

Newark, Vt.—A correspondent of the Morning Star, writes that a revival has been enjoyed among the Methodists and Free Will Baptists at Newark and its vicinity. Several protracted meetings had been held, and quite a number of conversions and baptisms are reported.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

In my communication on 'Sunday Legislation,' published in your paper of last week, I observe several errors, which please correct—viz: 'The Father of our Republic' should read 'The Fathers of our Republic.' Again, in the closing sentence, there is such a transposition of some letters, and omission of others, as to destroy its intelligibility entirely. It should read, 'For truth is invincible.'

General Intelligence.

LAST WEEK'S CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

January 8.

In the Senate, Mr. Houston, of Texas, offered a resolution for the appointment of a Select Committee to inquire into the expediency of a railroad for military purposes, between the town of San Francisco, on the Pacific, and the Mississippi. It lies on the table. Mr. Hale presented a petition against the extension of Slavery to new States, and for abolishing Slavery and the slave trade wherever Congress has the jurisdiction. The question of reception was laid on the table. Mr. Corwin presented a similar petition, which was disposed of the same way. The bill for establishing reciprocal trade in certain articles of produce between Canada and the United States, was taken up, discussed for some time, and then informally passed over.

The House refused to suspend the rules to allow Mr. Meade, of Va., to offer a resolution instructing the Committee on Judiciary to report a bill for the more effectual apprehension and delivery of fugitive slaves who escape from one State to another. The Speaker alluded to the state of the vote on the Pacheco bill, as taken on Saturday, and said that two errors were made by the Clerk in counting the vote, which had been corrected. The true vote was, yeas 89, nays 90. A motion was made to reconsider, which was laid over till private bill day. The bill for the settlement of Private Claims was taken up, and referred to the Judiciary Committee.

January 9.

In the Senate, Mr. Underwood offered a petition asking an appropriation on the part of Government to remove the free colored population to Liberia or to some place beyond the jurisdiction of the United States. He then moved that the petition be received and referred to the Judiciary Committee with instructions to inquire whether Congress possesses power under the Constitution to make such an appropreation; and if so, whether it is expedient to exercise it. The subject was postponed till to-morrow. Mr. Pearce offered a joint resolution for the appointment of a Geologist for the survey of the Territories of California and Oregon, and that his salary be fixed at $9,000 per annum. The resolution was read twice and referred to the Committee on Public Lands. Mr. Berrien, Chairman of the Committe on the Judiciary, to whom had been referred the bill for admitting the Territory of California into the Union as a State, made a long and able adverse report. After some discussion, the usual number of copies were ordered printed, and the farther consideration of the subject was postponed.

In the House, the vote referring to the Judiciary Committee the bill in relation to private claims, was reconsidered, and the bill was restored to its place in Committee of the Whole. The Indian Appropriation Bill was taken up and agreed to. An amendment to the mileage bill was offered, to the effect that mileage shall hereafter be computed by the shortest route. A discussion here arose, which continued till adjournment.

January 10.

In the Senate, the principal subject of discussion was the resolution presented yesterday relative to the colonization of the free colored population. After an animated debate, the whole subject was indefinitely postponed.

In the House, a motion to reconsider the vote passing the resolution against the slave trade in the District of Columbia, led to a warm discussion of the whole subject. The vote was finally reconsidered, and the resolution laid on the table, by a vote of 94 to 40.

January 11.

In the Senate, various petitions were presented in favor of the reduction of postage, which were duly received and appropriately referred. The Indian Appropriation Bill, lately passed by the House, was taken up and read twice. Mr. Benton submitted a resolution for a continuation of a Synoptical Index of the Laws and Treaties of the United States, which, after a slight discussion, was adopted. Mr. Douglas, of Ill., moved to make the California Bill and the Report the order of the day for Monday week next, which was adopted.

In the House, there was some discussion on a resolution to print extra copies of the Secretary of War's report respecting Buffalo Harbor. The Civil Appropriation Bill was then taken up, and in discussing an amendment to it the subject of mileage came up, which occupied the remainder of the session.

January 12.

In the Senate, various memorials and petitions were presented, among which were some for modifying the Tariff, and others in favor of the reduction of postage. Mr. Jefferson Davis, of Miss., offered a resolution of inquiry as to the expediency of extending the pension laws to soldiers who may have been discharged from the ranks on account of accidents and casualities incurred during the late war, which was adopted. Mr. Niles, of Conn., moved to make the bill for the Reduction of Postage the order of the day for Monday next, which motion was adopted. The bill to provide for deficiencies in the appropriations for the last fiscal year, was taken up and passed. The bill to settle titles and land claims in California and New Mexico, and relative to preëmption rights was taken up, but no action was had upon it.

In the House, Mr. Hilliard, of Ala., gave notice that he would introduce certain bills on Monday next—one authorizing the citizens of California to frame a government, preparatory to its admission into the Union as a State, and another for establishing the boundary lines of Texas, and extending them over the Territory of New Mexico. The Pacheco Slave Case was then taken up, and after a long debate was laid aside without action.

January 13.

The Senate was not in session.

In the House, Mr. Goggin made an ineffectual attempt to get the House to take up the Post Office bill. On motion the Pacheco Slave Case was taken up, and the discussion of it was only ended by a motion to adjourn, which prevailed.

TEN DAYS LATER FROM EUROPE.

The steamship America, which left Liverpool on the 31st of December, arrived at Boston on the 12th inst. She brings ten days later news than the Washington, the substance of which we give below.

From England, we learn, that the Cholera is still hovering over the Metropolis. In the provinces it has not made any very considerable progress, but in Scotland it appears to rage with alarming results.

From France, we learn, that on Wednesday, the 20th of December, the ceremony of the proclamation of the election of the President took place in the National Assembly, and M. Marrast, in a loud voice, though somewhat broken by emotion, declared Louis Napoleon to be President of the French Republic—Democratic and indivisible—from that day to the second Sunday in May, 1852, and invited the new President to come forward and take the oaths required by the Constitution. Louis Napoleon advanced to the tribune, and swore to remain faithful to the Republic, and to forward its interests in all respects. He then read an address to the Chamber, in a firm voice, and with good success. When the President concluded his brief address, he advanced towards General Cavaignac, and tendered to him his hand. This movement surprised Cavaignac, but delighted the Chamber. After a pause of an instant, Cavaignac responded, and shook hands cordially with the President, amid marks of unequivocal satisfaction from all sides. A marked improvement has taken place in the value of all public securities.

In Italy, and indeed throughout Europe, the interest still felt for the position of the Pope, continues predominant. His Holiness remains at Gaeta, from which point all kinds of intrigues and negotiations have sprung up, conferring a great celebrity on this hitherto almost unknown spot. The Provisional Government at Rome, concluded by the vote of the Upper Chambers, has endeavored by every means in its power to induce the Pope to return to the Holy City. He refuses except on condition of dissolving the Chambers, disbanding the National Guard, and suppressing the journals, which, among other conditions, only show, that His Holiness has no real intention of returning at present to the Quirinal.

In Austria, public attention is mainly directed to the war against the Hungarians. We have very imperfect accounts of the progress of this civil strife. The Imperialists, however, have taken Ocdenbening, Tyrnaw, and Presburg, the Magyars retiring before them. It is said that the Imperialists will immediately invest Pesth, and crush Kossult and his followers. A sanguinary conflict between the Hungarians and Croatians took place at Wieselburg. A portion of Wieselburg was reduced to ashes, and a still greater portion plundered by the Croatians. Numbers of the inhabitants of Wieselburg, as well as of Raab and Kogern, carry on an immense corn trade, and are enormously rich, so that the Croatians no doubt got plenty of booty, unless the Wieselburghers had packed off their valuables before the arrival of their rapacious visiters. It is said that the Imperialists lost at Wieselburg, two generals, four staff officers, and fifty-seven sub-officers. On the other hand, the Magyars lost in prisoners alone 792, who were forwarded to Olmutz. Meantime, the Magyars claim a complete victory over the troops of the well-known Pastor Urban, who has been taken prisoner.

IMMENSE CASTING.

Last Friday was a busy day for the foundrymen of the Novelty Iron Works, and a 'die was cast' by them of no ordinary magnitude. Mr. Webb, of the Courier and Enquirer, being one of a party to witness the operation, thus speaks of what he saw: 'Precisely at 3 o'clock, we witnessed the casting of one of the Bed-Plates of the Atlantic, at the Novelty Works, which we believe is the heaviest piece of casting ever made in this country. Upwards of eigty-five thousand pounds of iron were required to fill the mould for this immense casting, and it is utterly impossible to describe—we had almost said the sublimity, of the scene. As the triumph of art, of science, and of genius combined, it was in truth a sublime spectacle; and the entire success which attended the operation, was highly gratifying to a large company present, who took a deep interest in the proceeding. We were also very highly gratified by a ramble through the immense machine-shops of Messrs. Stillman, Allen, & Co., who, even at this comparatively dull season of the year, have about six hundred men in their employ. It would require far more room than we can spare, to attempt a description of the wonders we saw; but we would say to the curious in such matters, if you desire to see the largest cylinder, and the most beautiful large casting, in the world, go to the Novelty Works, and examine the one already cast for the steamer Atlantic. There it lies upon its side, a perfect mountain of iron, if not the Iron Mountain; and we can compare it to nothing but a good sized tunnel on a railway, through which a reasonable-sized engine and cars could easily make their way. An omnibus sleigh and twelve horses could be driven through it with great facility—the driver standing erect—and neither horses nor passengers have cause to imagine it other than a covered bridge! There are to be two of these monsters on board the Atlantic; and there can be no doubt but their power will be sufficient for her."

The Church Accident at Westerly, R. I.—The following is said to be a portion of the persons who were injured by the falling of the floor of the new church at Westerly, Rhode Island, a few days ago—Mrs. York, dislocation of an ancle; daughter of Mr. Thomas Billings, arm broken and wrist out; Mary E. Barber, dislocation of the shoulder; Wm. Clark, dislocation of a thumb; Jonathan Lampher, dislocation of an ancle; Rebecca Sisson, dislocation of an ancle; Laura Bliven, dislocation of an ancle; Bridget, an Irish girl, dislocation of a wrist; colored girl, rib broken; Mrs. Chesebrough, knee-pan injured; Henry Noyes, injured in the stomach; Mrs. Brown, injured inside; Mrs. Larkin, back and stomach; Mrs. Swan, scalded; Mrs. Morse, bruised and sprained; Eliza Vose, scalded and burned.

Monster Steamboat.—Citizens of Chicago propose to build a new and unique steamboat, for a passage-boat upon the lakes between that city and Buffalo. The Chicago Democrat gives the following description of the boat, as it is proposed to construct it. 'She is to be four hundred feet long, with two powerful engines, so put into the boat as to divide the weight and prevent any injury; and so arranged, that should one break down, the other will be entirely independent, and will take the boat to her destination in safety, and with considerable speed. She is to be furnished exclusively for cabin passengers, with a view to accommodate a large number with comfortable lodgings. The accommodations are to be varied, so that all can be suited; if one person selects the best on board, he pays one price; if less room, or room of different kind will do, another price is to be paid. Those who eat at the first table, to pay one price, and no more seats to be sold than there are seats at the table, thus avoiding confusion. Those who eat afterwards, pay another price, the prices to be such, that if two persons occupy one room, the best will only cost seven dollars for the passage, including the price of tickets. It is confidently anticipated that the passage from Chicago to Buffalo will not average over 56 hours.

SUMMARY.

Speaking of prices in the California Gold Region, a correspondent of the New York Tribune says that whiskey sells at from $2 50 to $5 per gallon; shoes, light, and heavy, $3 50 to $5; boots, $10 to $16; Domestic goods sell at an advance of about 250 per cent. on cost, including transportation; ready-made clothing, 250 to 300 per cent. clear profit. Good blankets sell by the bale at $20 a pair. Watches and jewelry bring very high prices, with very quick sale, and gold dust is frequently picked up at from $8 to $10 an ounce.

The Assembly of the State of New York has 128 members, whose professions are classified as follows: Farmers 56, Lawyers 23, Merchants 16, Physicians 8, Gentlemen 6, Manufacturers 5, Mechanics 3, Accountant 1, Blacksmith 1, Farmer and Physician 1, Hotel-keeper 1, Iron founder 1, Lumber merchant 1, Mariner 1, Miller 1, Tanner 1, Teacher 1, Not Stated 1.

On the 8th of January a frightful occurrence happened on the Schuylkill River, near Fairmount. A large piece of ice, with a hundred persons on it, floated off into the current, producing great consternation. Numbers were rescued by a boat, and others jumped into the stream. Three persons were carried over the dam, a man, boy, and little girl. The latter struck her forehead against a piece of ice, and received a dreadful wound. All were finally rescued, and no lives were lost.

A dispatch from the South says that the cholera broke out among the 8th Infantry, at Fort Lawson, Texas, and raged with intensity for a couple of weeks. Forty deaths occurred at Bayley in one day and forty in one night. The dead were piled in heaps. One account says that half the regiment were swept off, another states that only seventy-five had died. St. Denny was the only officer dead. The camp was broken up. The disease had since abated.

The steamship Europa, Capt. Lott, which sailed for Halifax and Liverpool last week, took out about thirty-six thousand letters for various points in Europe. The largest number heretofore forwarded by any one ship has not exceeded thirteen thousand. This astonishing increase is doubtless to be attributed mainly to the reduction in the rates of postage brought about by the late convention with Great Britain.

Mr. E. Johnson, of Nahant, while fishing for cod-fish, about ten miles east of that peninsula, captured a huge monster of the finny tribe, called a horse-fish, or sleeper. It measured over ten feet in length, and weighed about a hundred pounds. This fish is very rarely taken in our waters. It is of the shark species, but much less active.

The Mormons appeal for assistance in their distress. Out of about 20,000 souls, 14 or 15,000 still linger in the wilderness of Iowa, many of them without the necessary clothing, provisions, groceries, medicines, &c. They have sent out Rev. Mr. Dana, to solicit subscriptions. He is now in Ohio.

The Pottsville, Pa., Miner's Journal says—'We understand that there is an unusual degree of suffering in this region. So disastrous has been the business, that many of the workmen are deprived of the wages due them, and their families are absolutely suffering from want.'

The Philadelphia North American, alluding to the taxes of the city of New York, says, that with a population of under 400,000, it will pay, during the coming year, a tax of $3,000,000. This is a vast sum, especially when the State, with a population seven times as great, pays a third less tax. Massachusetts, with a population more than twice as great, pays a tax of less than one-sixth.

Mr. Valentine, Clerk of the Common Council, in his forthcoming Manual of the Corporation of New York, states that in the year 1712, the entire population of the city, as shown by the census, was 5,840. In 1731 it had reached 8,622, and at present it cannot be much less than 420,000.

That veteran anti-slavery paper, The Liberator, appears in new type. Mr. Garrison says that he commences the 19th volume with a spirit as elastic as he felt at the commencement of his labors.

The first regular train of cars for Binghamton, by the Erie railroad, left New York on the 8th instant, with two hundred passengers. The distance is 225 miles, time 12 hours, fare $4 50, leave New York and Binghamton every morning except Sunday.

It is stated that several of the students in the Wesleyan University, at Middletown, are in a state of suspension, in consequence of having been concerned in getting up a cotillion party in that city.

The President has issued a Proclamation calling upon the Senate to meet for an Extra Session on the 5th of March.

A telegraphic dispatch to the New York Tribune, dated Boston, June 14, says that the steamboat Empire State, lying at the wharf at Fall River, took fire last evening, at half past 10 o'clock, and was entirely destroyed—boat, furniture, and all. The cause of the fire is not known; but it is attributed to the carelessness of the watchman on board. The Empire State formed with the Bay State the Fall River line between New York and Boston. She was laid up a short time ago. The loss is estimated at $150,000, of which two thirds is supposed to be insured.

A telegraphic dispatch received in N. York from Cincinnati, January 10, announces the painful intelligence that Rev. Dr. Levings, Financial Secretary of the American Bible Society, died there that morning. In the last letter received from him, on the 5th instant, dated at Vicksburg, he says—'God has hitherto preserved me, and I trust he will still do so; if not, I hope to die at my post. Pray for me.'

The St. Louis Organ, of the 1st instant, says—About eleven o'clock last night the steamer Iron City, lying near the docks, was discovered to be sinking, and her fastenings to be broken. She floated some distance down the river, and a number of persons who were on board were lost in their efforts to reach the shore by swimming.

The Representative from Hart county, Ky., W. B. Thompson, Esq., had his trunk broken open, either at Louisville or on the steamboat on his passage to the seat of government, from Louisville, and robbed of one thousand nine, hundred and seventy dollars, being the greater part of the State revenue due from that county.

A convention of the Liberty Party of the State of New York, will be held in Utica, on Wednesday, the 31st instant. The convention will probably continue through two or three days, to the end that ample time may be afforded for the discussion of slavery, land monopoly, war, and other political evils.

The receipts from passengers on the Utica and Schenectady Railroad have been gradually increasing for three years past. During the first eleven months of 1846, they amounted to $330,263; during the same months of 1847, $482,577; of 1848, $540,803.

A Baltimore paper, of January 9, says:—'We have received full mails as late as due from Houston and Port Lavacca, in Texas, by which we learn that the Cholera was prevalent at both places. At the former place, twelve were dying per day, and at the latter, one hundred and thirty-five persons had died, and great mortality had prevailed among the troops. The disease was also prevailing at Vicksburg, and about a dozen dying daily.'

It is stated on good authority, that Chancellor Walworth has accepted, or is about to accept, a professorship in Union College, at Schenectady, N. Y.

The Legislature of Massachusetts have elected Messrs. Briggs and Reed as Governor and Lieut. Governor of that State.

The Baptist church at Pine Hill, N. Y., was destroyed by fire on Sunday evening. Loss about one thousand five hundred dollars. No insurance.

The late Peter C. Brooks made no bequests of a public character. His estate will not exceed $2,000,000.

The Hartford Whig mentions the existence of a copper mine of great extent in Bristol, Ct., in which two hundred operatives are employed.

The first hair seal ever taken on our Jersey coast, was captured on the shore off Cape Island, by Elisha Hughes. It was full-grown. seals have been frequently seen along our coast, but it is said have never before been taken.

The number of Gipsies in Austria, it is said, amounts to one hundred and twenty-eight thousand, and that of Jews, to four hundred and fifty thousand.

A Hindoo law says, 'Strike not, even with a blossom, a wife, though she be guilty of a hundred faults.'

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality it is not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house. JARED MAXSON.

Genesee, December 20th, 1848. 29m3.

THE BOOK

For every Clergyman—For every School District—For every Educated Man.

WEBSTER'S QUARTO DICTIONARY, Unabridged. Price $6.—Published by G. and C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass., and for sale by Booksellers generally.

"Will not the enlightened and liberal furnish their clergymen with a copy, as an indispensable volume in their libraries?"—Rev. T. H. Gallaudet.

Extract from a Lecture addressed to a Teacher's Institute, by William Russel, Principal of the Merrimack [N. H.] School for Teachers, and formerly Editor of the American Journal of Education:

"The edition of Dr. Webster's Dictionary, revised by Professor Goodrich, I would earnestly recommend to the attention of all teachers who are desirous of becoming fully qualified to give instruction in the English Language. The copious information which that work embodies, on all topics connected with Etymology—the extreme exactness, as well as the number, extent, and fullness of the definitions which it furnishes to every important word, render it a mine of philological wealth to instructors. The volume is, in fact, the teacher's encyclopedia, as well as lexicon, for daily reference. Could a copy of it be provided, as the permanent property of every district school, the effect, as regards the improvement of instruction, would be deeply and extensively felt, in the increased skill of the teacher, and the higher attainments of his pupils, in the most important part of education—the acquisition of an adequate knowledge and proper use of our own language."

"It has come to be a necessity to every educated man."—Lord Brougham

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY

W. C. KENYON, A. M., } Principals.
IRA SAYLES, A. M., }

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage.

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848–9 consists of three terms as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.

EXPENSES.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| Board, per term, | from $14 50 to | $18 00 |
| Room-rent, | | 1 50 |
| Washing, | | 2 50 |
| Fuel, | spring and fall, 75 cents, winter, | 1 50 |
| Tuition, | from $3 50 to | 5 00 |
| Lights, | | 1 50 |
| Incidental Expenses, | | 25 |
| Extras—Music on the Piano Forte, | | 10 00 |
| Oil Painting, | | 7 00 |
| Drawing, | | 2 00 |

The entire expenses for an Academic Year, including board, washing, lights, fuel, and tuition, except the extras above mentioned, need not exceed eighty-five dollars.

The expenses for board and tuition must be settled in advance, at the commencement of each term, either by actual payment, or satisfactory arrangement.

Every student wishing to have washing done in the Hall, should have each article marked, so as to avoid exchange and losses.

PURE AIR.

[More Truth than Poetry.]

Throw open your window and fasten it there!
Fling the curtain aside and the blind,
And give a free entrance to heaven's pure air—
'T is the life and the health of mankind.

Are you fond of coughs, colds, dyspepsia, and rheums?
Of headaches, and fevers, and chills?
Of bitters, hot drops, and fumes?
And bleeding, and blisters, and pills?

Then shut yourselves up, like a monk in his cave,
Till nature grows weary and sad,
And imagine yourself on the brink of the grave,
Where nothing is cheerful and glad.

Be sure when you sleep that all air is shut out;
Place, too, a warm brick at your feet—
Wrap a bandage of flannel your neck quite about,
And cover your head with the sheet.

But would you avoid the dark gloom of disease?
Then haste to the fresh open air,
Where your cheek may kindly be fann'd by its breeze,
'T will make you well, happy, and fair.

O, prize not this lightly, so precious a thing,
'Tis laden with gladness and wealth—
The richest of blessings that heaven can bring,
The bright panacea of health.

Then open the window and fasten it there!
Fling the curtain aside and the blind,
And give a free entrance to heaven's pure air,
'T is the light, life, and joy of mankind.

PLANK ROADS.

A plank road from Schenectady to Saratoga Springs is about to be built. A letter from Prof. Gillespie, (author of the Manual of Road-making,) which was read at a recent public meeting in Schenectady, and published in the Cabinet, contains much valuable information on this important subject, and from it we extract some passages of general interest in relation to this improvement, the most valuable aid to locomotion since the discovery of railroads.

'To inland towns roads are substitutes for navigable rivers. The more widely they radiate in every direction, and the better their condition, the greater will be the consequent prosperity. Their comparative value is determined by the different weights which a horse can draw upon them at any uniform speed, or by the different speeds at which he can draw the same load. Of all modes of improving their surface, Plank Roads are the most effectual, at the smallest cost. If we take the load drawn on a new gravel road for our standard of comparison, experiments show, that on a good broken stone, or Macadam road, a horse can draw four times as much, and on a smooth Plank Road eight times as much, or twice as much as on a good Macadam road.

Plank Roads, therefore, enable a horse to do more than any arrangement except Railroads. But invaluable as the latter are to the hurrying traveler, the ordinary roads on which every farmer can drive his own team, when not needed for the farm labors, are incomparably more useful to the community at large—and of all such, Plank Roads are the perfection. They are the Farmer's Railroads.

Mode of Construction.—The best mode of constructing them is briefly this: Lay out the intended line with great care to avoid steep inclinations, never ascending more than one foot in going thirty or forty, and winding many feet around rather than go up one. Grade the road-bed wide enough for two wagon tracks, but plank only one, and that on the right hand side coming towards a city, for teams generally enter the town heavy, and go out light, and this arrangement makes the heavy ones keep the track, and the light ones do all the turning out. Lay down flatwise two stringers, twelve by three, four feet apart, centre to centre. Imbed them well in the earth; across them, at right angles, lay three hemlock inch-planks, eight feet long. The lengthwise and skewing methods of laying them are now abandoned. Pack the earth well up to them; slope the earth track towards the ditches, which should be wide and deep, and so your Plank Road is made.

Many minor points must, however, be attended to, to make your road as perfect as possible. The inner stringers should be higher than the outer ones, so as to carry the water off freely. They should be in two pieces, each 6 by 3, so as to break joints. The ends of the planks should not be laid to a line, but project a few inches, on each side alternately, so as to make it easy for wheels to get on the track, and to avoid forming a rut alongside. They need not be fastened down, but I would recommend spiking down, say every fifth or tenth plank, the rest being well driven home against these. The stringers are now made heavier than formerly, and the plank lighter. When hemlock plank get worn down two inches, the knots project so as to make the road too rough, and to require renewal. Allow one inch more to hold them in, and we have three inches thickness. Hemlock is generally used, as cheapest, but pine or oak would be better.

A single track will be sufficient for almost any amount of travel. The turnings out upon the earth road by the side of it are at such varied points, that its surface, if made properly crowning, will always remain in good condition. One hundred and sixty thousand teams passed over a Syracuse road in two years, averaging more than two hundred a day; and for three days in succession seven hundred passed over it; and all this was on a single track.

Cost.—The cost of the road will of course vary with the price of lumber. On the plan recommended, it will require 127,000 feet of plank, and 32,000 feet of stringers, per mile; in all say 160,000 feet board measure. Other items of cost are the leveling the road bed, and laying the plank, which costs from fifty cents to one dollar per rod. The excavations and embankments necessary to give the road proper grades, and the bridges and sluices, cannot be estimated without the data of a survey. Omitting these, as also gate-houses, we will have the following rough estimate of the cost per mile:

| | |
|---|---|
| Lumber, 160,000 feet, at $9 per M | $1,440 |
| Leveling and laying, at 75c. per rod | 240 |
| Engineering and superintendence | 100 |
| In all | 1,780 |
| Add for contingencies, 10 per cent | 178 |
| Total | $1,958 |

Or, say $2,000 per mile, with lumber at $9, and omitting extra excavations and embankments, and gate-houses. The difference of a dollar per M in the price of lumber, makes a difference of one hundred and sixty dollars per mile.

Duration.—As to durability, seven years for hemlock would be a safe estimate, though our experience is yet very limited. One set of stringers will outlast two or three coverings of plank. But, to be profitable, the plank must have so much travel as to wear them out, before they rot out. The wear and tear of the first year equals that of the following six, as a tough, elastic, coating of woody fibres, &c., is soon formed, which protects the planks from wear. And the sooner they wear out, the better; for the sooner will their cost be thus repaid. On one road the passage of 160,000 teams wore it but one inch.

Profits.—Before hemlock planks have been worn out, they will earn, at the rate of tolls established by the general Plank Road law, from two thousand five hundred to three thousand dollars per mile, above repairs and expenses, or double their original cost, which they will thus reimburse, and leave as much more for dividends, which will, of course, be more or less large, according as the wearing out and concomitant earning is done in a shorter or longer time. On the Syracuse and Central Square Plank Road, the tolls on eight miles, for two years, ending last July, were $12,900; the expenses of salaries and repairs were $1,500, leaving $11,400. The planks were half worn out, so that their net profits before renewal would be $22,800, for the eight miles, or $2,850 per mile.

Advantages.—In improvements of this character, it is difficult to say who gains the most—whether it is the stockholder, the farmer, the city merchant, or the consumer of the produce brought in. The farmer can bring his potatoes, apples, grain, pork, wood, &c., to market, at seasons when he would otherwise be imprisoned at home by the state of the roads, and could not there work to advantage. He could also carry twice as heavy a load as ever before, and, therefore, at half the former cost. He could therefore sell cheaper, and make larger profits. The consumer would consequently get the articles that he uses at a lower price. For example, wood would be greatly lowered in cost by being brought from distant forests now inaccessible to us. So with other articles. Every inhabitant would therefore be benefited, as every one must be warmed and fed. The merchant will find his old country customers and many new ones coming at all times, and will share their increased profits. The stockholder, besides his gains as a member of one of these three classes, of producer, merchant, or consumer, will in addition receive his dividends from tolls. It is one of those rare business transactions by which all the parties gain.

DYSPEPSIA.

I have known, says Dr. Brigham, many students and professional men, who were afflicted with troublesome stomach complaints for several years, during which time they frequently believed that they had discovered a remedy for their disease. Sometimes they were to be cured by eating bran bread; at others by weighing all they eat, or by living on rice or porridge, or by living without coffee or tea, or by some slight change in the diet, about as important as putting a few grains more or less of salt in the egg they eat.

Most of these methods afford some relief for a while, and this is usually in proportion to the confidence with which they are imposed or embraced; but I do not know one solitary cure by these means alone.

The most instances of cure which I recollect, have been in those individuals whose minds have been permitted to rest from accustomed labor, or have been directed to new pursuits, or relieved from anxiety and care. Some have traveled far, and have recovered; voyages have restored others. Some have become husbands, and forgotten their stomach complaints; some have succeeded in business and are well; some are in or out of office, and thus their minds are freed from long-continued anxiety; while others remain as they were several years since, having just discovered for the twentieth time some new, and, as they believe, effectual remedy for indigestion; but which will assuredly disappoint them if they do not cease from mental toils, and for a while allow the exacted brain repose.

These views respecting the stomach affections among students in this country, will to many appear strange, perhaps absurd; but to some I trust they will be useful. I feel confident that they will be, if they induce those who are worn down by mental labor and anxiety, connected with long-continued disorder of the digestive organs, to throw aside their bitter blue pills, mustard seed, bran bread, &c., &c., and seek bodily health and future mental vigor in judicious exertion of the body, innocent amusements, cheerful company, ordinary diet, and mental relaxation.

BRADY'S LEAP.

Much has been said and written about Mc Cullough's leap, when pursued by the Indians, near Wheeling, Va., but, says the Detroit Bulletin, in temerity it does not exceed that of Captain Brady, a brother of the general, who was celebrated in his day for his gallant feats among the savages along the frontier of Pennsylvania. The Detroit Bulletin relates the following:

'Approaching one of the forests occupied by the Americans, one day, Captain Brady discovered, when to late to avoid it, that the Indians had laid an ambuscade for him. In front, near the left, large numbers of armed warriors lay watching their prey.

'As Brady approached, and got within the ambuscade, the Indians in the rear closed in behind him. He was surrounded on three sides, and on the fourth ran a river, the bank of which was eighty feet of nearly perpendicular descent. The savages felt certain of their prey, and rushed furiously towards him.

'Brady at once perceived the extent of his danger, but being mounted on a high mettled charger, he resolved not to be taken alive. He reined his horse towards the bank, and gave him the spur and rein; the gallant steed went off like an arrow, and approached the bank of the stream with such tremendous speed that he could not stop on the margin, but, with a furious bound, sprang off, rider and all, toward the torrent below.

'Fortunately, there grew a large crab-apple tree at the foot of the bluff, on the border of the river. The bushy top was thickly interlaced with a wild grape-vine; into the top of this tree fell the horse and his rider. The fall was thus completely broken. The captain toppled into the stream, reached the opposite shore amid a shower of bullets, and regained the land in safety.

NEW APPLICATION OF THE TELEGRAPH.

The Mayor of Boston, some time ago, recommended that some system of telegraphic signs should be adopted with respect to the numerous fire engine houses in that city—so that, for instance, from some central point, information might be communicated by the electric wires, to every station at one and the same time; and so that again, information might be transmitted, at one and the same time, from any one engine house to all the others, as well as to such central point; and thus make known on the instant, and all over the town, the moment when, and the place where, a fire breaks out. On the 21st of December, the Mayor submitted his report, stating that such a system had been completed, and would be tested before the end of the year. At the meeting of the Common Council, the members took a recess for a few minutes, and repaired to the telegraphic office to examine this new apparatus—which excited their surprise and admiration. It was put in operation, and while they were present, a communication was had with New York; the wires of that city being connected with this fire alarm apparatus in Boston. The correspondent in New York immediately sent on his reply by the same wires, the electrical action upon which instantly caused the deep-toned bell connected with the apparatus near the City Hall to be rung; this great fire alarm bell being thus sounded in this city by the operator at the telegraph office in New York! Directly after, and while the New York operator was ringing the bell, the other bells here were rung by persons ignorant of what was going on, and supposing there was in reality a fire in this city, the whole fire department at once turned out.

Mike Walsh.—Mike Walsh is the only living member of his family. His father was an opulent man, and once possessed a fortune of over eighty thousand dollars. He owned two farms in New Jersey, on one of which was a mill, valued, with its machinery and stores, at thirty-five thousand dollars. This had been insured for thirty years, and on the day of the expiration of this policy, he made arrangements to go to Newark to renew it. The business of his friend, which involved endorsements to the amount of twenty-two thousand dollars, detained him for a day. That night the mill burned down, and every dollar of its value was lost.

The friend for whom the endorsements had been made, subsequently proved insolvent, and this, with the law expenses, and other embarrassments, swallowed up the remainder of Mr. Walsh's property, and left him penniless. He shortly after died, a broken-hearted man. His children consisting of four brothers, of whom Mike was the youngest, and a girl, scattered in all directions, the latter alone staying with the mother. A singular fatality pursued them. One of the brothers fell by the side of Crockett, at the massacre of the Alamo; another was shot in a duel across a table in the South; the third was burnt in the Ben Sherrod; and the sister perished in the ill-fated Lexington. The mother soon followed, and left Mike, like Logan, the last of his race.

Something New.—The Cincinnati Commercial says that Messrs. Kôble & Miller have an establishment in that city, 'whose whole business, employing some ten thousand dollars worth of capital, is preparing sausage skins for the European market. They attend all the slaughter-houses, obtain the in'ards of all the hogs, prepare, and then ship them across the Atlantic, realizing a large profit in the transaction. We never were more astonished than in learning that such a branch of trade was carried on in our city. The people of Europe receive these sausage skins ready for use, as imported from Cincinnati. But this is not all; Western Avenue has another establishment not a whit less singular. It is the establishment of a little German, whose name we did not learn, whose entire business is cleaning the bladders of hogs, and making them fit for holding lard to ship to the English market. We learned that he was in a fair way to fortune, sending off per annum over one hundred and fifty thousand bladders.

Anecdote of Dr. Beecher.—Rev. Dr. Lyman Beecher, as he was going home one night, carrying a volume of an encyclopedia under his arm, saw a small animal in his path. The Dr. knew that it was a skunk, but very imprudently hurled the book at him. Whereupon the skunk opened his battery with a return fire so well directed that the Dr. was speedily compelled to beat a hasty retreat. When he arrived at home, his friends could hardly come near him. His clothes were so infected, that he was obliged to bury them. Some time after this occurence, one of Dr. Beecher's enemies published a pamphlet speaking very abusively of him. 'Why don't you publish a book, and put him down at once?' said one of his advisers. 'I have learned better,' said Dr. Beecher; 'several years ago I issued a whole quarto volume against a skunk, and I got the worst of it. I do not mean to try the experiment again.'

Editing a Newspaper.—We never could see the virtue of the boast which is so often made by papers and magazines, that so large a portion of their pages is original. Such originality is often maintained at the expense of worth. The best exchanges of our acquaintance are by no means those, which have the most original matter. There is more editorial tact and talent required to make proper and practical selections, than is put in requisition by the production of the vaunting original papers, who seem to regard originality as the only requisite for a good periodical. A good newspaper is always dependent on other resources than its own. And the boast of a periodical that it is entirely original, is too often like the boast of a library, if it should claim to have the productions of but one author.

THE WARM YOUNG HEART.

BY M. F. TUPPER.

A beautiful face and a form of grace,
Were a pleasant sight to see;
And gold, and gems, and diadems,
Right excellent they be;
But beauty and gold, though both be untold,
Are things of a worldly mart;
The wealth that I prize, above ingots or eyes,
Is a heart—a warm young heart!

Oh, face most fair, shall thy beauty compare
With affection's glowing light?
Oh riches and pride, how pale ye beside
Love's wealth, serene and bright?
I spurn thee away, as a cold thing of clay,
Though gilded and carved thou art;
For all that I prize, in its smiles and its sighs,
Is a heart—a warm young heart!

A COURT PREACHER.

During the reign of one of the Williams of Scotland, some dissatisfaction prevailed with the king and court, in relation to a young preacher. One day, as he was ascending the pulpit, the king gave him a text from which to preach extempore. The passage given was the account of Philip and the eunuch. Being a young man, and a novice in his profession, he was at first somewhat confused, especially as he was to speak in the presence of the king and court; but having reflected a moment, he began as follows:—'This subject presents us four wonders, all of which I shall briefly consider. The first wonder is, that a courtier should be found reading. The second, that he should be found reading the Bible. The third, that a courtier should confess his ignorance. And the fourth, and the greatest wonder of all, that a courtier should go to a preacher for instruction.' It is unnecessary to add that the court gave him no more texts, although they listened with sleepless attention to his exposition of this.

Consequences of Intemperance.—The following extract from the Report of Dr. Howe on Idiocy in Massachusetts, gives a fearful picture of the consequences of intemperance. Read it, ye who are accustomed to tamper with the unnatural and ruinous appetite:—

"Directly, and indirectly, alcohol is productive of a great proportion of the idiocy which now burdens the commonwealth. If, moreover, one considers how many children are born of intemperate parents, who, without being idiots, are deficient in bodily and mental energy, and are predisposed by their very organization to have cravings for alcoholic stimulants, it will be seen what an immense burden the drinkers of one generation throw upon the succeeding. Many a parent, by habitual stimulus applied to his own nervous system, forms and fashions his child in such wise, that he is more certain to be made a drunkard by the ordinary temptations of life, than the child of a temperate man would be, even if living from his youth upward within the temptations of a bar-room."

VARIETY.

Mr. Faulkner, in the Virginia Legislature, is urging the importance of some immediate action on the part of the State, with regard to fugitive slaves. He says that the slave population, in several parts of the State, is rapidly thinning out, especially since the recent legislation of Pennsylvania, proclaiming liberty to all who should cross her borders. He estimates the yearly loss to the State, through the connivance of the laws of the neighboring States, at $99,000.

The English newspapers inform us that by recent investigations, which have been carried on by the Royal Irish Fisheries Company, it has been ascertained that the Newfoundland fishing banks extend eastward across the Atlantic, to within a hundred miles of the coast of Ireland, and that fish enough can be taken on that coast to supply all the markets of the world.

The Detroit Free Press says that a gentleman well acquainted with the ice business, came on to this section of the country, and with men and implements passed up to the vicinity of Lake Huron, where a large temporary house was erected, and about eight thousand tons of a pure article secured. During the past summer this ice has been shipped to Cinncinnati, and sold in that market at from thirty to sixty dollars a ton.

The Louisville Courier mentions the arrival there of a drove of nineteen head of choice fat beeves belonging to C. T. Wooley, Esq., of Nicholasville, Jessamine county. They were all full-blooded Durhams, raised from the imported stock of Mr. Clay. The lot were sold at an average of ten dollars, net, realizing about $1,900 to Mr. Wooley. One of them, raised by Mr. Clay, weighed 2000 pounds.

By the fifth Annual Report of the Trustees and Superintendent of the Indiana State Asylum for the Education of the Deaf and Dumb, it appears that there are ninety-two mute pupils in the Institution, thirty-one females, and sixty-one males.

The Legislature of New Hampshire has appropriated five hundred dollars for the purchase of a splendid sword for presentation to General Franklin Pierce for services in the Mexican War.

At Boston, on Wednesday, January 3d, according to the Boston Journal, the thermometer indicated three degrees below zero. The harbor was sheeted over with ice above India wharf, but it was soon carried off by the ebb tide.

Among the bills which passed the N. Hampshire House of Representatives on Friday week, was one to 'protect chastity.' The Senate threw it out.

Pella, the Holland settlement in Iowa, is said to be in a very flourishing condition. During the coming season, says the Keokuk Register, a considerable body of emigrants, it is expected, will be added to their number.

Two boys residing in South Brooklyn got into an altercation, which resulted in one drawing a knife and stabbing the other in five or six places, so severely that he is not expected to recover.

A bear weighing over two hundred pounds was recently shot in the town of Punslinch.

TEACHERS' CLASSES.

Classes will be formed at the opening of the First Term and middle of the Second Term, to continue seven weeks, with daily lectures and instructions in relation to the duties of those intending to teach, accompanied by a thorough review of the Common English branches. Tuition, $2 50.

AGRICULTURAL AND ANALYTIC CHEMISTRY.

Instructions in this Department, will be equal to any that can be obtained in the State, but will not be fully opened until about the first of January. A circular explaining more fully this Department, will be forwarded to any wishing it, by applying to the Principal, at DeRuyter; or Gurdon Evans, Analytic Labratory, Yale College, New Haven, Ct.

Text books furnished at the lowest prices.

N. B. A daily stage leaves the railroad and canal at Chittenango, for this place, at 4 o'clock P. M.

BRITISH PERIODICAL LITERATURE.

REPUBLICATION OF

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor, and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Tory, Whig, and Radical—"Blackwood" and the "London Quarterly" are Tory; the "Edinburgh Review" Whig; and the "Westminster Review" Radical. The "North British Review" is more of a religious character, having been originally edited by Dr. Chalmers, and now, since his death, being conducted by his son-in-law, Dr. Hanna, associated with Sir David Brewster. Its literary character is of the very highest order. The "Westminster," though reprinted under that title only, is published in England under the title of the "Foreign Quarterly and Westminster," it being in fact a union of the two Reviews formerly published and reprinted under separate titles. It has, therefore, the advantage, by this combination, of uniting in one work the best features of both as heretofore issued.

The above Periodicals are reprinted in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals, Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac simile of the Edinburgh edition.

TERMS.

| | | |
|---|---|---|
| For any one of the four Reviews, | $3 00 | per annum. |
| For any two, " | 5 00 | " |
| For any three, " | 7 00 | " |
| For all four of the Reviews, | 8 00 | " |
| For Blackwood's Magazine, | 3 00 | " |
| For Blackwood and three Reviews, | 9 00 | " |
| For Blackwood and the four Reviews, | 10 00 | " |

Payments to be made in all cases in advance.

CLUBBING.

Four copies of any or all of the above works will be sent to one address, on payment of the regular subscription for three—the fourth copy being gratis.

EARLY COPIES.

Our late arrangement with the British publishers of Blackwood's Magazine, secures to us early sheets of that work, by which we are enabled to place the entire number in the hands of subscribers before any portion of it can be reprinted in any of the American Journals. For this and other advantages secured to our subscribers, we pay so large a consideration, that we may be compelled to raise the price of the Magazine.

☞ Something may therefore be gained by subscribing early.

ALLEDGED CHANGE OF THE SABBATH AT THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

[Section X. of J. A. Begg's Treatise on the Sabbath.]

"The Jews stirred up the devout and honorable women, 'and the chief men of the city'—the chief men being the first in rank in the city." Acts 13: 50.

"And from thence to Philippi, which is the chief ['the first,' marg.] city of that part of Macedonia." Acts 16: 12.

"Some of them believed and consorted with Paul and Silas; and of the devout Greeks a great multitude, and of the chief women not a few." Acts 17: 4.

"When they were come to him he said unto them, Ye know from the first day that I came unto Asia, after what manner I have been with you at all seasons." Acts 20: 18.

"Then the high priest and the chief of the Jews, informed him against Paul." Acts 25: 2.

"That Christ should suffer and that He should be the first that should rise from the dead." Acts 26: 23.

"And commanded that they which could swim should cast themselves first into the sea and get to land." Acts 28: 43.

"In the same quarters were possessions of the chief man of the island, whose name was Publius." Acts 27: 43.

"It came to pass that after three days, Paul called the chief of the Jews together." Acts 28: 17.

"But I say, did not Israel know? FIRST, Moses saith, I will provoke you to jealousy by them that are no people." Rom. 10: 19.

"If any thing be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace." 1 Cor. 14: 30.

"I delivered unto you first of all, that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures." 1 Cor. 15: 3.

"And so it is written, The first man, Adam, was made a living soul; the last Adam was made a quickening spirit. Howbeit, that was not first which was spiritual, but that which is natural; and afterwards that which is spiritual. The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven." 1 Cor. 15: 45—47.

"Honor thy father and mother, which is the first commandment with promise." Eph. 6: 2.

"Always in every prayer of mine for you all, making request with joy for your fellowship in the gospel from the first day until now." Phil. 1: 4, 5.

"This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners; of whom I am chief. Howbeit for this cause I obtained mercy, that in me first Jesus Christ might shew forth all long suffering." 1 Tim. 1: 15, 16.

"For Adam was first formed, then Eve." 1 Tim. 2: 13.

"Having damnation, because they have cast off their first faith." 1 Tim. 5: 12.

"The husbandman that laboreth must be first partaker of the fruits." 2 Tim. 2: 6.

"At my first answer, no man stood by me, but all men forsook me." 2 Tim. 4: 16.

"For if that first covenant had been faultless, then should no place have been sought for the second." "In that he saith a new covenant, He hath made the first old." Heb. 8: 7, 13.

"Then verily the first covenant had also ordinances of divine service, and a worldly sanctuary. For there was a tabernacle made, the first wherein was the candle-stick and the table and the shew-bread." "The Holy Ghost this signifying, that the way into the holiest of all was not yet made manifest, while as the first tabernacle was yet standing." "And for this cause He is the mediator of the New Testament, that by means of death for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first testament, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance." "Whereupon neither the first testament was dedicated without blood." Heb. 9: 1, 2, 6, 8, 15, 18.

"Then said He, Lo I come to do thy will, O God. He taketh away the first, that He may establish the second." Heb. 10: 9.

"We love Him because He first loved us." 1 John 4: 19.

"I am Alpha and Omega, the first and the last." Rev. 1: 11.

"I have somewhat against thee, because thou hast left thy first love. Remember therefore from whence thou art fallen, and repent and do the first works." Rev. 2: 4, 5.

"I know thy works and charity and service and faith and thy patience and thy works; and the last to be more than the first." Rev. 2: 19.

"And the first voice which I heard was as it were of a trumpet talking with me." Rev. 4: 1.

"And in the midst of the throne, and round about the throne, were four living ones, full of eyes before and behind. And the first living one was like a lion, and the second living one like a calf." Rev. 4: 6, 7.

"And the seven angels which had the seven trumpets prepared themselves to sound. The first angel sounded, and there followed hail and fire mingled with blood, and they were cast upon the earth." Rev. 8: 6, 7.

"And I beheld another beast coming up out of the earth; and he had two horns like a lamb, and he spake as a dragon. And he exerciseth all the power of the first beast before him, and causeth the earth and them which dwell therein to worship the first beast, whose deadly wound was healed." Rev. 13: 11, 12.

"And I heard a great voice out of the temple saying to the seven angels, Go your ways and pour out the vials of the wrath of God upon the earth. And the first went and poured out his vial upon the earth." Rev. 16: 12.

"And they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again, until the thousand years were finished. This is the first resurrection. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with Him a thousand years." Rev. 20: 4, 5.

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth; for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away." Rev. 21: 1.

"And there shall be no more death, neither sorrow nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things are passed away." Rev. 21: 4.

"And the foundations of the wall of the city were garnished with all manner of precious stones. The first foundation was jasper; the second saphire." Rev. 21: 19.

In these lists of texts, then, we have given, by the aid of a Greek Concordance, every instance in which mia, "one," occurs in the New Testament, together with those in which protos, "first," is used. It is thus made evident, that these two words have distinct significations, and are by no means used interchangeably. Even the mere English reader is hereby enabled to determine their precise significations, and to form a judgment for himself of the manner in which they are respectively employed, not only by the Evangelists, but by all the inspired writers. Our arrangement of the texts shows that these words are uniformly used with the utmost precision, so that, as already noticed, both repeatedly occur in the same connection, each with its own appropriate meaning. Thus Matthew, in the 17th chapter, thrice uses mia to express "one" in the 4th verse: "One for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias;" while in the 17th verse of the same chapter he uses the other word, protos, for "first," when he says, "Take up the fish that first cometh up." Again, in the 19th chapter of the same Gospel, at the 6th verse, mia is used where husband and wife are said to be "one flesh;" while, in the 30th verse, protos is used to declare that "many that are first shall be last." In the 20th chapter, at the 8th and 10th verses, protos is employed in stating the order of payment of the laborers, "beginning at the last unto the first;" while in the complaint of the murmurers, mia is used, when they say, "These last have wrought but one hour." Ver. 12. And when the Evangelist would speak of "the first day of the feast of unleavened bread," it is not mia, but protos that he employs. Matt. 26: 17.

The very same precision in the use of these words is obvious in the Gospel of Mark. In the 9th chapter, at the 5th verse, he also employs mia to express "one for thee, and one for Moses, and one for Elias;" while, in the 35th verse of the same chapter, he uses protos when he says, "If any man desire to be first." In the 10th chapter, also, at the 8th verse, he uses mia in declaring husband and wife to be "no more twain, but one flesh;" while, in the 31st verse, he twice uses protos, in repeating that "many that are first shall be last, and the last first." In the 14th chapter, at the 66th verse, he employs mia when he would tell of "one of the maids of the high priest;" but when, at the 12th verse, he would speak of "the first day of unleavened bread," he does not use mia, but protos, to express "first."

The same principle of comparison might be carried through the other Gospels, and with the same result. We do not therefore wait to cite all the instances, but may notice the precise use of both words, in their respective meanings, in the same verse in Luke 14. "And they all with (mia) one consent began to make excuse. The (protos) first said unto him, I have bought a piece of ground." Ver. 18. We may also call attention to the fact, that while in John 20: 1, mia is the Greek word which, in reference to the resurrection, is erroneously translated "first day," we have, only a few verses before, protos, which, as we have seen, truly signifies "first," appropriately rendered with this its proper signification; "then came the soldiers, and brake the legs of the first." John 19: 22. And, in an instance already quoted, when the angel led Peter "past the first and second ward," "and they went out and passed on through one street," (Acts 12: 10,) we have both words used in their distinctive meanings, with the same precision.*

But there are instances in which "the first day" really is expressed in the Greek, and so translated in the English New Testament. An examination of these texts shows, that the form of expression is totally different from that used in the account of the resurrection. Paul, addressing the Elders of Ephesus, says, "Ye know from the first day that I came into Asia, after what manner I have been with you." Acts 20: 18. In the Greek, we have not here mia but protos for "first." "Apo protes hemeras" is the phrase for "from the first day"—day, as well as first, being expressed in the text.

So in the Epistle to the Philippians, Paul says, he thanked God for their "fellowship in the Gospel from the first day until now." Phil. 1: 5. Here the Greek is exactly the same, apo protes hemeras, "from the first day," not mia, "one." So in the Gospel of Mark, we read that the disciples came to Christ, to receive his directions as to the killing of the passover lamb, "the first day of unleavened bread." Mark 14: 12. Here, also, we have in the original "te prote hemera," for "the first day," not mia "one." And in the Gospel of Matthew, the parallel text, reads "te prote ton azumon," translated, "the first day of the feast of unleavened bread." Matt. 26: 17. "Day" is not in the Greek, neither is "feast," both words being marked in italics in the English version, expressing that they have been supplied by the translators. The Greek simply expresses "the first of unleavened bread." The text being perfectly parallel to that quoted from the Gospel by Mark, in which "day" is expressed, has that word correctly supplied. But it is protos, and not mia, that is used for "first," in this instance, also.

It is thus made abundantly obvious, that these words ought not to be confounded, being used in the original of the New Testament with discriminating care, and that the translators, in rendering mia by the English word "first" in the texts relating to our Lord's resurrection, have wholly departed from their own ordinary understanding of the acceptation of the term. In most other cases, they have been compelled by its obvious import to render it "one," and not by "first;" and their departure from this rule, in reference to the account of the resurrection of Christ, could alone arise from an idea already entertained and otherwise received by them, that our Lord did arise on the first day of the week. Our present question is not concerning the correctness of this opinion, abstractly considered; but, from the evidence now produced under the sanction of their own hands, we feel warranted in asserting, that consistency as translators, demanded that in those cases concerning the resurrection, as in others, the word should have been rendered "one." The usage of each of the Evangelists, whose language they translate, in regard to that word had been already ascertained before they reach the account of the death of Christ, (for it is not a word of rare occurrence,) and, however little it would have given assistance to the theory they entertained, nothing but the most absolute necessity could justify so evident a departure from the unvarying meaning it elsewhere bears.

The inspired writers are undoubtedly the best interpreters of their own language, and the frequency with which the word occurs precludes the necessity of having recourse for its meaning to the writings of those who were uninspired. It is the meaning of the word in the mouths or from the pens of inspired men, we are seeking to interpret, and we feel bound to endeavor faithfully to translate accordingly. We have seen, that instead of "first," which our translators have employed, "one" is the word used in the original; and surely, whatever ground for question there may be as to the true signification, the sacred writers, whose meaning we seek to astertain, are the most proper parties to whom first to look for help. A very strong reason alone could authorize us to depart from their common usage of a word frequently occurring in their writings.

If, in a short history, such as any one of the Gospels, by any other author, we found a uniform meaning attached to a particular word, (even if it were erroneously applied,) absolute necessity alone would justify a different understanding in any single instance. Now we have seen, that in the Gospel of Matthew the word in question has been employed fourteen times before he has occasion to speak of our Lord's resurrection; and in no one of these has he used it in the sense of "first." While, as we have also seen, a word of which "first" is the appropriate import, is always used where that is the idea intended to be conveyed—and so also, not only in the other Gospels, but throughout the New Testament. Can we, then, in such circumstances, be justified, without some evident necessity, in supposing that when the Evangelist does come to speak of the resurrection, he abandons entirely his former use of the word, already so often and so uniformly employed, and that he now means "first day of the week" when he writes "mia ton Sabbaton?"

[To be continued.

* Scott, the author of a version of the Gospel by Matthew, (London, 1741,) states that the Syriac of Matt. 28: 1, has chad (one,) while in that language chadmoyo is the word for first. The same correspondence with the word in the original is observed in more than one of the Latin versions.

A CHINESE WEDDING.

The marriage ceremony is an imperative duty with every Chinese; not to have a son to worship at his tomb, is the dread of all; and the sooner this difficulty is overcome, the better. The terms honorable and illustrious are used to the father, while the bachelor is looked upon with a certain horror. Sons are looked on as profitable and honorable, while daughters are almost the contrary, and the rearing them is a matter of question with the parents, literally, whether they will pay or not; according to the accomplishments of the lady, so is her price or remuneration to her parents. Bearing the same surname is about the only bar to marriage in general; and although this may appear to be a trifling one, still, from the few surnames in China, it is a grave impediment. Marriageable age is from fifteen on either side. A go-between, or public match-maker, frequently arranges the affair, but generally it is settled by one of the parents. Love has not often a hand in the matter. The anxious parents of the youth having, by one means or other, procured a bride for him, presents of geese, cakes, samshoo, &c., pass between the families. I was present at the wedding of a worthy grocer at Chusan, who, from time to time during our stay, had supplied our mess in the general line. As soon as it was given out that he was about to marry, all friends, of various grades, sent congratulatory cards, enclosing, each according to his means, from a hundred to a thousand or more Li (3d.) cash. This, he told me, was purchasing a seat at the bridal feast for the donor and his wife. Early in the morning, the young female friends attend to dress the bride, and weep—why the latter, I know not. When all is ready, the bride enters a carved red and gilt sedan, (to be hired in all villages, and used for marriages only.) First walk the band, not very emblematic of harmony, perhaps, but that does not matter, followed by the household goods, and the wearing apparel of the bride, carried in red painted boxes, attended by her relations and friends. When arrived at the house of the bridegroom, he opens the door of the sedan, and, receiving his bride, steps with her over a pan of charcoal, conveniently placed on the threshold; then, entering the house, they eat rice and drink tea together; which, with some verbal promises, conclude the nuptials. On calling on the bridegroom at his residence, and expressing a desire to see the bride, I was conducted into a well-furnished apartment, about which were strewed the newly-arrived effects, and on one side a grand bedstead, ornamented with red and gold, in front of which, arrayed in a dress of red silk, and head-dress of gilt and silk, stood the bride, attended by her female friends; this is the ceremonial costume, and is often hired, beneath which she is attired in silks and satins. Having been presented, and taken the liberty of presenting to the lady a small English purse, which was graciously received, I made my bow and took leave of the lady. I next joined the bridegroom at an entertainment given to his friends, (i. e., all who had sent cards and money.) Much samshoo was drank, and after the feasting was over, a kind of game was played—one party threw out a number of fingers, and called them, while at the same time, the other anticipated, and threw out a similar number; the failure in doing so incurred the obligation of drinking a cup of samshoo. In another apartment, at the same time, the bride entertained her friends. In the evening a temporary theatre is erected, and performances, fire-works, and the din of gongs and music, continue till daylight, when all disperse. On the ensuing day, servants, sedan-bearers, performers, and all who have waited the preceding day, are feasted, and thus concludes the ceremony. [Forbes' Five Years in China.

PERSECUTIONS IN CALCUTTA.

At the last meeting of the Church Missionary Society in England, some interesting statements were made on this subject.

In Calcutta they had about one hundred young men—educated young men, who had embraced the truth as it is in Jesus, but for so doing, they had to suffer persecution, the severity of which could not be conceived by Englishmen. One young man—a remarkably intelligent young man, named Brigonath Ghose, expressed a wish to become a Christian. His friends were all opposed to such a wish, and were so violent, that he was obliged to flee from home. They gave him an asylum in the Missionary House, and he took refuge there. His friends were very much incensed, and applied to the Judge for an Habeas Corpus, which was granted. In the meantime they changed his horoscope—or in other words they altered the date of his birth in order to make him under age. They falsified it so as to make him under the legal age, and the court gave him back to his friends. When being taken away by them, his screams were fearful, and his sufferings during the two years they kept him were exceedingly great. He was kept constantly tied up, curses and imprecations of the most dreadful nature were heaped upon him, every sort of threat was held over him, but at the end of two years he escaped, and being mindful of the truths which he had been taught, he immediately sought the missionary, and being now of age, he was baptized in the Lord. Although still a consistent and pious Christian, the remarkable intelligence which God had given him was destroyed by the drugs administered to him during the two years of his captivity.

Another young man was a most useful minister of Jesus Christ. He was named Rev. Krishna Mohana Banerjea. From 1833 his conduct had been perfectly consistent, and a more intelligent man and good Christian he was not acquainted with. Like all Indians, he was married at a very early period of life. When the proper time arrived, he applied to the friends for his wife, but because he had become a Christian, they refused his request with scorn. He was not contented with this, but desired to hear from her own lips whether it was of her own will that the refusal was given. He was not allowed to see her even for this purpose, and therefore applied to the magistrate. Being a woman, she could not be brought into open Court, but she was brought up under the Purdar, and on the questions being put to her, to the rage of her friends, she declared she would go with her husband, and she was now a good Christian lady, and an example to all around her.

On Trinity Sunday last, the Rev. Mr. Pratt received into the Church of Christ a most intelligent Indian, named Koilas Chunder Ghose. A prize was offered for an essay to be written by natives on the state of darkness and misery of the Indian mind. Five young men competed for the prize—two of them attributed all the evils of society and the native ignorance to bad government; but most singular to say, the other three ascribed the fact to its true cause, the prevalence of idolatry. The young man of whom he spoke obtained the prize; he said it was impossible that the natives could ever become intelligent or happy under a system of idolatry, and that it was the possession and knowledge of the Christian Bible which had made England, a little insignificant island, the most powerful nation on the earth. Only four months after he obtained the prize for the essay, he came forward and said he could resist the voice of conscience no longer; he felt constrained to join the flock of Christ. He had been a teacher in a Hindoo College, at a salary of £130 per annum, but he was deprived of the office as soon as he became a follower of Jesus; they feared to permit the truth amongst them.

There was another young man, named Jopinath Mitter, a very talented man, possessed of much poetic taste, who had been brought up at one of the Hindoo Colleges. He was desirous of becoming a Christian, but he said if he went home to his father and mother he would never be permitted to return. Acting up to the rule which guides them, the missionary told him he could not be baptized until all means of overcoming the hostility of his parents had been tried. He was afraid to go home, and he was sheltered in the Mission House, where his friends had free access to him at all times. They were numerous, and so fierce with rage, that they were obliged to obtain the assistance of a guard to protect the house. They visited him frequently, and tried every method to entice him away; amongst other things, they offered him a carriage for himself, with much wealth. Finding all their efforts vain, for he was steadfast in the faith, they heaped curses and imprecations of the most awful and horrid nature upon him, and held out the most ferocious threats if he became a Christian. He stood firm and received the rite of baptism, and he was now a teacher in one of the Colleges of India.

The poor natives had to endure much more than scorn for the sake of Jesus. Constituted as society was there, so different from any thing in this country, it was scarcely possible for one who had not been in India to conceive what converts had to endure for conscience's sake.

AN EXORBITANT MINISTER.

"I PAY him my forty dollars a year, and he is not satisfied with that, but is constantly teazing for something more."

Such was the complaint which a communicant in a Dutch Reformed Church in the State of New York uttered against his pastor. The Rev. Mr. W. was a minister, who preached for souls rather than for hire. His stipend he looked upon, not as the end of his pastoral labors, but simply the means of supporting him in it, which aimed at a higher and holier end. He preached to his people, not to get their money, but to fit them for heaven.

But his Dutch congregation could not comprehend this. They wanted that he should be satisfied with the MONEY they gave him, without teazing them about any thing else. They consequently became restive under his faithful preaching, and ultimately discharged him.

A member of the congregation was asked the cause of ther disaffection. "Is not Mr. W. a good man, and a good preacher? Is he not laborious, and attentive to his duties? What fault do you find in him?"

"Why, when we pay a man well for preaching," was the answer, "we want that he should be satisfied, and not be teazing us all the time to do something more. I pay him forty dollars, and that is as much as I ought to be asked to do."

"But what more does he ask of you?"

"Why, it is duties, duties, duties, all the time."

"What duties?"

"Why, he says we must pray. I pay him forty dollars a year to do my praying for me, and after all that he has the impudence to tell me I must do my own praying."

We have sometimes feared that there are other congregations, not a thousand miles off, that want a minister for anything else rather than to teach them specifically what they ought to do.

A MEMBER FOR LIFE.

A young gentleman who was fonder of the society of the ladies than of good sermons, invited the daughter of one of our millionaires to attend church with him, to hear a sermon by a distinguished divine of the orthodox fath. It so happened, that the eloquent clergyman preached that afternoon what is termed a charity sermon; and our young gentleman, not having come prepared for such an occasion, requested from his fair companion the loan of the wherewith to respond to the call of the contribution box.

'Have you any money?' said he to the Miss, and if so, will you have the kindness to loan me a trifle?'

'I have a bill, said the lady, offering him a bank-note, which he suddenly took, and dropped into the plate. The next day he called on the lady to pay up.

'How large a note was that you loaned me yesterday?' said he, drawing a dollar bill from his wallet.

'Fifty dollars,' was the reply.

Mr. H———'s hands fell upon his lap, and for several minutes he looked steadily in the lady's face without uttering a word. At length he gave a long low whistle—rose slowly from his seat—bade the lady good-night—said he would call again—and left the house.

Now fifty dollars, to Mr. ———, was no trifle, for he was 'only a clerk,' on a small salary, but he 'scratched round,' raised the money, and paid it over. That was the last contribution he ever made to any charitable fund, and as for charity sermons, they are his abhorrence. He considers himself a life member of every benevolent institution in the country.

MISTAKE CORRECTED—AN ANECDOTE.

The late excellent Dr. Jonathan Going, several years ago attended an Association, where some of the brethren were not overburdened with scriptural information, or with any considerable love of study; and, as a natural consequence, they were warm opponents of written sermons, insisting on the far superior advantages of an extemporaneous address. The Doctor's views did not coincide with theirs, and his arguments against them were not withheld. After the contest was over, Dr. G. was pressed to preach; which he did, and delivered his sermon with great freedom, without a note before him, and with marked effect.

When he came out of the pulpit the brethren swarmed about him, and said, 'Well, brother Going, what do you say now? If this sermon had been written, you could not have preached it in this way, nor could we all feel as we do now.' 'Indeed!' said the Doctor, in a quiet, arch tone, 'and yet, I can assure you, that every word of this sermon was written several years ago, and this is the forty-seventh time I have preached it!' The brethren had nothing more to say. [Memorial.

There is something so great in a single good action, that the man who, in his whole course of life, has performed one, cannot be wholly despicable.

RETURNING TO JUDAISM.

The Occident and American Jewish Advocate tells us that in Prussia, since the relaxation of the laws relating to reconversion, many Jews who had in years past joined the Christian churches, have come back to the Jewish communion. 'Formerly no Christian, of course including baptized Jews, could embrace Judaism without being dismissed regularly from his church; but the churches were prohibited granting this license; consequently conversions to Judaism were by law prohibited. But now that in Prussia all religions are alike, any one can profess Judaism if he pleases, and several have already taken advantage of this better state of things; among the rest a family consisting of five, a father, mother, son and daughter, and a son-in-law, who had been nominal Christians for fourteen years.'

Such facts will very naturally raise the question, how many of those Jews who have nominally embraced Christianity are really converts to it. In some countries, where Judaism has been proscribed, and various disabilities have been imposed upon its adherents, the temptation to profess Christianity has no doubt been very great. It would not be surprising, if in such countries the proportion of real converts should be small in comparison with the number who profess conversion. But instead of being astonished, that some profess to embrace Christianity without really believing in it, we are astonished, in view of the temptations which beset them, that so few make that profession. Surely, if the Jews were, as a nation, the sordid and godless set they are often represented as being, they would see their interest clear enough, and be sufficiently pliable, to profess Christianity, and thus escape persecution and secure important advantages. The fact that they are not swayed by such considerations, convinces us that there is yet among them a good deal of faith in their system, and of conscientiousness in adhering to it. It is common, we know, to account for their adherance to Judaism, by supposing them to be peculiarly stubborn and unyielding towards all other forms of religious belief. But it is not common for one nation to mingle with other nations, generation after generation, and yet to maintain such a stubborn attachment to their national peculiarities as to prevent their seeing and consulting their pecuniary and civil interests. Simple stubbornness, therefore, does not appear to us to be a sufficient explanation of the facts in the case—the cause is not equal to the effect. If it should be said, that the inconsistencies of nominal Christians keep the Jews from embracing Christianity, we think a cause quite as adequate to the effect would be assigned; for it cannot be denied, that a spirit of persecution and conquest on the part of those who profess to be the disciples of the meek and lowly Prince of Peace, and a spirit of disobedience to God's law on the part of those who profess to be his redeemed children, have done much to disgust the Jews with Christianity, and prevent their examining it with candor. Still, giving all due weight to the stubbornness of the Jews, and the inconsistencies of Christians, we do not think the real cause is reached. There must be, beyond this, no inconsiderable amount of conscientiousness and faith, to support this people in the face of so many temptations. We are, therefore, more astonished at the fewness of those Jews who, from unworthy motives, profess to embrace Christianity, than at the number of those who return to Judaism when these motives have ceased to influence them.

Now, to come back to the question with which we started, as to the proportion of real to nominal conversions from Judaism to Christianity, we will only say, that we should not be surprised to learn that many of those who profess Christianity in countries where such profession removes from them disabilities and the danger of persecution, were only nominally converted; while in those countries where no disabilities attach to the Jew, we should expect to find the proportion of real conversions much larger. True religion flourishes best where it is least under the influence of the State. Just in proportion, therefore, as the Jews become emancipated, shall we look for an increased ratio of real conversions. Of course, with such views, we cannot fail to regard with deep interest the movements throughout Europe on their behalf. We rejoice to chronicle the fact, that their emancipation has been decreed in Rome, Sardinia, Tuscany, Lombardy, and some other places. Gladly would we chronicle an act for their universal emancipation from the disabilities which have so long and so heavily pressed upon them. Most of all would it give us pleasure to announce, that they were fully emancipated from those disabilities which result from prejudice against them, even where no law exists to their injury. But we fear the day of such an announcement is far distant. Still we are confident it will come. The Lord hasten it.

Colonization.—The American Colonization Society held an Anniversary Meeting last week, in the Hall of the House of Representatives at Washington. Hon. Elisha Whittlesey presided, and speeches were made by R. W. Thompson of Indiana, Secretary Walker, J. R. Ingersoll, McLane of Maryland, and Hugh Maxwell. From the Report of the Secretary, it appears that four hundred and forty-three emigrants have been sent to Liberia the past year, of whom three hundred and twenty-four were slaves liberated for the purpose of colonization. Of the whole number one hundred and thirteen were free colored, and two recaptured Africans. These were sent from thirteen different States, and the greatest number were sent from Virginia. Of the whole number, only twelve have died. The applications for emigration already number five hundred and sixty-seven, and there is a probability of five hundred more. The receipts of the Colonization Society during the year are estimated at $50,114; while the expenditures have been $51,953. A number of Auxiliary Societies have been formed during the past year.

"HO! FOR CALIFORNIA!"

The gold fever runs as high as ever, and is taking off multitudes to California. In a daily paper of last week, we noticed a list of about one thousand persons who had sailed from Boston, New York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore, within a short time. Other companies are making all haste to leave, and it is impossible to estimate the number of adventurers who will land in California before the year closes. Meanwhile the dispatches received from California, and published under the sanction of the Government at Washington, confirm the most extravagant accounts heretofore given of the gold diggings. We notice, however, that these dispatches contain occasional statements not altogether congenial to the tastes of those who think of going. They say that provisions are scarce and high—that board is four dollars a day, and washing six dollars a dozen—that much sickness prevails, and half of the diggers are laid up with fevers—that, in short, there is a great deal besides gold, in California. Still, the general character of the dispatches is such as will be likely to increase rather than allay the excitement. Let those who think of going make up their minds to endure a great many privations, and run a great many risks, before they can feast their eyes upon the shining dust. And let them not forget the possibility, also, that if they should have a chance to look upon it, and even to pocket a pretty good supply, they may bring home with it diseases which they would pay a high price to be rid of. If, however, after weighing such considerations, they determine to go, it will be useless to oppose them, for opposition will only increase the fever. For our part, we think that if there is gold enough in California to justify men in going out now at the risk of suffering and starvation, there will be enough for us a year hence, when the means of comfortable traveling and living are provided.

LETTERS FROM ILLINOIS—NO. 4.

Pleasant Hill, near Farmington, Ill.,
1st of 1st mo., 1849.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Having given your readers a brief sketch of the location, commercial facilities, climate, and salubrity, of this part of Illinois, in pursuance of my plan I propose to give them in this letter a view of its agricultural advantages. A strong, deep soil of friable earth, widely-distributed streams, an abundant supply of sweet well-water, and a naturally drained or drainable surface formation, are among the first considerations which should determine the choice of an emigrant farmer, when looking for a profitable tract of land. So far as I am capable of judging, from the observations that I have been able to make through the counties of Fulton, Peoria, and Knox, these counties afford such advantages to an extent unrivaled by any other part of the earth that I have seen. The lands are usually spoken of here under four general divisions, or classes, viz. the prairies, the barrens, the groves, and the bottoms—sometimes only in three, the prairies, the barrens, and the timbered lands.

The prairies in these parts are from three to seven miles wide, covered with natural grass, the blade of which is as thickly set to twenty inches above the ground, as the best cultivated meadows at the east, and the seed-stalks of which rise from four to six or seven feet high. Many thousands of acres of this class of land are without a single twig of wood of any kind growing on it; other parts of them have clumps of a very small dwarf willow, hazel brush, wild plum trees, and crab trees, growing upon them. Sometimes these occupy but a few rods; sometimes several acres. The surface is as smooth as the best cultivated pasture fields of Pennsylvania and New Jersey. The soil is black loam, usually three or more feet deep, without a stone upon it. A person may plough and search a thousand acres, and not find a stone or a pebble as large as a hen's egg. From the very unctuous feeling and appearance of this sort of soil, as well as from the weak growth of all the cereal grains, grasses, and culinary roots, which are cultivated upon it, I judge that it possesses an extraordinary amount of what agricultural chemists call geine; that is, the earthy food of plants. So rich is this sort of soil, that I have not found a farmer that has as yet thought of manuring it. They affirm that it would be a positive injury, inasmuch as it would produce an overgrowth of straw or stalk.

The term barrens, given to the second class of lands, appears to me to be a very inappropriate term, inasmuch as the soil of the greater portion of these lands is, for wheat and clover equal to the soil of the best wheat-growing districts of Pennsylvania and New York. The surface soil of this class, is not so deep as the other, usually has a considerable intermixture of yellow clay, and lies upon a subsoil of small friable lime-stone and whiteish clay. The wheat grown on this class of lands is reported to be surer of a full, plump berry, than that grown on the best prairies. This soil receives and holds manure exceedingly well, and produces good crops of corn; but in a dry season it feels the drought when the best prairies are not in the least affected by it. The true appellation for this description of lands, appears to me to be glades, as I understand by that term small plains, or openings, in the woods; and the lands which are here termed barrens are almost all so situated. They have a small growth of hickory, oak, cotton wood, and other kinds, and frequently interspersed with trees of the same sorts, of full growth. They usually have a larger proportion of broken land, called ravines, than the prairies, and are sometimes quite uneven.

The third class of land is of two sorts—the groves and the bottoms. The groves are comparatively narrow strips of timber, growing on the edges of the smaller streams and the broken bluffs, and it is usually of a somewhat smaller growth than that of the bottoms or flat low lands of the larger streams. The only reason, that I can see, why these lands are timbered rather than the best prairies, is that their natural formation prevents the spread of the annual fires, by their broken ridges, running streams, and the less luxuriant growth of wild grass. I observe, that all the growing timber on the glades and other open places accessible to the fires, is more or less injured by being burnt near the butts, and in some places it is wholly killed by the same cause. There are persons who have represented that the country suffers a great disadvantage from the want of timber; but that is plainly a mistake. Good white-oak fire-wood is delivered at the village residences for one dollar and fifty cents per cord, and good hickory for a trifling addition to that price. Rails for fencing are sold in the woods at one dollar per hundred, and oak lumber at two dollars per thousand feet. And there is no danger of its growing scarcer, as the country abounds with good bituminous coal; and the small growth is found to be making very rapid progress where it is fenced from the cattle, and protected from the fires by the cultivation of the surrounding farms. White-thorn, bearing red haws, equal to the far-famed English white-thorn, is indigenous to the country, and very abundant. Several farmers and nursery-men are already cultivating it with great success. I have seen one hedge which, in three years from the planting, has grown five feet high; so that a farmer, by putting out line hedges, would have to fence his farm but once in his lifetime. I have no doubt but that this kind of fencing will soon be extensively adopted. Intermixed with the prairie grass, there is a great variety of flowering plants; but if the soil is turned over at the proper season—that is, between the fifth and the eighth months—they entirely die away, and leave the land perfectly clean. There are no Canada thistles, none of the bull thistles, or of the large spreading kinds. The only thing of the thistle kind that I have seen or heard of, has a slender, thinly-leaved stalk, growing to the hight of six or seven feet, and very much resembling the New York fire-weed. It is not troublesome, and grows only in protected situations. The only weed that I have seen at all encumbering the cultivated fields, is the colt-tail, which often comes very full and large after a crop of wheat; but I am told that it is never discoverable until after the wheat is cut and taken off.

The surface formation of the land, or what is commonly called 'the make of the country,' is for the most part of a very pleasing character. Sometimes it rolls up into a considerable hill, at the foot of which the traveler finds himself in a valley where the view is quite contracted; then, rising to the summit of the hill, the landscape spreads out as far as the power of natural vision extends. At other times, it will be a gentle swell several miles over, showing the whole surface of a number of beautiful farms, or the broad bosom of the natural prairie, inviting the hand of industry to come and turn the prolific soil into a fruitful field. Then again it is like the undulations of a gently-rolling sea, in the troughs of which there is generally a little stream. Indeed, I cannot see how the country could be better formed for all farming purposes. The ravines that are so much spoken of by prairie travelers, are the natural and necessary channels formed to carry off the superabundant waters that fall during the rainy seasons. The little streams are many of them fed by living springs, that furnish water for cattle at all seasons of the year, and some of them are dry in the driest times; but the wells, which are rarely more than twenty-five or thirty feet deep, have never been known to fail when properly made. The water is sweet and good; it has, however, a sufficient impregnation of lime to fur the tea-kettle, and generally needs cleansing for washing clothes. Although there are no stones on the surface, quarries of free-stone and lime-stone are found in the bluffs of most of the large ravines, so that there is an abundant supply for building and other purposes. At other points there are abundant materials for making bricks, which are now sold at from three to four dollars per thousand. Better, smoother natural roads, I have never seen; the soil is of that unctuous nature that as soon as it begins to dry it packs closely down under the pressure of the foot of man or beast, until attrition wears it into the dust of summer, or the mud of the rainy weather. Of course improved farms have no stumps to disfigure the enclosed lots, so that where there are a number of improved farms lying together, they present the appearance of fifty years' cultivation, rather than that of half a dozen. With these natural advantages, the hand of industry and economy easily and rapidly acquires competence and wealth.

The population of Peoria County is judged to be about eighteen thousand, and that of Fulton near twenty thousand. Fifteen hundred became residents of Peoria City last year; and on one day, just before the closing of navigation, sixty persons from Pennsylvania became residents of Canton, in Fulton Co. We have had good sleighing for ten days past, and the quantity of produce carried to the markets is truly surprising. One of the Messrs. Reeds, of Farmington, told me last week, that they were taking in over a thousand fat hogs per week. It is supposed that their purchases this season will amount to between eight and ten thousand fat hogs. A large proportion of the farmers here fat from fifty to a hundred each, and the business is steadily increasing. All kinds of merchantable produce commands cash, of which the following are the reported prices: Wheat 65c. per bushel, corn 20 a 22c., oats 15c., rye 37c., barley 25c. Potatoes 50c., butter 12 1-2c. per lb., pork $2 50 per 100 lbs., beef the same.

All that a farmer wants to consume in his own family, is worth to him here just as much as it is in the neighborhood of New York and Philadelphia markets; all the increased surplus, therefore, that he gains from his labors here above what it would be there, is so much clear gain in location, to those farmers and laborers who could not raise more than enough to carry them through the year, which is known to be the case of some hard-working men. What friend, then, would dissuade such from emigrating to a country where land is cheap, and its productions reward the honest laborer with abundance for himself and his family, and means to gratify his most liberal desires for the cause of God and truth. S. D.

TIME SHORT—DUTIES MANY.

Time is a fragment of eternity. How brief the space from the commencement of creation, until the trumpet shall sound, and time be no longer, compared with that duration, which has neither commencement nor termination! In this comparison, the period of individual existence here, dwindles into a mere point. And still shorter is the period yet remaining to us. The little time we are here permitted to occupy, is but the infancy of our existence. It is the period when our characters are formed, and our destiny virtually fixed for eternity. Life is the season of seed-sowing. "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. He that soweth to the flesh, shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." This precious season, then, ought not to be idled away, or misemployed, but faithfully improved in accordance with the will of God. Let us think a little of the much we have to do in the "moment's space" which is here allotted us.

The "first work" of the ungodly is to repent and believe the Gospel. Such are called upon, in view of their violations of God's holy law, their neglect of the "great salvation," their misimprovement of precious time, their pride and selfishness, to humble themselves before God, and "flee for refuge to the hope set before them" in the Gospel, with a fixed purpose to forsake all sin, and to "live henceforth to Him who died for them and rose again." If we have proceeded thus far, there is a great work before us. We are to "deny ourselves" daily, take up the cross, and follow Christ. We must "watch and pray that we enter not into temptation." We are required to engage in a warfare against the flesh. Evil passions are to be subdued. The tongue is to be restrained from uttering that which is vain, foolish, or scandalous. Evil habits must be abandoned. Sinful appetites, though they may have been long cherished, and become dear to us as a "right hand" or a "right eye," must be overcome. The divine mandate is, "Be ye temperate in all things." The Christian soldier is "set for the defense of the Gospel." He is directed to "contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints." He is sent out to oppose sin and error in all their varied forms. He "wrestles not against flesh and blood, but against principalities, against powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." The Christian life is a life of prayer. The relations we sustain to others, impose upon us corresponding responsibilities. Children are under obligation to "honor their parents." Husbands and wives are to love one another, and "live together as heirs of the grace of life." Parents are most sacredly bound to "instruct their children" in the truths of religion, and to "talk of them when they sit in their houses, when they walk by the way, when they lie down, and when they rise up." Children are to be trained up, not for the pursuit of riches or worldly honors, but for God's service, and the benefit of mankind. This training is not the work of a day, but it is a long series of godly admonitions, and instructions, and wholesome restraints, which, to be successful, must be accompanied by good examples. In all our business transactions, a strict regard for justice should be maintained. And in all our associations with friends, acquaintances, and strangers, we should honor God, and strive to be useful to those with whom we associate. We may instruct the ignorant, reprove the sinner, alarm the careless, and direct the inquiring soul to Jesus. We may also reclaim the wanderer, encourage the saints, and especially "comfort the feeble minded." But our obligation extends beyond the narrow sphere of our personal acquaintance. The command of God is, "Do good to all men as ye have opportunity." Probably it is the duty of some who may read these lines to go far hence, among strange people, to tell them, that Jesus died to save mankind from hell. And those who cannot go to heathen lands to publish salvation, may help others do it. The spiritual wants of the heathen are pressing. Hundreds of millions of our race, with souls like our own, are passing on to eternity, without the light of the Gospel. They are emphatically living without hope and "without God in the world." Numbers of them are dying daily. They need the Bible. They need the preached gospel. And we have opportunities to do them good. We see, then, that we have a great work before us, "a soul to save," "a God to glorify," a world to bless! And all this in a short life, which is justly compared to a vapor, which appeareth for a little time, and then vanisheth away!

Reader, have you begun to lay up a treasure in Heaven? Have your past years been years of usefulness? And are you willing now to labor in God's vineyard? Are you willing to "count all things but loss for Christ." Will you leave the fashions and amusements of the world, to follow Christ? Will you think more of the souls of men than of sensual gratifications, and retrench your expenses as much as possible, that you may help spread the gospel, and give to the perishing the bread of life? Will you use your utmost endeavors to glorify God? If so, you will be happy indeed! Your path will be as the "shining light, that shineth more and more unto the perfect day." But if not, you may well be alarmed, in view of the shortness of time, and approaching death, when sin's pleasures shall flee away, and the sad consequences of a sinful life be endured! How fearful the doom of the unprofitable servant who wasted his Lord's money! C. A. O.

Lima, Wis, Dec. 28th, 1848

Baptists in North Carolina.—The North Carolina Conference of the Baptist Church concluded its session on the 18th ult., at Danville, Va., and reports a membership of twenty thousand four hundred and ninety-five whites, and six thousand five hundred and fifty-six colored people; showing an increase during the year of four hundred and nineteen whites, and one hundred and four colored. This conference includes a small portion of Virginia, bounded by the Roanoke River and the Blue Ridge; but, on the other hand, the Virginia and South Carolina Conferences embrace portions of lower North Carolina, and the western part of the State is comprised in the Holsten. The membership in the State is probably 45,000.

Capital Punishment.—The State of Michigan has been trying the experiment of abolishing Capital Punishment. It is stated, but we know not on what authority, that murders have considerably increased since the act of abolition was passed. Be that as it may, the State Senate has recently adopted a resolution, 'that the Committee on the Judiciary be, and they are hereby, instructed to bring in a bill restoring capital punishment in cases of murder in the first degree.'

Abolition in Delaware.—In the Senate of the State of Deleware, on the 16th inst., Mr., Burnham presented the petition of 490 citizens of New Castle Co., for the abolition of slavery, which was referred to a Committee, who reported against immediate emancipation, deeming it inexpedient to legislate on the subject at present, although the Committee refused to give any opinion on the merits of the question.

Letters for our Missionaries.—Ships sail from New York for China every few weeks, and by each vessel we send letters and papers. The best advice, therefore, which we can give to those who enquire when their communications should be forwarded to us, is, send them as soon as they are ready. The new and fast ship Samuel Russell is advertised to sail on the 15th of February. By her we shall send letters and papers—perhaps parcels.

Letters from our Missionaries.—We have recently received letters from our missionaries in China, written in September, which represent them as in health, and vigorously prosecuting their work. We shall give some extracts next week.

Erratum.—In my report on the State of Religion in the Rhode Island Churches, as published in the Recorder of January 4, in the second paragraph, two lines from the bottom, for Seraphim, read Serapina. The mistake was probably caused by the illegibility of the copy forwarded. S. S. G.

Webster's Dictionary, Unabridged.—We are glad to learn that the crown quarto edition of Webster's Dictionary is finding its way into our public schools, and that it is likely to become the standard wherever the English language is spoken. The following extract from a notice in the London Literary Gazette, will show how the work is regarded in England:—

"The original edition of the American Dictionary is too well known and appreciated in England to require us to dwell at length on its plan and execution. In the present edition, Prof. Goodrich has been ably assisted by several eminent men, each distinguished in his own sphere of inquiry; and the result is in the highest degree satisfactory. The work is a noble monument of erudition and indefatigable research; and the style and accuracy of its typography would do honor to the press of any country in Europe. This volume must find its way into all our public, and good private libraries, for it provides the English student with a mass of the most valuable information, which he would seek in vain for elsewhere."

"PETERPENCE."—The Rt. Rev. John Hughes Catholic Bishop of New York, recently preached a sermon in this city relative to the peculiar position of the Pope, in which he expresses unwavering confidence that his affairs are all under God's direction, and that he will soon be brought out of his retirement. Near the close of his sermon, the Bishop made the following suggestion as to the mode of raising pecuniary assistance for the Pope in case it should be necessary :—

'We feel for him as an individual, but we have not the slightest apprehension of injury to the office which he discharges, and of which he is such an illustrious and glorious occupant. If necessary, the Church has resources. There is no sovereign on earth that counts so many subjects as Pius IX., independent of the petty states of Rome. Two hundred millions of men cherish him in their hearts, all of whom direct their best wishes toward his sacred person, all of whom regard in him the representative of Jesus Christ, and the authority delegated to him by St. Peter. My brethren, I know that I can speak for you, and for that portion of the church over which, though unworthy, the providence of God has placed me. Sooner than we should see him subject to any Sovereign or President, or petty Prince or King, we should have recourse to the old institution, and Peterpence from every part of the globe, would constitute a fund to raise him above that subjection, even though he should occupy an island in the Medterranean Sea, a single square mile in extent."

SINGULAR ESCAPE FROM SLAVERY.—William W. Brown writes to the Liberator, that one of the most interesting cases of the escape of fugitives from slavery has just occurred. He gives the following particulars, and says that these fugitives will attend the meeting of the Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Society, in Boston, the last of the present month :—

"William and Ellen Crapt, man and wife, lived with different masters in the State of Georgia. Ellen is so near white that she can pass without suspicion for a white woman. Her husband is much darker. He is a mechanic, and by working nights and Sundays, he laid up sufficient money to redeem himself and wife from slavery. Their plan was without precedent; and though novel, was the means of giving them their freedom. Ellen dressed in male apparel, and passed as the master, while her husband passed as the servant. In this manner they traveled to Philadelphia. They are now beyond the reach of the South. On the journey, they put up at the best hotels wherever they stopped. Neither of them can read or write; and Ellen, aware that she would be called upon to write her name at the hotels, tied up her right hand, as if it was lame, which proved of some service to her, as she was frequently called upon at hotels to register her name. In Charleston, S. C., they put up at the hotel which Governor McDuffie and John C. Calhoun generally make their home; yet these distinguished advocates of the 'peculiar institution' say that the slaves cannot take care of themselves. They arrived in Philadelphia in four days from the day they started."

A DICTIONARY FOR QUEEN VICTORIA.—Messrs. G. & C. Merriam, publishers of the new unabridged edition of Webster's Dictionary, have prepared a splendid copy of that work, designed as a present to Her Majesty Queen Victoria. The following is the letter of presentation :—

To Her Majesty, the Queen of Great Britain and Ireland, this copy of Webster's Quarto Dictionary is offered by the American publishers, as a product of Science and the Arts, from the Republic which is proud to call England her Mother Country.

May your Majesty long live to rejoice in the loyal and grateful affection of the millions who inhabit your extended empire, and may the offerings and messages from England to America, and from America to England, be the offerings of peace and mutual good will.

May these countries, which are united by a common language, be also one in the common purpose to make this language the bearer and the symbol of the Civilization, the Science, the Freedom, and the Christianity, which they shall together diffuse throughout the earth.

GEORGE AND CHARLES MERRIAM.
Springfield, Mass., U. S. A.,
December, 1848.

WHAT A MISSIONARY SHIP!—The Watchman of the Valley has a letter from Rev. Albert Bushnell, Missionary to South Africa, who sailed for that country last summer in the brig Smithfield of Boston. While at anchor off Elmira, August 9, he makes this entry in his journal :—

"Last Sabbath business went on as usual. Our crew were discharging cargo all day, and about a hundred canoe men engaged in shipping it on shore. It was a great grief to us, but our protest was of no avail. Is it not too bad for missionaries to be compelled to come to Africa on board of rum-and-powder-freighted ships, exposed to such impositions? Never have I been so sorely tried as during the last few days, when rum and powder have been landed in such quantities for these poor heathen people."

RE . ALEXANDER CAMPBELL.—In closing the twenty-seventh volume of his Millennial Harbinger, he says—'During three hundred and twelve months we have issued three hundred and twelve monthly numbers, not having failed a single month, whether at home or abroad, to greet my numerous and various friends and readers with some new essay, or some original communication, to edify or comfort, to convince of error, or to encourage in the ways of religion and truth. Through this long period in the contracted span of life, I have enjoyed uninterrupted health, not having been one day confined to a bed of sickness during the last forty-five years. Though often feeble and exhausted by excessive labor, I have been enabled, thus far, to hold on my way.'

LAST WEEK'S CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

January 15.

In the SENATE, various petitions were presented, and among others was one by Mr. Wilkes, praying Congress to supply aid, by donations or otherwise, for the construction of a Railroad leading from some point on the Mississippi River to the Pacific Ocean, which was duly read and referred. Mr. Downs, a member of the Judiciary Committee, submitted a minority report in favor of admitting California into the Union as a State, and at the same time introduced a bill as a substitute for the original bill previously reported by a majority of the said Committee. After considerable discussion it was ordered printed. The bill to settle land titles in California was then taken up; it provides for selling the mineral lands by the acre. Mr. Benton made a long speech in opposition to the bill, in the course of which he said that gold-hunting was demoralizing and injurious to society, and that if he had the power he would extirpate the mines at once. No action upon the bill.

In the HOUSE, the question of admitting Mr. Sibley as the Delegate from the Territory of Wisconsin, was discussed, and decided in the affirmative. The President's Message was referred to a Committee. The California and New Mexico Territorial bills were made the order of the day for the 23d inst. A bill to abolish the franking privilege was introduced, and placed on the calendar.

January 16.

In the SENATE, Mr. Douglass, of Ill., submitted an amendment to his bill for the admission of California as a State; which, he said, would obviate many of the objections which had been urged against the original bill. The amendment was read, and ordered to be printed. The resolution of inquiry as to the expediency of a Navy Yard at Key West, was taken up and adopted. The Senate then took up the bill for extending to the assignees of Military Land Warrants the same privileges for locating them as the original holders. The question gave rise to a considerable discussion, after which the bill was recommitted. The bill to settle land titles in California was referred to the Committee on Public Lands.

In the HOUSE, Mr. Tuck, of N. H., wished to introduce a resolution in favor of a Congress of Nations, to settle international disputes without resort to arms. The resolution was objected to. Mr. King, of Ga., from the Committee on Naval Affairs, reported a bill for the transportation of troops across the Isthmus of Panama, and for promoting and extending American commerce; a map accompanying the bill. Sundry bills from the Senate were taken up, among which was one granting a pension of $50 per month to Major Scantland, who was badly wounded during the late war with Mexico, which was passed. The Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was then taken up, in considering which the subject of mileage came up, and was discussed till adjournment.

January 17.

In the SENATE, the bill for the reduction of postage occupied most of the time. It provides for the establishment of the following rates, viz: On letters, not exceeding one-half an ounce and for all distances, prepaid, 3 cents, and if not prepaid, 5 cents; and for all drop-letters 1 cent; for newspapers of one ounce in weight, over 50 miles, 1 cent, under 50, 1-2 a cent; daily papers, same rates, allowing an ounce and a half; for all foreign letters 15 cents each. The bill abolishes the franking privilege. The letters of Members of Congress, not exceeding one ounce, on public business, are to be paid for out of the contingent funds. Public documents are to be free, as now. A great variety of amendments were offered, and many of them agreed to. The amendment exempting exchange papers was adopted. The amendments were ordered printed and the subject postponed.

In the HOUSE, a joint resolution was offered, which lies over, for extending the revenue laws over the Territory of California, and authorizing the President to appoint Collectors at Monterey and the Bay of San Francisco, and to establish a Mint in California. The Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was taken up, and mileage was again discussed. Several amendments were proposed, among which was one giving each member $2,000 salary and 10 cents per mile for traveling, which was adopted. No action upon the bill.

January 18.

In the SENATE, a resolution was offered calling for information relative to certain Cherokee Claims against the Government, which was adopted. The bill for the establishment of a Territorial Government in the new Territory of Minesota, was taken up, which, after being considered and amended, was postponed.

The HOUSE, after considerable discussion, adopted the resolution to print the report of a survey of Buffalo Harbor. The Civil and Diplomatic Bill was farther dsscussed.

January 19.

In the SENATE, the bill for the establishment of a Territorial Government in Minesota was farther discussed and passed. The bill for the Reduction of Postage was considered, but not acted upon.

In the HOUSE, a resolution was adopted instructing the Committee on Commerce to report measures to prevent California gold from being carried to other countries for coinage. The Pacheco Slave Case was then taken up, and the resolution to pay for the slave was passed by a vote of 106 to 94. The discussion of it has cost ten thousand dollars.

January 20.

The SENATE was not in session.

The HOUSE took up the bill providing for the establishment of a Board of Commissioners for the settlement of private claims against the Government, but soon afterwards adjourned.

The stock for the Chemung Railroad is all subscribed, and it is believed that it will be completed in time to connect with the N. York and Erie Extension at Elmira in October next.

On the 18th instant, the House of Representatives voted, in Committee of the Whole, that flogging in the Navy must be abolished. The majority in favor of the measure was large.

THE VAN RENSSELAER LAND TITLE.—A telegraphic dispatch dated Albany, January 17th, says that the Governor has appointed Ex-Governor Seward to be counsel for the State in the approaching trial of the suit brought against the Van Rensselaers to test the validity of their title to the lands heretofore held by them in the counties of Albany, &c. It is urged by the prosecution, that those lands should revert to the State of New York. The Anti-renters have petitioned the Legislature to restrain the Van Rensselaers from the collection of rent during the pendency of the case in court. It will probably be tried at Saratoga, in the month of February.

SUDDEN DEATH—TIGHT LACING.—An inquest was held on the body of Sarah Griffith, a girl aged eighteen years, employed as a servant in the family of the Rev. Mr. Rogers, Military Chaplain at St. Helen's Island, opposite this city. The fate of the deceased ought to be a warning to other young females; she died suddenly of an affection of the heart, also of other internal causes, said to have been occasioned by the baneful practice of tight-lacing. Her body was opened, and a verdict rendered in accordance with the above. The deceased sustained an excellent character. She was to have been married at an early date. [Mon. Herald.

SUMMARY.

The editor of the National Intelligencer has been shown a letter written by George Catlin, Esq., who is now in London, stating that the Russian Government has made proposals to him for the purchase of his Indian Collection, and the price demanded by the artist is seventy-five thousand dollars. The same collection, however, having been offered to the Congress of the United States for fifty thousand. Mr. Catlin does not feel at liberty to accept the foreign proposition until he has received an answer from his own government.

The General Assembly of Rhode Island commenced its session at Providence on the 15th. The Journal says that the subject which will principally engage the attention of the Assembly is the condition of the finances. The revenue of the State is not equal to its expenditures, and the necessity of additional taxation in some form has increased until farther delay would be criminal neglect.

There is said to have been great mortality among the British troops at Barbadoes of late. Seven officers and one hundred and sixty men belonging to the 66th and 67th regiments are reported to have died recently, while thirteen officers and one hundred and forty men were still on the sick list. What disease it is that has proved so fatal, our accounts do not state. We presume, however, it must have been the Cholera.

A Valparaiso paper of October 28 says three hundred thousand dollars in silver arrived per steamer of the 24th, mostly in bars, from Copiapo, where another discovery of immense value has been made. We have also had one hundred thousand dollars in gold dust from California, and prices have somewhat receded for the former article.

The freight business of the Erie Railroad, on its extension, is even greater than was anticipated, and the equipage of the road is scarcely equal to the demands upon it. The receipts from the through freight are one thousand dollars per day. The passenger trains frequently bring down two hundred passengers.

The number of New York vessels up for the Gold Region is so great, that the bakers of ship bread, though working day and night, are unable to supply the demand, and many vessels are consequently detained beyond their appointed time. The amount of bread manufactured has averaged fifty thousand pounds per day since the 1st of December, more than two million pounds in all.

A correspondent of the Ohio Palladium of Freedom, writing from Columbus, says Mr Beaver, of Trumbull, has given notice in the Senate of his intention to introduce a bill disposing of the public lands of this State on comparatively favorable terms to actual settlers. The days of Land Monopoly are numbered.

Orrill Durrel, a servant girl in the family of Mr. Lamb, of Lowell, Massachusetts, committed suicide the other day by drowning. Desertion by her lover, Jacob L. Jones, is said to have induced the rash act. She was from the State of Maine, and was about twenty-five years old.

The Legislature of Pennsylvania has voted to pay to the widow of Governor Shunk the amount of his salary accruing from the day of his death, July 9, to the day of passing the vote, January 16, amounting to one thousand five hundred and fifty-seven dollars.

A letter dated at Georgetown, January 15th, says that on the previous day the steamer Richland was entirely consumed by fire, about two miles above Britton's Ferry, and 8 or 10 lives lost.

A telegraphic dispatch, dated Washington, January 19, says that Mr. Calhoun was seized with a fainting fit to-day in the Senate, and was conveyed to his lodgings. He had a similar attack yesterday, though he is not considered dangerous.

The assets of the Canal Bank of Albany are likely to yield more than was anticipated, and it is now thought that not only will the circulation be wholly redeemed, but that forty or fifty per cent of deposites will be paid.

Rev. Samuel R. Ward, an eminent colored man, recently pastor of a white congregation in Cortland Co., has become the editor of the Northern Star and Colored Farmer, published in Albany. The Star is pushing ahead the new settlement in Florence, Oneida Co. According, to its representations the enterprise promises success.

Edward, son of Alonzo Gage, of Clarkson Monroe Co., aged eight years and eleven months, committed suicide the other day by hanging himself. The child is supposed to have been insane.

The Frontier Guardian is the title of a new paper about to be established in Pottawattamie, Iowa,—under the supervision of Orson Hyde, and to be devoted to the interests of the Mormons.

The following is the official canvass of Ohio for Governor, as announced by the Speaker of the Senate :

Col. John B. Weller, of Ohio, has been appointed Commissioner to Survey the Boundary Line between the United States and Mexico, in the place of the late Hon. Ambrose H. Sevier, deceased.

The receipts on the Erie Railroad now average about two thousand five hundred dollars a day. Freight continues to accumulate at all the depots. For this season of the year, the above amount of earnings is as much as the most sanguine could have anticipated.

The births, marriages, and deaths, in Massachusetts, exclusive of Boston, and a few other towns, for the year ending April 30, 1848, were —births 16,322; marriages 5,287; deaths 11,246.

The Glasgow (Mo.) Banner says that on the 28th ult. the Missouri river froze from shore to shore, at this point—an occurrence which has not taken place since the winter of 1842.

Brevet Major Hughes, Captain Lloyd Tilgham, and Captain Brown of Baltimore, are about to make a railroad survey across the Isthmus of Panama, for Messrs. Aspinwall & Co.

The Philadelphia Daily Republic, edited and published by Wm. Elder, has been discontinued.

The Skowhegan Press, in Somerset Co., Me., says it has been a current report about town for a week past, that a gold mine has been discovered in the town of Bingham, in this county

A communication has been establised for several days between Quebec and the island of Orleans.

A fearful epidemic is raging at the Capital of Michigan. The Legislature of that State is discussing a motion to adjourn to Detroit. One member has already died of the disease.

The Detroit papers contain later accounts from Lansing. There were no cases of fever there on the 9th instant, and all alarm had subsided among the Members.

The Corporation of Brown University at Providence resolved to raise fifty thousand dollars as a fund, the interest of which shall be applied to the support of that institution.

It is said that Mr. Sevier's compensation as Commissioner in Mexico, was about equal to the pay of a thousand soldiers.

Rev. Mr. Scanlan, late Catholic priest in Elgin, Ill., as we learn by a private letter from Chicago, cut his throat on the 23d ultimo, and was not expected to survive.

The Sisters of Mercy have tendered the use of their hospital to the authorities of the city of Pittsburg, should the city be attacked by the cholera.

The mercury went down to 16 degrees below zero, at Saco, Maine, on the 8th instant.

Eighty-one newspapers are published in the city of Boston, of which, fourteen are daily, nine semi-weekly, and fifty weekly.

A dispatch dated Pittsburg, January 14, says that the river has risen 10 feet within the last ten hours, and is still rising. A flood is expected.

Ex-Governor Young is at Rochester, in attendance at the Supreme Court. He has commenced the practice of law.

DIED,

In Hopkinton, R. I., Jan. 15th, Miss ELIZABETH LANGWORTHY, aged 74 years. This aged friend has for many years been afflicted with a cancer, and for the last two years almost helpless. Being an inmate of her brother Sanford Langworthy's family, she received their unremitting care; and although her protracted illness required much of their time, and wasted their strength, yet all were cheerfully given. Having never publicly professed religion, she deeply regretted the past. I visited her several times during my residence here, and last fall found her under intense anxiety of mind, which I trust resulted in an entire reconciliation to God. Her end was peace. S. S. G.

CHRISTIAN PSALMODY.

THE New Collection of Hymns with this title, prepared by a Committee of the Seventh-day Baptist General Conference, was published on the 10th day of Sept. last, and is for sale at this office It contains over one thousand hymns, together with the usual table of first lines, and a complete index of particular subjects, the whole covering 576 pages. The work is neatly printed, on fine paper, and bound in a variety of styles to suit the tastes and means of purchasers. The price in strong leather binding is 75 cents per copy; in imitation morocco, plain, 87½ cents; ditto, gilt edges, $1 00; ditto, full gilt, $1 12½; in morocco, full gilt, $1 37½. Those wishing books will please forward their orders, with particular directions how to send, to GEO. B. UTTER, No. 9 Spruce-st., New York.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality it is not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house. JARED MAXSON.

THE BOOK

For every Clergyman—For every School District—For every Educated Man.

WEBSTER'S QUARTO DICTIONARY, Unabridged: Price $6.—Published by G. and C. MERRIAM, Springfield, Mass., and for sale by Booksellers generally.

"Will not the enlightened and liberal furnish their clergymen with a copy, as an indispensable volume in their libraries?"—Rev. T. H. Gallaudet.

Extract from a Lecture addressed to a Teacher's Institute, by William Russel, Principal of the Merrimack [N. H.] School for Teachers, and formerly Editor of the American Journal of Education:

"The edition of Dr. Webster's Dictionary, revised by Professor Goodrich, I would earnestly recommend to the attention of all teachers who are desirous of becoming fully qualified to give instruction in the English Language. The copious information which that work embodies, on all topics connected with Etymology—the extreme exactness, as well as the number, extent, and fullness of the definitions which it furnishes to every important word, render it a mine of philological wealth to instructors. The volume is, in fact, the teacher's encyclopedia, as well as lexicon, for daily reference. Could a copy of it be provided, as the permanent property of every district school, the effect, as regards the improvement of instruction, would be deeply and extensively felt, in the increased skill of the teacher, and the higher attainments of his pupils, in the most important part of education—the acquisition of an adequate knowledge and proper use of our own language."

"It has come to be a necessity to every educated man."—Lord Brougham

THE fourth volume of this magazine commenced with January, 1849. It aspires to be, both in the character of its articles and in its mechanical execution, a model of taste and excellence; and it is universally conceded that it stands at the head of all works of its class. The following are a few of the many commendatory notices of the press, in different parts of the Union, which the magazine has received :—

"It is beautifully illustrated, and evinces great ability and interest."—N. Y. Evangelist.

"The editor is one of our best writers for the young."—N. Y. Com. Adv.

"We know of no journal devoted to the interests of the youth of our country, that will compare with this, either in the beauty of its appearance, or the rich and varied excellence of its contents."—N. Y. Christ. Mess.

"It is full of pleasing things, finely illustrated, and familiarly described."—N. Y. Obs.

"Whatever the editor does is well done, and in a sweet and gentle spirit. His pretty monthly is commendable in all respects, and wonderfully cheap."—N. Y. Christ. Inq.

"The Cabinet still maintains its supremacy as the first and most beautiful juvenile in the land."—Hartford Repub.

"Its contents are scarcely susceptible of any improvement, the work having attained a pre-eminence among works published for the young."—Sentinel, Fort Wayne, Ind.

"A prettier thing of the kind could scarcely be imagined." —Balt. Meth. Prot.

"The best and cheapest youth's magazine in the country." —Courier, Zanesville, Ohio.

"This, as we have before told our readers, best fills our idea of what a magazine for children ought to be."—Windham Co. Dem., Brattleborough, Vt.

"It gives us pleasure to recommend this magazine to our Southern friends. Our more intimate acquaintance with it serves only to increase our favorable opinion of it."—Balt. West. Continent.

THE SPRING DOWN IN THE DELL.

Though years have glided like a dream,
Since I stood by thy side,
Yet still, thou little rippling stream,
I've thought of thee with pride,
And blessed thee, as I bless thee now—
Oh! I remember well!
How thou did'st cool my fevered brow,
Dear Spring, down in the dell!

On many a golden summer hour
I laid me down to rest,
Where every wind would throw a shower
Of blossoms on my breast.
The spangled flowers grew around—
Oh! I remember well!
The mossy rocks, the velvet ground,
The Spring down in the dell.

Thy waters sparkled in my cup,
And flashed along the rim,
And when I raised it gladly up,
And broke its dimpled brim,
Far sweeter than the Samian wine—
Oh! I remember well!—
Was that bright crystal wave of thine,
Dear Spring, down in the dell.

And, mirrored in thy mimic glass,
I've watched the artless grace
Of many a dark-eyed village lass,
As she did kiss thy face.
And I have envied thee thy lot—
Oh! I remember well!—
Thou wilt not, can't not, be forgot,
Sweet Spring, down in the dell.

From the National Intelligencer.

THE SIOUX, OR DAH-KO-TAH INDIANS.

The territory now claimed by this nation is principally watered by the St. Peter River, and is about nine hundred miles in length, and from two to five hundred in width. The original name of the tribe was Dah-co-tah, the interpretation of which is said to be a confederacy, or a united nation; the name of Sioux, for which there seems to be no acknowledged meaning, having been given them by the early Jesuit missionaries. The number of this tribe is estimated at about fifteen thousand; they are divided into bands numbering from fifty to a thousand. Occupying as they do an immense prairie region, they make use of the horse instead of the canoe, and the wealth of a Sioux chief is universally estimated by the number of his horses. Private rights are respected among them. They compute time by the four seasons, but their month contains only twenty-eight days. They designate the month of January as the hard moon; February, the moon in which the raccoon runs; March, the moon of sore eyes; April, the moon when the geese lay; May, the moon for planting; June, the moon for strawberries; July, the midsummer moon; August, the moon for gathering corn; September, the moon for gathering wild-rice; October and November, the moons for the running of the doe; and December, the moon in which the deer sheds his horns.

They are kind to their sick, but take more care of their youth than they do of their old men. They are averse to the custom of bleeding, and seldom draw blood except in severe cases of illness. Their medicines are chiefly composed of roots and plants, and they never make use of metalic medicines. They are partial to vapor baths, and resort to them for the cure of numerous diseases. They frequently attribnte their bodily sickness to the displeasure of some animal which they have hunted with difficulty and slain.

The Sioux Indians consider it lawful to take the life of a fellow-being by way of revenge, but a crime to take life under any other circumstances. They invariably entertain a great fear of the spirits of the dead, whom they suppose have the power to injure the living; and it is thought that this fear prevents them from committing murder more frequently than they do. The practice of lying is considered as exceedingly wrong.

They believe in a Great Spirit, but have no definite idea of his attributes. Whenever any calamity befals them, they alledge that the Great Spirit is angry; and so, when they receive a blessing, they attribute it to the same source. They look upon the death of an individual as a manifestation of the Divine displeasure. They resort at times to sacrifice, and cases have been known where Sioux fathers have sacrificed their own children to appease the anger of the Deity. They are much afraid of a creature which they look upon as a kind of vampire, and they consider the sight of this as a sure sign of approaching death.

The are exceedingly superstitious in respect to fire, which they consider a gift from the Deity. In former times they obtained it by friction of wood, but at present chiefly from the flint. When about to partake of a religious feast, they remove all the old fire from the wigwam, and rekindle it, for the purpose of cooking the food, so that they may be certain that there is nothing unclean about the feast. They have no idols or images which they worship, but are in the habit of making offerings of tobacco and other articles which they value.

They venerate the rattlesnake, and seldom if ever deprive it of life, except when they wish to employ its skin and rattle in their incantations. They believe in fairies, which they suppose have the power of assuming the form of any animal, and of living either on land or in the water; all their lakes and streams are intimately associated with little people. They regard thunder as emanating from a large bird. Among their fabled monsters they acknowledge a huge giant, who can destroy an Indian by the glance of his eye.

When a man dies they place his remains upon a scaffold, which they ornament with the trophies of war; and when the flesh has decayed they bury the bones in the earth, and cover the grave with pickets, or a rude house. They do not bury in a sitting posture, but invariably clothe the deceased in his finest robes, covering him with all his favorite ornaments. They express their grief at the loss of a friend by cutting off their hair, going barefoot, dismal shoutings, mutilating their bodies, and by making a feast for the dead.

---

The Rev. J. P. McColley, of Millford, Del., says that from a single pumpkin vine, that grew spontaneously in his garden last spring, he gathered thirty-six pumpkins, weighing together four hundred and ninety-seven pounds, and were perfectly matured. They were the mellow pumpkin.

A SHIP AMONG ICEBERGS.

It is impossible to convey a correct idea of the beauty, the magnificence, of some of the scenes through which we passed. Thousands of the most grotesque, fanciful, and beautiful icebergs and icefields, surrounded on all sides, intersected by numerous serpentine canals, which glittered in the snn, (for the weather was fine all the time we were in the straits,) like threads of silver twining round ruined palaces of crystal. The masses assumed every variety of form and size, and many bore such a striking resemblance, to cathedrals, churches, columns, arches, and spires, that I could almost fancy we had been transported to one of the floating cities of Fairy Land. The rapid motion, too, of our ship, in what appeared a dead calm, added much to the magical effect of the scene. A light but steady breeze urged her along, with considerable velocity, through a maze of ponds and canals, which, from the immense quantity of ice that surrounded them, were as calm and unruffled as the surface of a mill-pond. Not a sound disturbed the delightful stillness of nature, save the gentle rippling of the vessel's bow as she sped on her way, or the occasional puffing of a lazy whale, awakened from a nap by our unceremonious intrusion on his domains. Now and then, however, my reveries were disagreeably interrupted by the ship coming into sudden contact with huge lumps of ice. This happened occasionally when we arrived at the termination of one of those natural canals through which we passed, and found it necessary to force our way into the next. These concussions were sometimes very severe, and even made the ship's bell ring; but we heeded this little, as the vessel was provided with huge blocks of timber on her bows, called ice-pieces, and was besides built expressly for sailing in the northern seas. It only became annoying at meal times, when a spoonful of soup would sometimes make a little private excursion of its own, over the shoulder of its owner, instead of into his mouth. As we proceeded, the ice became more closely packed, and at last compelled us to bore through it. The ship, however, was never altogether detained, though much retarded. I recollect, while thus surrounded, filling a bucket with water from a pool on the ice, to see whether it was fresh or not, as I had been rather sceptical on this point. It was excellent, and might almost compete with the water from the famous spring of Crawley.

CALIFORNIAN'S DRESS.

The dress of a Spaniard of tolerable means, consists of a deer-skin or fine velvet jacket, generally of a green color, with numerous rows of gold or silver plated buttons upon it, with a pair of pantaloons of velvet or deerskin, open from the knee down, and with a row of silver buttons on each side of the opening, confined at the waist by a red silk sash. Over all is thrown the serrappo, a gay-colored blanket, all stripes and figures, with a hole in the centre for the head. This, when placed over the shoulders, hangs to the ancle on either side; under the pantaloons are a pair of very wide and loose drawers, and over them, when riding, are wrapped the botas, square pieces of leather reaching to the knee, to protect the lower part of the legs from chafing. They ride very fast, spurring their horses almost to madness, to exhibit their horsemanship. The ease with which they retain their seats, when the horse is rearing and pitching, and kicking, is truly astonishing. The Mexican saddle, though awkward in appearance, is much superior to ours for riding. They have high peaks before and behind: the one in front is arranged so that an end of the lasso can be attached to it, after the bullock is snared. The spurs are the most savage and uncivilized looking articles that can well be imagined, about two inches long, with small bells, or pieces of metal attached, which jingle at every step. The stirrups are made of wood, and weighing from two to three pounds.

PHILOSOPHIC COURTSHIP.

Sir Isaac Newton was persuaded by one of his friends to marry; he excused himself by saying that he had no time to court a wife. His friends replied that they would assist, by sending to his apartment a woman of worth. He thanked them for their offer, and promised to receive a visit from the lady. His friends applied to her, and requested her to dispense with the usual ceremonies of courtship, and wait upon the philosopher; to which she consented.

When she entered his apartment, and produced her letter of recommendation, he received her politely, filled and lighted his pipe, sat down by her side, took her hand in his, and conversed on the subject. Before they had brought the matter to a conclusion, some question regarding the magnitude of the heavenly bodies presented itself with such force that he forgot what he was about—he turned his eyes toward the heavens, took the pipe from his mouth with his left hand, and, being lost in study, without design, took the lady's left hand, and with one of her fingers crowded the tobacco into his pipe, and held it so long, that her heart, as well as her finger, took fire, and she, in a huff, sprang up, and went off, leaving the philosopher to pursue his studies alone.

Col. Taliaferro.—The Washington correspondent of the Charleston Courier, thus speaks of Col. Taliaferro, of Virginia, now eighty years of age, and for forty years a member of Congress—'His health and faculties have never for a moment given way, and he is the same man now that he was when the confidential adviser of Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe—the same man that he was when he opposed the administration of the elder Adams. Colonel T. has always lived liberally, and has enjoyed, as much as any man that ever lived, social pleasures, in all their approved forms. At a supper party, the other night, he was asked what his secret was. He replied, that he had never known disease—that he had never made but a single meal a day—that if he took supper, he did not dine—that he had risen early—had always been accustomed to exercise, and never on horseback when he could go on foot; and that under all circumstances he had preserved an equality of temper. His rule was, never to suffer that which was past to prey upon his mind; to enjoy what Providence had allotted to him, and to trust in the future.'

Gold does not always Enrich.—Speaking of the recent discoveries in California, an exchange says that it is a great question how far these golden discoveries, after all, enrich either the country or individuals. The whole speaking Past utters its volumes of fearful testimony. The richest mining soils on earth are surrounded by the poorest people. Spain and Portugal, the nations that have the most immediate concern in mining, have been, principally by that means, reduced to the most abject poverty. All travelers inform us, that an approach to a mining district, in South America, is uniformly indicated by a ragged people, and ruinous habitations. And rarely has the world ever seen an individual enriched by gold hunting. Nor is this a business which, however successful, can add essentially to the real wealth of the world—that is, the means of human comfort and subsistence. For, as the quantity of gold increases, its relative value, which is its true practical value, diminishes.

Curious Discovery.—A few days ago, some men who were working upon our streets, split a stone in two, in which they found a beautiful purple flower, with some green leaves, as fresh in appearance, and as soft to the touch, as if it was the product of a green-house. How it got there, is a mystery to us. The stone has been in our streets twelve years. But the flower was evidently in the stone when quarried. It may have been there 'from time whereof the memory of man runneth not the contrary;' aye, for aught we know, it is an antedeluvian product. Mr. S. S. Young says that the flower resembles the Hibiscus species, but the leaf is more like the rose, but it is not exactly like any native flower of this country, nor like any exotic cultivated here. It most probably grew in the rock where it now is, but the rock must have been earth when it grew. [Eat. (O.) Reg.

Extract from Gen. Jackson's Will.—'The gold box presented to me by the Corporation of the City of New York, the large silver vase presented to me by the ladies of Charleston, South Carolina, my native State, with the large picture representing the unfurling of the American banner, presented to me by the people of South Carolina, when it was refused to be accepted by the United States Senate, I leave in trust of my son, Andrew Jackson, Jr., with directions that, should our happy country not be blessed with peace—an event not always to be expected—he will, at the close of the war, present each of said articles, of inestimable value, to that patriot, residing in the City or State from which they were presented, who shall be adjudged by his countrymen, or the ladies, to have been the most valiant in defense of his country, and his country's rights.'

A Curious Experiment.—A gentleman being in company with a number of persons in a stage-coach, who used very profane language, was invited, after the rest had exhausted their fund of anecdote, to tell his story. He complied, and as they had interlarded every sentence with some senseless, profane expression, he substituted the phrase, 'tobacco and pipes! pipes and tobacco!' His companions listened with perfect astonishment—they concluded the man must be insane! But, after he was done, and they professed themselves much pleased with his story, one of them took the liberty of inquiring what he meant by the frequent use of the above phrase. Oh, said he, it is my peculiar method of swearing!' Whereupon they saw at once the extreme silliness of profane language, and abstained from its use during the rest of the journey,

A Bit of Advice.—You were made to be kind, says Horace Mann, generous, and magnanimous. If there is a boy in the school who has a club foot, don't let him know that you ever saw it. If there is a poor boy, with ragged clothes, don't talk about rags when he is in hearing. If there is a lame boy, assign him some part of the game which does not require running. If there is a hungry one, give him a part of your dinner. If there is a dull one, help him to get his lesson. If there is a bright one, be not envious of him; for if one boy is proud of his talents, and another is envious of them, there are two great wrongs, and no more talents than before. If a larger or stronger boy has injured you, and is sorry for it, forgive him, and request the teacher not to punish him. All the school will show by their countenances how much better it is than to have a great fist.

Ferocity and Fear.—It is said that the people of Cairo, a little place lying among the unwholesome swamps at the confluence of the Mississippi and Ohio, keep three pieces of ordnance mounted near the landing-place to keep off the cholera. A passenger in one of the steamboats from New Orleans relates that the captain being desirous of landing at that place, that the bodies of four persons who had died on the passage might be interred, they threatened to fire upon the boat if it attempted to approach the shore, and actually obliged him to proceed with the dead bodies on board.

Eclipses in 1849.—In the year 1849 there will be four eclipses—two of the sun, and two of the moon. One of the lunar eclipses will be visible in the United States. The first eclipse will be of the sun, on the 12th of February, and will be visible in the west of Asia, and the north-west of North America. The second, of the moon, on the 8th of March, and will be visible throughout the United States. The third will be a total eclipse of the sun, on the 17th of August; and the fourth, an eclipse of the moon, on the 2d of September—both invisible in the United States.

Time.—Every day is a year to a silk-worm, and has in it the four seasons. The morning is Spring, the middle of the day Summer, the evening Autumn, and the night Winter. To man, life is a year, and a year is a day—past scenes are generally recalled with a feeling of solemn sadness, caused by the thought that the time is gone, and will never return. Our days must be profitably employed, if we would remember them with pleasure.

Blind Men.—A Pittsburgh paper states that there is in that city a blind man who earns a comfortable subsistence by weaving. He plays the loom faithfully, steadily and smilingly, resigned to his lot, and content that it is not worse. The Norfolk Herald says there is in that city a colored man perfectly blind, who wends his way through all parts of the city, day and night, without a guide, never failing, unless from sickness, to attend one or other of the churces on Sunday, independent of any assistance.

A Long Ride.—The Springfield Republican says that Mr. James Parker, one of the conductors of the Western Railroad, between Springfield and Boston, has acted in that capacity ever since the opening of the road to that place, in 1839, a period of nine and a quarter years, and rating his trips at two hundred miles a day, he has traveled within the time stated, over five hundred and thirty thousand miles; a distance equivalent to more than twenty-one times the circumference of the globe, or more than a journey to the moon and back.

VARIETY.

The Boston Traveler states that the losses by fire in that city in 1848, amounted to three hundred and forty-seven thousand eight hundred dollars, on which there was an insurance of two hundred and twenty-two thousand seven hundred and twenty-two. The loss in 1847 was one hundred and fifty-six thousand three hundred and forty-four dollars, and the insurance eighty-four thousand three hundred and forty dollars. Increase of loss in 1848, one hundred and ninety-one thousand four hundred and fifty-six dollars. Increase of uninsured loss, forty-three thousand and seventy-four dollars. The loss in 1846 was one hundred and eighty-seven thousand five hundred and eighty-one dollars, and the insurance one hundred and fifteen thousand two hundred and forty-one dollars.

According to a report transmitted to the N. ### BRITISH PERIODICAL LITERATURE.

REPUBLICATION OF

THE LONDON QUARTERLY REVIEW,
THE EDINBURGH REVIEW,
THE NORTH BRITISH REVIEW,
THE WESTMINSTER REVIEW,
AND
BLACKWOOD'S EDINBURGH MAGAZINE.

The wide-spread fame of these splendid Periodicals renders it needless to say much in their praise. As literary organs, they stand far in advance of any works of a similar stamp now published, while the political complexion of each is marked by a dignity, candor, and forbearance, not often found in works of a party character.

They embrace the views of the three great parties in England—Tory, Whig, and Radical—"Blackwood" and the "London Quarterly" are Tory; the "Edinburgh Review" Whig; and the "Westminster Review" Radical. The "North British Review" is more of a religious character, having been originally edited by Dr. Chalmers, and now, since his death, being conducted by his son-in-law, Dr. Hanna, associated with Sir David Brewster. Its literary character is of the very highest order. The "Westminster," though reprinted under that title only, is published in England under the title of the "Foreign Quarterly and Westminster," it being in fact a union of the two Reviews formerly published and reprinted under separate titles. It has, therefore, the advantage, by this combination, of uniting in one work the best features of both as heretofore issued.

The above Periodicals are reprinted in New York, immediately on their arrival by the British steamers, in a beautiful clear type, on fine white paper, and are faithful copies of the originals, Blackwood's Magazine being an exact fac simile of the Edinburgh edition.

TERMS.

CLUBBING.

Four copies of any or all of the above works will be sent to one address, on payment of the regular subscription for three—the fourth copy being gratis.

EARLY COPIES.

Our late arrangement with the British publishers of Blackwood's Magazine, secures to us early sheets of that work, by which we are enabled to place the entire number in the hands of subscribers before any portion of it can be reprinted in any of the American Journals. For this and other advantages secured to our subscribers, we pay so large a consideration, that we may be compelled to raise the price of the Magazine.

☞ Something may therefore be gained by subscribing early.

ALLEDGED CHANGE OF THE SABBATH AT THE RESURRECTION OF CHRIST.

[Section X. of J. A. Begg's Treatise on the Sabbath.]

Is there any better authority for rendering Sabbaton, in that statement, by the English word "week," than we have found for rendering mia by the word "first?" It is the genitive plural of the word every where used throughout the New Testament for the Sabbath, and, with only two other exceptions, is always so translated; so that our translators have here also gone in direct opposition to their own general rendering of the word. To cite the instances in which the Greek Sabbatos occurs in the New Testament, would be to quote every case in which "the Sabbath" is named in our own translation. Suffice it, therefore, to remark that, as exhibited by the Concordance, it occurs about seventy times; and in only one instance besides those by which our translators have endeavored to support the notion of Sunday sanctification, they have themselves given to it the proper rendering of "Sabbath."

The exception to which we have referred, and the only one not immediately supposed to speak of the first day of the week, is the rendering of Luke 18: 12, where our translators make the Pharisee to declare, "I fast twice in the week." To this translation appeal is commonly made as authority for translating Sabbaton "week" in the texts concerning Christ's resurrection. It is, therefore, of importance that we should examine it more minutely. What necessity, then, or propriety, is there, for thus making it to appear as a translation of the original, that the Pharisee, in his boasted sanctity, does declare that he fasted twice in the week? The Greek is plain enough, asserting as it does that he fasted twice on the Sabbath; but it probably appeared to our translators, as it has been assumed by others, that he could not have meant to affirm this. It is supposed that the words can have no other meaning. Were it even perfectly evident, that in this case the Pharisee's boast could not be at all understood in reference to his mode of observing the weekly Sabbath, we would still be called to inquire what else is meant. The certainty that it did not mean the seventh day of the week, even if we were brought to this conviction, would not of itself entitle us to assume that "the Sabbath" is here to be understood of "the week." For were we to reject the plain and usual import of the word, as wholly inapplicable, we should even then be only prepared to seek for a different meaning. Instead of taking for granted that he declares he fasted twice in the week, we might ask for evidence as to what it did mean.

Probably there is less occasion for departing from the true signification of the word in this instance, also, than is usually supposed. Although not in accordance with uniform practice, we believe the Pharisee really meant what he said, and that he considered it meritorious to "fast twice on the Sabbath." It is attested by sufficient evidence, that at the time of our Saviour's appearance in the world, the Jews had not only multiplied their public fasts, so "that they filled almost half their calendar," (Jening's Jewish Antiquities, book 3, chap. 8,) but that some among them fasted weekly on the Sabbath. The opposite was indeed the usual practice. Generally the Jews feasted on the Sabbath. But among the Christians of a later period, also, some fasted on the Sabbath, while others regarded this as a sin.[*] So among the Jews, there were some who made it a rule to fast on the Sabbath. Such seem to have been proverbial even for the severity of their Sabbath fasts. Suetonius (in Vit. Octav. chap. 76,) is cited as representing Octavius to affirm, in an epistle addressed to Tiberuis, "a Jew does not observe the fast of his Sabbath so carefully as I have done to-day." And Justin Martyr, (Lib. 36, cap. 2, sect. 14, p. 524, edit Grævii, Lugd. Bat. 1701,) saith of Moses, "that arriving at Mount Sinai, after wandering and fasting in the deserts of Arabia seven days, he consecrated every seventh day, called the Sabbath, for a perpetual FAST, because that day had put a period to their wandering and hunger." (Jening's Jewish Antiquities ret supra.) We need hardly say, that we do not quote these words as attaching the slightest credit to this statement of Justin, that the Sabbath was so appointed by Moses to be observed by fasting, or that it was at all so treated till after the return from the captivity in Babylon, when the number of their fasts was increased; but the very attempt to give currency to such an interpretation, proves that to no inconsiderable extent the Sabbath must have been so observed in later ages of the Jewish history.

"There are," says an author maintaining the first day of the week to be the Sabbath, "several of the Roman writers (vid. Suet. in Octav. Cap. 76. Pers. Sat. 5, 184, Just. lib. 36) who particularly observe that it was customary with the Jews to fast upon their Sabbath." And, "that custom of the Jews which was to fast on their Sabbath days until their religious assemblies were dismissed, which, as Josephus intimates, was usually done about noon." Jephson's Christian Sabbath Explained. P. 403.

"The Romans did upbraid this people with their Sabbath's fast. Augustus, having been at the Baths, and fasting there a long time together, gives notice of it to Tiberius, thus: that never any Jew had fasted more exactly on their Sabbaths than he did that day. So Martiall, reckoning up some things of unsavory smell, names amongst others, jejunia sabbatariorum; for by that name he did contemptuously mean the Jews, as before I noted. And where the Romans in those times began, some of them, to incline to the Jewish ceremonies, and were observant of the Sabbath, as we shall see hereafter in a place more proper, Persius objects against them this, that being Romans, as they were, they muttered out their prayers, as the Jews accustomed; and by observing of the fast, on the Jewish Sabbaths, grew lean and pale for very hunger. So saith Petronius Arbiter, that the Jews did celebrate their Sabbath by a legal fast; and Justin yet more generally, that Moses did ordain the Sabbath to be a fasting day forever." Heylin's History of the Sabbath, p. 109.

In the Modern History of the Jews, (p. 299,) it is farther stated, that "they differ in opinion concerning the severity and length of the abstinence. Some think themselves obliged to say before the rising of the sun, 'I will fast to-morrow.' During the fast they lie upon a bed harder than usual, lessen the number of pillows, change their fine blankets for coarse, eat not until next day at evening, and conclude with praying to God that their fast may be accepted in the place of a sacrifice. Others eat until the dawn of the day, THEN abstain from food until the stars appear, for that is not esteemed a fast day upon which the sun does not go down."[*]

It is, therefore, attested on evidence sufficiently authentic, that at the time of our Saviour's ministry, strict Jews were accustomed to fast upon the Sabbath; and although there is no authority for such a practice in the law of God, as given by Moses, still, as part of those traditions by which the law of God was made of none effect, it may serve to explain the language of the self-righteous Pharisee, without our having recourse to that mode of interpretation by which "the Sabbath," on which he fasted twice, is converted into the whole "week." For if, while it was usual to fast on the Sabbath, some fasted the entire day, not eating "until next day at even," and "others eat until the dawn of the day. then abstain from food until the stars appear," we have in these two classes examples of what may without great impropriety be called fasting once and fasting twice upon the Sabbath. For although the mode of reckoning time current amongst ourselves, detracts from the meaning of the Pharisee's language, attention to the Scripture order of reckoning from evening to evening may enable us better to understand it. The interval devoted to sleep thus dividing the Sabbath, and all other days, into two parts, of wakefulness, either for worship or for work, the man, making a merit of his fasting, and wishing fully to tell its amount, might so speak of his Sabbath fasting. If, unlike those who fasted only from the dawn of day until the stars appeared, he fasted all the previous evening likewise, he might not improbably express this by saying, "I fast twice on the Sabbath." He was a Pharisee; he was boastful of his good works; and we are naturally, therefore, to expect that the language employed will not fall short, however much it may exceed in amount of meaning, that for which he considered himself entitled to praise and reward. From sunset until the hour of rest may therefore be understood as one of his Sabbath fasts; and his second might either terminate with the public assembly the following noon, or be farther prolonged until the setting of the sun. The latter fast might be esteemed sufficient by those less strict than he, as we find some were contented therewith, who would yet be called Sabbath fasters; so that a different term was really necessary fully to express its more strict or double observance, if, as we have supposed, the Pharisee was included among the number of those who fasted the whole twenty-four hours.

We have actually this very division in one of the Jewish Apocryphal books, where, however, the praise ascribed is for an opposite practice. It is stated of Judith, that "she fasted all the days of her widowhood, save the eves of the Sabbaths AND the Sabbaths; and the eves of the new moons, and the new moons; and the feasts, and solemn days of the house of Israel." Judith 8: 6. All these Apocryphal Books are believed to have been written between the times of Malachi and John the Baptist. Though "never acknowledged by the Jewish church" as canonical, and "not one of them is extant in Hebrew," but "all written in the Greek language," yet confessedly they were written "for the most part by Alexandrian Jews." (Horne's Introduction to the Study of the Bible, vol. 1, p. 457.) Although Sabbath fasts were not then or there practiced, at least by Judith, if we suppose this apocryphal book to state this truly, as we have seen above they were by others, it is remarkable how the Sabbaths and the Sabbath eves, and the new moons and their eves, are thus distinguished. The writers making of her abstaining from fasting upon either a kind of double merit, shows how, when the opposite practice was introduced, a boastful Pharisee, so distinguishing the eves from the days, might say, "I fast twice on the Sabbath."

With indubitable evidence, then, it is proved, that in the time of the Saviour it was a usual thing for some Jews to fast once, or on one part of the day only, while others, regarding themselves as peculiarly strict in observing the tradition of the elders, fasted the evening portion of the day as well as that of the morning. There is surely no need, therefore, for our altering the meaning of the language employed, without a single precedent by which to justify the act; and still less, under such circumstances, can we regard this man's statement of his fasting twice on the Sabbath, as evidence that our Lord's resurrection was on the first day of the week.

THE DEATH OF THE YEAR.

FROM THE SOUTHERN LITERARY GAZETTE.

A DIRGE FOR THE DYING—the pale old year
Is stretched on his couch that must serve for his bier;
He has run his full race, and the goal being won,
He will sink to his grave as his fathers have done.

A link he will add to the lengthening chain—
Of Time that has been, but will ne'er be again;
And that link we shall miss from the few that belong,
To the chain of Life's future as brief as a song!

He has pass'd like a dream of the darkness away—
Like the lightning's white glare, or the meteor's red ray;
We smiled o'er his cradle—we weep o'er his bier—
And they seem born together—the smile and the tear!

Oh, Time! who shall measure the speed of thy flight,
Or teach us to number thy moments aright!
When a year than a moment scarce longer appears,
If its record, alas! be not written in tears!

PROGRESS OF MILTON'S BLINDNESS.

It is now, I think, about ten years (1654) since I perceived my vision to grow weak and dull; and at the same time I was troubled with pain in my kidneys and bowels, accompanied with flatulency. In the morning, if I began to read, as was my custom, my eyes instantly ached intensely, but were refreshed after a little corporeal exercise. The candle which I looked at seemed as if it were encircled by a rainbow. Not long after, the sight in the left part of the left eye (which I lost some years before the other) became quite obscure, and prevented me from discovering any object on that side. The sight in my other eye has now been gradually and sensibly vanishing for about three years. Some months before it had entirely perished, though I stood motionless, every thing which I looked at seemed to be in motion, to and fro. A stiff cloudy vapor seemed to have settled on my forehead and temples, which usually occasioned a sort of somnolent pressure on my eyes, and particularly from dinner to evening. So that I often recollected what is said in the poet Phineas, in the Argonautics:

"A stupor deep his cloudy temples bound,
And when he waked he seemed as whirling round,
Or in a feeble trance he speechless lay."

I ought not to omit that, while I had any sight left, as soon as I lay down on my bed, and turned on either side, a flood of light used to gush from my eyelids. Then, as my sight became more faint, and were emitted with a certain crackling sound; but at present every species of illumination being as it were extinguished, there is diffused around me nothing but darkness, or darkness mingled with ashy brown. Yet the darkness in which I am perpetually immersed seems always, by night and by day, to approach nearer to a white than a black; and when the eye is rolling in its socket, it admits a little particle of light, as through a chink. And though your physicians may kindle a small ray of hope, yet I make up my mind to the malady as quite incurable; and I often reflect that, as the wise man admonishes, days of darkness are destined to each of us. The darkness which I experience, less oppressive than that of the tomb, is, owing to the singular goodness of the Deity, passed amid the pursuits of literature, and the cheering salutations of friendship. But if, as it is written, man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceeds from the mouth of God, why may not one acquiesce in the privation of his sight, when God has so amply furnished his mind and his conscience with eyes? [Milton's Prose Works.

NEVER CROSS A BRIDGE TILL YOU COME TO IT.

'Never cross a bridge till you come to it,' was the counsel usually given by a patriarch in the ministry to troubled and over-careful Christians. Are you troubled about the future? Do you perceive dangers rising in Alpine ranges along your path? Are you alarmed at the state of your business—at the uncertainties impending over your life—at the dubious prospects in reserve for your children—at the gloomy contingencies which fancy sketches and invests with a sort of life-like reality—at the woes which hang over the cause of the Redeemer, or at any earthly evil? Do not cross that bridge until you come to it. Perhaps you will never have occasion to cross it; and if you do, you may find that a timid imagination has overrated greatly the toil to be undergone, or has underrated the power of that grace which can lighten every labor of the Christian. In approaching the Notch of the White Mountains in one direction, the traveler finds himself in the midst of conical hills, which seem to surround him as he advances, and forbid farther progress. He can see but a short distance along his winding way; it seems as if his journey must terminate abruptly at the base of these barriers. He begins to think of turning back his horse, to escape from hopeless enclosure among impassable barriers. But let him advance, and he finds that the road curves around the frowning hills before him, and leads him into another and still other straits, from which he finds escape simply by advancing. Every new discovery of a passage around the obstructions of his path, teaches him to hope in the practicability of his road. He cannot see far ahead at any time; but a passage discovers itself as he advances. He is not required to turn back, nor to scale the steep sides of towering hills. His road winds along, preserving for miles an almost exact level. He finds that nothing is gained by crossing a bridge before he comes to it! Such is often the journey of life. How much of its toilsome ruggedness, would be relieved by careful attention to the above admonition! Never cross a bridge until you come to it. Or, to express the same counsel in a form that does not involve the charge of Hibernicism,—'Be careful for nothing; but in everything, by prayer and supplication, with thanksgiving, let your requests be made known unto God, and the peace of God, which passeth all understanding, shall keep your hearts and minds through Christ Jesus.' [Independ't.

APPEARANCE OF JOHN FOSTER.

It would be next to impossible to convey to any one who was not acquainted with Mr. Foster, a correct impression of his personal appearance. His dress was uncouth, and neglected in the last degree. A long gray coat, almost of the fashion of a dressing-gown; trousers which seemed to have been cherished relics of his boyhood, and to have quarreled with a pair of gaiters, an intervening inch or two of stocking indicating the disputed territory; shoes, the solidity of which occasionally elicited from the wearer a reference to the equipments of the ancient Israelites; a colored silk handkerchief, loosely tied about his neck; and an antique waistcoat, of most uncanonical hue—these, with an indescribable hat, completed the costume of the philosopher. In his walks to and fro from the city of Bristol, he availed himself at once of the support and protection of a formidable club, which, owing to the difficulty with which a short dagger in the handle was released by a spring, he used jocosely to desiguate as a 'member of the Peace Society.' So utterly careless was he of his appearance, that he was not unfrequently seen in Bristol during the hot weather walking with his coat and waistcoat over his arm.

This eccentricity was the occasion of some curious mistakes. At one time, while carrying some articles of dress, in the dusk of the evening, to the cottage of a poor man, he was accosted by a constable, who, from his appearance, suspected they were stolen, an extensive burglary having been recently committed in the neighborhood. Mr. Foster conducted the man to the seat of an opulent gentleman, with whom he was engaged to pass the evening; and the confusion of the constable may be imagined when he was informed of the name of his prisoner, who dismissed him with praise for his diligence.

His was one of those countenances which it is impossible for one to forget, and yet of which no portrait very vividly reminds us. His forehead was a triumph to the phrenologist, and surrounded as it was by a most uncultivated wig, might suggest the idea of a perpendicular rock crowned with straggling verdure; while his calm but luminous eye, deeply planted beneath his massive brow, might be compared to a lamp suspended in one of its caverns. In early life, one would suppose, his countenance must have been strikingly beautiful; his features being both regular and commanding, and his complexion retaining to the last that fine but treacherous hue, which probably indicated the malady that terminated his life. His natural tendency to solitary meditation never showed itself more strikingly than in his last hours. Aware of the near approach of death, he requested to be left entirely alone, and was found shortly after he had expired, in a composed and contemplating attitude, as if he had thought his way into the mysteries of another world.

YOUNG CHANNING.

Thanks to my stars, I can say I never killed a bird, I would not crush the meanest insect that crawls upon the ground. They have the same right to live that I have; they received it from the same Father, and I will not mar the works of God by wanton cruelty.

I can remember an incident of my childhood, which has influenced my whole life and character. I found a nest of birds in my father's forest, which contained four young ones. They had no down when I first discovered them. They opened their little beaks as if they were hungry, and I gave them a few crumbs which I had in my pockets. Every day I returned to feed them. As soon as school was over, I would run for some bread, and sit by the nest to see them eat for an hour at a time. They were now feathered out, and almost ready to fly. When I visited them one morning, I found them all cut up into quarters. The grass around the nest was dyed with blood. Their little limbs were raw and bloody. The mother was on a tree, and the father on a hedge, mourning over their young. I cried myself, for I was a child. I thought, too, that the parents regarded me as the author of their misery, and this increased my unhappiness. I wished to undeceive them. I wanted to sympathize with, and comfort them. When I left the field, they followed me with their eyes, and I fancied with mournful reproaches. I was too young, and too sincere in my grief, to make many apostrophes. But I can never forget my feelings. The impression will never be erased, nor can I ever cease to abhor every species of inhumanity towards inferior animals. [Memoirs.

BE KIND TO THE AGED.

A friend of mine being in the city of B——, saw a short distance before him an old man walking along with great difficulty, and apparently much fatigued. He seemed uncertain which direction to take. Between my friend and the old man, two little girls, eight or ten years of age, were walking and conversing about the old man. 'How tired he appears,' said one. 'I wish we could help him,' said the other. Just then a young man passed by, of whom the old man asked the way to No. 16, —— -st. A hasty answer, which was not at all intelligible, was the only reply. In his bewilderment, the old man struck against a post, and his staff fell from his hand. The largest girl sprang forward to support him, while the other handed him his staff, saying, 'Here it is, sir.' 'Thank you, my good girls,' said the old man; can you direct me to No. 16, —— street? I came to this city to-day to visit my son. Wishing to surprise him, I did not inform him of my intention. I am a stranger here, and have been walking for some time to no purpose.' 'Oh, we will go with you, sir; mother said we might walk for an hour, and we can as well walk that way as any other.' 'God bless you, my kind girls,' said the old man; 'I am sorry to trouble you.' 'Oh,' replied the little girls, 'it is no trouble; we love old folks, and love to do them a favor.' They at length conducted the old man opposite the house which he sought, and he was dismissing them, but they said, 'We must cross the street with you, lest the carriages might run over you.' What a delightful body-guard were these kind children. As they parted, the old man said, 'If you ever visit Berkshire county, come to the house of John B———, and you shall have as hearty a welcome, and as good entertainment, as a Massachusetts farm-house can afford.'

You may imagine how happy these girls were in the consciousness of having done a good deed, though it cost them some little effort. Little did they imagine that they should be held up as examples to others; but I am sure that you will strive to imitate them, that you may enjoy the luxury of doing good. My dear children, the palsied step, the tottering step, may one day be yours. You are now light and active, and fresh with life—so was that old man once; but old age came, and robbed him of his youth and sprightliness, and time may despoil you of your activity and vigor, and you may become as much in need of the kindness of others as was this old man. Do then to others as you would have them do to you—be kind to the aged, that you may in your turn receive kindness when old age and infirmity come upon you. [Mothers' Mag.

THE YOUNG AFRICAN CONVERT IN HAYTI.

Mahommah is a young man who was stolen from Africa and carried to Brazil for a slave; he made his escape in a vessel to New York, and thence to Hayti; and has been converted, as the missionaries believe, and baptized by Mr Judd, of the Baptist Free Mission. He has a quick mind and a tender conscience, and affords much interest to his teachers. Mrs. Judd, in a letter dated Nov. 13th, published in the Christian Contributor, mentions an incident, as follows:—

"Some time since, while reading the account of Abraham's being called to offer up Isaac, (he is reading the Bible by course,) I watched his countenance with anxious interest, to see what effect it had upon him. After explaining and simplifying the language to him, so as to have him be sure and comprehend it, I paused and said to him, 'What do you think of that?' He looked thoughtful a few moments, and then said to me inquiringly, 'Abraham a good man, eh?' 'Yes.' 'O well—very well—very good, if God say so; yes, I think so.' There was one of the sweetest expressions of faith—of perfect filial confidence, on his countenance at this moment, that I ever saw. I could scarcely keep from weeping. Truly, thought I, you are a 'son of Abraham,' possessor of 'like precious faith.' O, if Christians could always feel the same confidence, and say from the heart—'Very good, if God say so,' it would save much unhappiness in the world, where God so often seems to say to us in his providence, 'What I do, thou knowest not now; thou shalt know hereafter.

"Mahommah gives good promise of returning, in due time, to bear Gospel tidings to his parents and other friends in Africa, as a missionary of our Society. He desires to come to be educated here. Shall the means be provided for this purpose? What one rich man will esteem it a pleasure to defray the expense of his education?—or will many contribute to this object?"

Rev. Wm. M. Jones also says:—

"He is certainly a most extraordinary young man. His life thus far is a remarkable one. He is well worthy the patronage of some of our rich brethren who might afford to educate him at McGrawville. O, ye Christian men of wealth, do take hold of his case, and give him such an education as will render him abundantly useful. He appears so promising, that it seems the Lord designs him for a herald of salvation among his far distant countrymen in Africa. Who will educate him?"

WHAT ONE POOR MAN CAN DO.

"A reclaimed drunkard made the following statements a few evenings ago. He had opened a room for the advocacy of Teetotalism, in a very low and degraded neighborhood in the district of Halloway, near London. Many attended; about 300 had signed the pledge, 40 of whom were reclaimed from habitual drunkenness. He had been the means, also, of putting into circulation about 4,000 tracts. He had established a Sunday School, into which about 250 children had been admitted; a day school, the average attendance at which was 120; and an evening school for adults, in which were several persons now able to read a chapter in the Testament. Further, he had founded a Savings' Bank for the children's half pence and farthings; £15 had been paid in, which, instead of being wasted in sweet-meats and fruit, bought on Sunday, was expended last Christmas in shoes, frocks, jackets, and other useful articles. Nor was this all; many had been brought to hear the Gospel preached; and some of those who at first molested the preacher, were now the most ready to protect and assist him. All this was done by one reclaimed man, a working gardener, in the course of twelve months."

RETIREMENT.—Retirement prepares us for all services. Judge Hale, in a letter to his children, makes no scruple to say—'If I omit praying, and reading a portion of the blessed word of God in the morning, nothing goes well with me all the day.' Dr. Boerhave said that his daily practice of retiring an hour in the morning for devotion and meditation, gave him firmness and vigor for the business of the whole day. He goes forth from God, after inquiring his will, and commending himself to his care, fitted for all the successes and disappointments of life.

CHURCH AND STATE.

Several weeks ago, we announced the determination of the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel, to secede from the Church of England, because of its connection with the State. That determination he has since carried out, in a manner honorable to himself, and likely to promote the cause of Dissent. It seems that on account of an order from the Bishop, Mr. Noel left his people much sooner than he at first intended. He did so, however, not till after he had preached a farewell discourse, in which he set forth the principles which had led him to abandon the Establishment, and which he hoped would be thoroughly and candidly examined by his people. Soon after his secession, he published an elaborate Essay on the Union of the Church and the State, which created no small stir. One of the English papers says that the appearance of this volume will be an era in the history of the Church, no such book ever before having come from the hands of a Churchman. It was published on the morning of December 23d, and an edition of two thousand copies was disposed of before evening of that day. On the following Sunday, many ministers took it into their pulpits, read select passages to their congregations, and made appropriate remarks upon them. Judging from the newspaper accounts of the matter, we should say that the excitement produced by this work is altogether unprecedented since the days of the Reformation in Germany, or the Sabbath Controversy of the seventeenth century in England. The Essay is soon to be republished in this country, and will doubtless be read with avidity. Meanwhile our readers will be interested in the following passage from it, which occurs near its close:—

"The union of the churches with the State is doomed, condemned by reason and religion, by Scripture and experience, how can it be allowed to injure the nation much longer? All the main principles on which it rests are unsound. Its State-salaries, its supremacy, its patronage, its compulsion of payments for the support of religion, are condemned by both the precedents and the precepts of the Word of God. We have seen that it sheds a blighting influence upon Prelates, incumbents, curates, and other members of churches. It adds little to the number of pastors, it distributes them with a wasteful disregard to the wants of the population, and it pays least those whom it ought to pay most liberally. It excludes the Gospel from thousands of parishes; it perpetuates corruption in doctrine; it hinders all scriptural discipline; it desecrates the ordinances of CHRIST, confounds the Church and the world, foments schism among Christians, and tempts the ministers of CHRIST, both in and out of the Establishment, to be eager politicians. Further, it embarrasses successive governments, maintains one chief element of revolution in the country, renders the reformation of the Anglican Churches hopeless, hinders the progress of the Gospel throughout the kingdom, and strengthens all the corrupt Papal establishments of Europe.

"Worst of all, it 'grieves and quenches' the Spirit of GOD, who cannot be expected largely to bless the Churches which will not put away their sins. But when it shall be destroyed, we have reason to hope that the Churches will revive in religion speedily. Sound doctrine will then be heard from most of the Anglican pulpits; evangelists will go forth into every part of the land; scriptural discipline will be restored; schisms will be mitigated; Christian ministers will cease to be political partizans; we may look for a larger effusion of the Spirit of GOD, and England may become the foremost of the nations in godliness and virtue."

THE NEWSPAPER PRESS.

Somebody—we do not now remember who—has designated the United States as 'Newspaperdom,' or the land of newspapers. Though this may seem a strange designation, it is not inappropriate, considering the abundance of our productions in that line, when compared with other countries. In Continental Europe, the Press has always been trammeled by the censorship and other legal restraints, so that it has never been able to develop its full power, or exert its natural influence. In Great Britain, the liabilities of publishers, and the stamp duty of some two cents on every sheet of paper, have made newspapers so expensive, as to limit their circulation to the wealthier classes. But in the United States there is no censorship and no stamp duty; consequently newspapers are numerous and cheap, and every class of the community can afford to take them. Some idea of their abundance may be formed from the few statistics at our command. It is said that in the city of New York alone, there are one hundred and sixty-eight periodicals, of which thirteen are daily, nine semi-weekly, sixty-six weekly, fifty-four monthly, thirteen quarterly, one semi-annual. The aggregate yearly circulation of these is nearly seventy millions of copies, which would require some one hundred and forty-eight thousand reams of paper, weighing five million six hundred thousand pounds, and costing about six hundred thousand dollars. If such an amount of newspaper literature is furnished by the city of New York alone, what must be the aggregate furnished by the whole country? It is scarcely possible to estimate it. Enough is known, however, to convince every one that the newspaper press is exerting a vast influence upon the public mind. O, that this influence were as healthful as it is powerful.

LETTERS FROM ILLINOIS—NO. 6.

PLEASANT HILL, near Farmington, Ill.,
8th of 1st mo., 1849.

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

My last letter was principally upon the soil, the water, and the surface formation, of Fulton and Peoria counties. I might have included Knox Co. in the same general description. Besides the advantages there pointed out, there are some others of a temporary nature, which are of much consequence to new settlers. A large portion of the country is as yet unfenced, and much of it will be so for some years to come. Of course these lands are all common for pasturage, so that a farmer can keep any amount of stock for which he can provide fodder during the winter; and as the woods, the glades, the ravines, and the prairies, are all covered with natural grass, all kinds of stall cattle find pasturage quite late in the fall, and very early in the spring. Besides this, there is such an abundance, that any quantity of hay may be cut on the best prairies without any charge. Although this hay is not equal to that made of cultivated grasses, it is almost the only hay at present made in this country, and sells readily in the villages to tavern-keepers and others at four dollars per ton. These natural meadows, and pastures not only afford an opportunity for keeping large numbers of cattle, but give great relief to the early settler in fencing his farm. For his live stock, he needs no fenced pastures, only a fenced stock yard. Hence it is common for several farmers, whose lands lie contiguous to each other, to run a single outside fence round four, five, or six farms, and then make their own inside fences as their means and time will best enable them. In this way, 80 acres of land may be made as productive to a family as 160 acres would be where they would be obliged to provide fenced pasturage, and meadows for mowing. Of course this is a temporary advantage, and is curtailed, and must cease as the country becomes settled and fenced.

The method of breaking and tilling the prairie, is now much improved; it can be hired done at $1 50 per acre. The prairie plough is so contrived and sharpened as to turn over the sod about two inches thick. If this is done between the fifth and eighth months, it rots sufficiently to leave the land in good condition for ploughing and sowing wheat the same fall or autumn. A three-horse plough cuts and turns a sod eighteen inches wide; so that one man and three horses can turn over nearly two acres per day. Very often that which is broken during the fifth month is immediately planted with corn, and will then bring quite a second-rate crop, with but little tillage, and still leave opportunity for ploughing and sowing fall wheat. With these remarks, it is easy to see how rapidly a new farm may be made upon the prairie. If the settler has the means to buy, fence, break, plough, and sow his 40, 80, or 160 acres of land, he may in one year have all that sized farm, as well tilled, and bringing him as profitable a crop, as the best old farms in the Eastern States. Many settlers are doing this, and hence the wilderness is rapidly being transformed into fruitful fields. These circumstances likewise account for the large numbers of live stock which are kept, and the large and increasing quantities of beef and pork which are annually exported from these parts. I have no statistics by which to estimate the number of sheep in the country, but it must be very large. Nearly every farmer has a considerable flock; some consisting of several hundreds, and some of thousands. One establishment which I visited in Peoria county, has two thousand head, and a shepherd is kept to attend them, after the European plan. I was told that another establishment, which I did not see, has eleven thousand head. These things are all so many elements of wealth to the country, and are evidences of its adaptation to support and enrich a large, industrious, and enterprising population.

There is another source of wealth, which at present is but little valued. I allude to our coal beds. So far as I can learn, very little coal has as yet been found on the eastern side of the Illinois River; none on either side sixty miles north of this. Small beds of it have been found in the direction of the Mississippi River and Iowa, but the largest and most valuable beds of it lie within a semi-circle of some sixty miles of this place. All the beds which I have examined, lie in a horizontal position, and appear to open best on the East and South sides of the bluffs of the ravines. The best veins are from four to five feet thick, and have a slight dip West and North. The quality appears to me equal to any of the bituminous coals that I have ever seen in England or America. The quantity in these coal fields is inexhaustible. Wood is as yet so plentiful, that coal is but partially used by the resident population. A few canal-boat loads were sent to Chicago last year, and steamboats have commenced carrying it in small quantities to the South. This trade will doubtless increase yearly. It is used in several steam mills in these counties; but in my opinion neither the home nor the foreign market is as yet more than just begun. Steam-mills and manufactories are in great demand here; and whether eastern capitalists come or not, as capital accumulates here, they will arise and multiply equally with any other interior portion of the United States. A considerable portion of these coal beds are found in what are called the barrens, and many of them are unentered Congress lands. Should the bill reported in Congress this session, by the Hon. Robert Smith, of Illinois, for a railroad from Chicago to the Mississippi River, meet with favor, I think these lands are likely to become an object of as fierce a speculation, as were the coal beds of Schuylkill and Lehigh counties, Pennsylvania, some twenty years ago. The old route, surveyed and partly graded by the State of Illinois, in the days of her public improvement mania, runs longitudinally through this coal region. Whatever may be the result of these projects, we have an intelligent, enterprising, and prosperous population, sufficient, with the ordinary blessings of Divine Providence, to make this a flourishing and wealthy country in a few years. No industrious, economical families or individuals need fear they shall not meet with good success in these parts, in almost any useful calling. I know of no branch of industry that is overdone here, by the supply exceeding the demand, except doctors and lawyers. We have seven doctors in Farmington, where there are about a hundred families; and it is said that the reason why there are not more, is because there are no more dwellings to hire, and they are too poor to build for themselves. Cloth-dressers, tanners and curriers, can find good situations, and plenty of business. Wool is an article of large production and exportation; the present average price is 25c. per lb. Hides, closely trimmed of horns, tails, and leg pieces, are plentiful at 3 to 3 1-4c. per lb.; oak bark $2 25 per cord; lime at from 15 to 18c. per bushel. Shoe-makers, carpenters and builders, blacksmiths, and wheelwrights, are all in much demand. Indeed, I think that in no part of the western country can labor or capital be laid out with more certainty of speedy and profitable returns than in these. School-teachers, male and female, of good repute, and especially such as have received and academic education at the East, are in much demand. In all our settlements here our brethren have particularly mentioned the trades and callings above specified, as very greatly needed in their respective settlements; and have particularly urged upon me the duty of giving this information, that such of our brethren at the East as desire to emigrate, may be informed of the opportunities that they may find for themselves and their families. I forbear pointing out one location as better than another, so that when any immigrant arrives, such may have an opportunity of presenting the claims of his own location. Each is anxious to see brethren of his own faith settle in his own immediate vicinity. What I have written in respect to the country, I have written in sober truth, irrespective of any of these local feelings, and on my own part, I am conscious of no other prevailing motive than a sincere desire to subserve the welfare of my brethren in the faith, and promote the cause of God at large. ## MATTERS AND THINGS IN CHINA.

[An arrival from China, last week, brought us a familiar letter about matters and things in the Celestial Empire. Presuming that our readers will be interested in what has interested us, we shall take the liberty to print portions of the letter this week, and perhaps more next week.]

* * * Thus endeth our editorial column, from which the most natural transition conceivable is to the domestic department. This I will fill with scraps from my "kitchen memorandum," premising, that every thing is sold by the 'catty,' which is about equal to a pound avoirdupois. We can buy in the smallest quantities, but I give the amount to the dollar, to avoid confusion. Beef, 14 catties to the dollar; mutton 12 do.; hams 10; pork and lard 16; fowls vary so much that I cannot venture to give the price—they are not higher than at home; native butter, when we can blind our eyes and consciences enough to eat it, 4 catties to the dollar; corn 100; flour 62; bread, in loaves about the size of the sixpenny loaves in New York, 30 loaves to the dollar; native candles 10 catties; oil 20; rice 75; sugar (native, brown) 16; white (rock-candy) 12; milk 25; fish 20; potatoes (sweet) 150; hen's eggs, at 6 cash apiece, and duck's eggs at 7, making a variation of from 200 to 250 to the dollar, according to the number of cash at which it is valued. This varies, ranging from 1,400 to 1,500. This cash is our pocket money. But the most convenient way of carrying it, is dangling about the neck, or across the arm, when it resembles strings of sausages more than any thing else to which I can compare it, being tied in bunches of a hundred cash each, on two strings, linked together at intervals. Foreigners, however, have little inducement to load themselves down with these offerings to Mammon, the natives understanding the market so much better, that, even making allowance for the per cashage, which they consider it their prerogative to abstract, they can do better for you than you can for yourself as a general thing.

Thus much for the necessaries of life; now for its luxuries. One would think that China should abound in tea, and that at the command of every one. But the fact is far otherwise. Poor tea is not scarce, but it is next to impossible to obtain good tea, on account of the monopoly among tea merchants. Latterly, however, we have been favored to find tolerably good. The different spices are common and cheap. Coffee about the same as at home. Sweet potatoes are in market from September to May, inclusive; peas, very large and nice, about the same length of time; and dates, (dried) the year round. The native fruits, we have in great varieties, and cheap. But as my "kitchen memorandum" is chronicler for the year, whose circuit we have now nearly completed, I will copy in order, beginning with August, our first month here:—

August—Green-corn, squashes, egg-plant, peaches, tomatoes, beans, and melons.
September—The same, and pears in addition.
October—Beans, squashes, tomatoes, and quinces.
November—Oranges, pumpkins, and dried fruit.
December—No variation.
January—The same, with some additional dried fruits, excellent for table sauce.
February—Varieties of "greens." The young stalks, and tender shoots of vegetables, very fine indeed. No American names for them.
March—No changes to report.
April—Great varieties of "greens." One resembles the asparagus, but has a very large stalk. The Chinese call it "woo-sung." Also the tender shoots of the bamboo, in size and taste resembling an ear of green-corn.
May—The same—with the addition of cherries.
June—Several new kinds of fruit, whose Chinese names would do you no good, unless the words, "mag-tse," "kaw-bah," "pebo," and "kwang-koo," convey more information to your ears than mine. The last-named is the cucumber; the others are of the peach and plumb kind, but not exactly either.
July—Egg plant, and the fruit of the "strawberry tree," which resemble very much our American strawberry, except that they grow on trees, are less sweet, and much larger. We have also apples, small, but good, and purple plums, larger than the apples, and excellent. Peaches are in market, but neither fine nor abundant this year, owing to the heavy and protracted rains. I cannot learn that so rainy a season is within the memory of the "oldest inhabitant."

Our teacher often interests us with wonderful accounts of the wonderful country that China was "in the olden time," the events that transpired, and the sages who flourished and have passed away. Although a very intelligent man himself, I believe he has full faith in the marvels he relates. He tells us of a learned physician, who lived a thousand years ago, who at one time took a diseased bone from the arm of a sufferer, washed it clean, and replaced it, making it sound and useful as before. Afterwards he wished to cure a man of the headache by taking out and cleansing in the same way the contents of the skull. But the poor frightened invalid only rewarded the good physician by taking away his life; and the populace, believing the learned books to be the root of the evil, burnt them in a rage, and the art, thus lost to the world, has never been recovered. Since that time, surgical operations are almost if not entirely unknown in China, and even the extracting of a tooth is considered a feat worthy of great note.

Our teacher also tells us of a time when men had the art of constructing animals from wood, fully adequate to the labors usually assigned them; horses, which could travel a hundred miles a day, and were subject, through mechanical skill, to the guidance of the driver, whose hand turned them whithersoever he would; oxen and birds were among these automaton wonders, whose chief excellence consisted, I believe, after all, in their requiring no food. Now all this I should consider far too trifling to write, but for the natural queries which it awakens. Are not these traditions, the echo of those wise whispers, which carry the wonder-loving antiquary back to the remote days of "old sublime," when railroads and balloons were in their glory, and all those other wonders of science which authorized the wise man to say, "There is no new thing under the sun?" And the books which contained this wonderful art are also lost, as our teacher added, with a mournful face and tone. I asked the teacher if those wooden horses were like those we sometimes see paraded through the streets, and at the end of a long ceremony burnt, with abundance of "ghost money," tsz-din, for the benefit of the departed. "O no," he said, "the latter is all deception, falsehood; but the other was a reality."

The circumstance to which I particularly referred him, may interest you, and I repeat it. We encountered it, accidentally, in one of our walks, as we often do similar scenes. A platform was erected in the middle of the street, to the front side of which was fastened a horse with a wooden frame, and paper exterior, of the size of a Shetland pony, fantastically painted, and decorated with what might have been the trappings of war or pilgrimage, I know not which. On the platform were incense-candles burning, and a variety of ornamental decorations. Next was a still larger platform, on which was placed a table, covered with showy ornaments, among which should be reckoned, not last or least, three images, which I might have mistaken for idol gods, but that the central one was chanting something in the native tongue, accompanied at intervals with loud beating on a tambourine. We knew by the unshaven head, that they could not be of the prevailing order of Budhists. So they must be Taouists, the long cue at the back of the head being coiled around a fastening in the form of a hand, clenching the pin that confined it. This is the badge peculiar to the Taouists. The two outside priests were dressed much after the Romish style, with embroidered satin robes, and sashes. The central one, who "towered above the rest," was more moderately adorned, and chanted his reading with a zeal that would have been truly praiseworthy, had not his wandering eyes, and pliant neck, plainly indicated that his thoughts were with the multitude going with "the foreigners." We learned that the present ceremony was performed to "Choo-koong-tuh," [complete the merit,] as it is called, of the deceased parents of the present actors, for whose benefit these treasures were to be burnt at the close of the ceremony, and sent into the other world, an unquestionable evidence of filial affection. The pony was a special present to the mother.

One cannot wonder, that a man as intelligent as our teacher, should pronounce all this deception, falsehood; but the less enlightened often do the same, not hesitating to say that these things are entirely valueless, but that the poor ghosts don't know enough to detect the fraud. This, my dear brother, is heathenism. I asked the teacher, "if these things are so, why they persist in practicing them?" He said it was "merely as a ceremony, similar to those observed by some foreigners;" and, explaining himself, he said he referred to the French, which seems to be but another term here for a Roman Catholic. There being many of the French Romanists in China, the resemblance between their religion and that of the Chinese, induced the well-known remark of Pire Primare, that "he was driven to conclude that the devil had practiced a trick to perplex his friends the Jesuits." Perhaps he let the natives into the secret. One might wonder, otherwise, at the want of success which has attended their labors, numerous and active as they have been and are in many parts of China.

REVIVAL AT NEW MARKET, N. J.—From a business letter of Elder W. B. Gillett, we copy the following:—'God has visited us in great mercy, and greatly revived his Zion in this place. An increased interest was felt in our social meetings in October; the brethren and sisters were revived, and engaged in their duties with unusual fervor and zeal. Soon the lukewarm and wanderers began to confess their faults, and take up the cross. The impenitent were alarmed, and cried for mercy. Often the inquiry was, 'What shall I do to be saved?' Quite a number of the youth have obtained a hope, and others are mourners in Zion.'

A GOOD SUBJECT FOR PREACHING.—We learn from the Birmingham (England) Gazette, that Mr. Thomas Ingram, of Ticknell, near Bewdly, by his will left a legacy, the interest of which is to be applied to procure three sermons, in as many different churches, in or near Birmingham, yearly, 'On the kind and merciful treatment of all dumb animals, but more especially that of the horse,' and 'that on Monday, previous to the preaching of such sermon, notice be inserted in the Birmingham Gazette, requesting the masters of families to direct their servants, having the care of their horses, to attend service on that day.

RELIEF FOR SABBATH-KEEPERS IN PENNSYLVANIA.—In the Senate of the State of Pennsylvania, on the 23d of January, Mr. Potteiger presented and read the following Supplement to the Act under which the Seventh-day Baptists have been so flagrantly persecuted for a few years past:—

A Supplement to an act for the prevention of vice and immorality and of unlawful gaming and to restrain disorderly sports and dissipation.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, in General Assembly met, and it is hereby enacted, by the authority of the same, That nothing contained in the first section of the act to which this is a supplement, shall be construed to extend to any person or persons who conscientiously observe the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath; and in all prosecutions under said first section of the act aforesaid, a certificate, signed by the pastor, or any elder or officer of any religious society conscientiously observing the seventh day of the week as the Sabbath, shall be sufficient evidence of membership in said society, and on the prosecution thereof every justice of the peace before whom such prosecutions may be commenced shall dismiss the same at the costs of the informer.

'RELIGIOUS FAIRS.'

To the Editor of the Sabbath Recorder:—

Allow me a short space in your columns, in reply to an article upon Religious Fairs, which appeared in your paper of the 11th instant, signed 'Omicron.' His remarks are called forth by an accident which occurred at a fair recently held in the New Congregational Church, in Pawcatuck, R. I., and after narrating the sad occurrence, he expresses his doubts, concerning the raising of funds for religious purposes by such means. Were this all he expressed, we would not complain; but in reference to the Fair alluded to, he makes several false statements, which, in their tendency, are calculated to convey a wrong impression, and prejudice many against such social gatherings. These statements I now wish to correct.

In the first place, the occasion was an annual meeting of the ladies of the congregation, for the sale of such articles as had been made by them in their social assemblies during the year, with such additions as they had otherwise obtained; and was not, as Omicron says, for the purpose of helping defray the expense of finishing the house. The house itself is a plain structure. There is nothing gaudy or showy in its appearance, and we do not think the society is chargeable with 'the sin of a spirit of competition, to outvie each other in the erection of costly temples.' It may, however, to the mind of Omicron, be superior to his own church, (for I suppose his vocation to be that of a clergyman,) and on this account has perhaps excited his jealousy.

Again, the Fair was held in the church, because there was no other place in the village, suitable or large enough for their accommodation, at their command. Omicron does not approve of this; and in support of his argument, gives a scriptural illustration where the buyers and sellers were scourged from the temple, for trafficking in so sacred a place. If this is his criterion, I would respectfully ask him to examine the subject more minutely, and see if the two cases bear any comparison. To my mind, there is no connection whatever. The sole object of the one was to promote their worldly interests, while that of the other was truly spiritual and purely benevolent. I will agree with him thus far, that a church should be kept sacred, and used for no other purpose but for religious worship. But there may be exceptions; and in the case alluded to, I do believe the end justifies the means. On this occasion, the articles offered for sale were not in the least calculated to excite 'pride, vanity, and extravagance,' whatever the effect might have been on Omicron. There was no 'gambling in lotteries,' nor would a 'mock marriage have graced the occasion,' had the evening passed off without interruption. Such an idea was not even contemplated by the Managers. In regard to all this, Omicron has evidently been misled by his own imagination, or been duped by the prejudice of others. He wishes to be understood, that 'he would not cast any reflection upon the Fair alluded to,' but as certain as fire will burn, and cold congeal, his remarks do reflect upon the Managers, and that severely. I am pleased to learn, however, that they are not to be daunted by the misrepresentations and false statements that have been made, but as early as practicable will hold another Fair, which I trust will fully attain the object desired. In justice to the Managers and the ladies of that society, these remarks are respectfully submitted.

A CALIFORNIA MINING COMPANY.

Our friend, Dr. J. D. B. Stillman, sailed for California last week, in the ship Pacific, as physician to "The New England Mining Company." We hope to receive letters from him occasionally, giving incidents of his voyage, and a true account of the Gold Regions. Meanwhile, we are happy to be able to lay before our readers the following particulars relative to the Company with which he is connected. We copy from 'The Independent:'

"The Company is composed of twenty-five members, each putting a share of five hundred dollars into the capital stock. They have a President, a Vice-President, a Secretary, and a Business Committee of three, who, in connection with the President and Secretary, transact all the money operations of the Association. The latter Committee is to be changed frequently, two going off from it every two weeks, and their places being supplied by other members of the Association. The Company intend to direct their efforts, on reaching California, to mining in company, at such locality as may be selected by a majority of their members; and in case any one should be sick, or die, their articles insure provision for his proper nursing and medical treatment, and for the interment of his body at a place that can afterwards be found. The articles of agreement prohibit the performance of unnecessary labor on Sunday, and the practices of swearing, gambling, and the use of intoxicating liquors; and they provide for the expulsion of any who may be idle or vicious. Besides the share which they have in the capital stock of the Association, the members are at liberty to take with them goods, &c., to the amount of two thousand dollars each, as a private venture. Each of them is provided by the Association with a Bible and prayer-book. They take with them, as members of the Company, a physician, an assayer, with all his needful apparatus, and three skillful mechanics. One of the Company is to act as chaplain. They take the complete frame and covering of a house, so finished and numbered that its pieces can instantly be put together on reaching their locality. They have four canvas tents; two gold-washing machines; a force and suction pump, for draining the water from their diggings; machines for mining; two good boats; a double wagon; and wheelbarrows in large numbers. They have also provided themselves with provisions for a year. The duration of the Association is limited to ten months from the time of their sailing, five of which will be occupied in reaching their destination."

Free Academy.—The Free Academy of the City of New York was opened on the 27th of January, with appropriate exercises. Its design is to furnish the means of a more thorough education to scholars who have made certain attainments in the Public Schools. It has a President, together with Professors of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy, History and Belles-Letters, Latin and Greek, French, Spanish, German, Chemistry, and Drawing—in short, a Faculty which would do honor to any College. The building occupies an eligible site at the corner of Twenty-third Street and Lexington Avenue, is 125 feet by 80 feet on the ground, and four stories high. The entire cost of its erection has been about $50,000.

Going to Law.—The two divisions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, North and South, are going to have a great lawsuit about the property which belonged to the whole Methodist Church before the South withdrew. Zion's Herald says that Hon. Messrs. Daniel Webster, and Reverdy Johnson, have been engaged by the Commissioners of the Methodist E. Church, South, as counsel in the prosecution for the funds of the Methodist E. Church. Hon. Rufus Choate has been retained, it is said, by the Book Agents of the M. E. Church, as one of the counsel in the expected prosecution of the claim of the M. E. Church, South, on the property of the Church.

War in Africa.—The Liberia Herald of the 24th of November says that a dreadful war has been raging in the Bo Porah country. The Mendians, in considerable force, attacked and captured King Boolah's town, during his absence. The King immediately rallied a large force of the Kondahs, and laid siege to the town. Three times the Mendians sallied out to cut their way through the Kondahs, but were as often driven back within the town, where famine speedily seized them. These hostilities having stopped the trade with Liberia, a party of civilizes was dispatched from that country with fire-rockets, to terminate the war. Famine had already commenced its death-work among them, but yet the besieged would not open the gates, and rockets were at length discharged. This had the desired effect. A few days afterward the pestilence broke out, and they died by scores. 'Dis fire de debbel,' said they, and opened their gates, and yielded themselves to their fate. The dead were found in heaps around the walls.

Erie Railroad.—The Binghamton papers are filled with accounts of the activity of their flourishing town since the Erie Road was opened. The streets are thronged with teams and people, and all branches of trade were feeling the benefit of the opening of this new avenue to New York. The freight house at the depot is full of goods and produce, awaiting the departure of the cars. The large quantities taken out by the heavy freight trains, but make room for the quantities daily arriving at the depot. Among other articles, large quantities of beef, pork, flour, salt, mutton, butter, lard, venison, wool, dried-apples, grain, poultry, shingles, staves, and various other articles, are carried off, and merchandize, &c., brought into the country. The trade which formerly went to Syracuse from Cortland, Tompkins, Tioga, and Madison Counties, now to a considerable extent goes to New York over the Erie Railroad, it being the cheaper route. When the summer commences, the trade over this road will be immense.

LAST WEEK'S CONGRESSIONAL PROCEEDINGS.

January 22.

In the Senate, Mr. Dix presented the resolutions of the New York Legislature instructing her Representatives to vote against the extension of Slavery in the New Territories, also against the Texan Claim of Boundary, and against the Slave Trade in the District of Columbia. A motion was made to print, which gave rise to a long and warm debate between Northern and Southern Members, some of the latter contending that the resolutions were an insult to the slaveholding States. The motion to print prevailed. The California Bill was then taken up, but no action was had.

In the House, the Territorial Bills for the establishment of Governments in California and New Mexico, were made the order of the day for January 30, and to continue the order of the day, except on Fridays and Saturdays, until disposed of. Petitions were presented by Mr. Wilson, from the New Hampshire Legislature, respecting Slavery. A bill was passed, granting Daniel Drake Henry $2,000, and two sections of land, for services in the Mexican War. The Civil and Diplomatic Bill was considered. Leave was asked, but not granted, to introduce the petition of Cyrus Hill and others of the City Government of Washington, praying the abolition of the Slave Trade in the District of Columbia.

January 23.

In the Senate, the bill providing for a reciprocity of trade between the United States and Canada, was taken up, and after an able speech from Mr. Dix, was passed over. Various petitions were presented, among which was one for aid to build a railroad to California.

The House had under consideration, and finally passed, the Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill. An item of $10,000 for purchasing Portraits of the Presidents, to ornament the White House, was rejected. The amendment relative to mileage of military officers was also rejected, killing that reform for the present session.

January 24.

The Senate received the Civil and Diplomatic Appropriation Bill passed by the House, and referred it to the Finance Committee. The California State Bill was taken up, and after some discussion was referred to a Select Committee. The bill for a uniform and reduced rate of postage was discussed but not acted upon.

The House had under consideration a bill for the extension of the Revenue Laws over Alta California; it was referred to the Committee of the Whole, and ordered printed. The Army Appropriation Bill was also under consideration.

January 25.

In the Senate, various petitions were presented, among which was one from Arkansas, numerously signed, praying Congress to take measures for the construction of a railroad to the Pacific. A resolution was passed, directing the Committee on Pensions to inquire into the expediency of graduating pensions allowed to wounded soldiers according to the extent of the injuries received by them.

In the House, various bills were reported, and referred to Committee of the Whole. Mr. Greeley, from the Committee on Public Lands, reported a bill providing for the reduction of the price of lands bordering on Lake Superior. The Army Appropriation Bill was taken up, and, after considerable debate, passed. A bill was reported, providing for the coinage of gold dollars.

January 26.

In the Senate, Mr. Atherton presented a series of resolutions passed by the Legislature of the State of New Hampshire, instructing her Representatives, and requesting her Senators to vote against the establishment of Slavery in the New Territories, and to oppose the slave traffic in the District of Columbia. Several unimportant bills were passed, after which the Senate went into Executive Session.

The House was mostly occupied with private bills, of which sixty-six were passed.

January 27.

The Senate was not in session

The House passed a bill giving extra compensation to certain officers of Commodore Wilkes' Exploring Expedition. A resolution was adopted, authorising an investigation into the charges which have been preferred against Judge Conklin, of Northern New York. The bill to establish a Commission for the settlement of private claims, was debated, but not voted upon.

The Astor Library.—The Legislature of this State have granted a charter of incorporation for the trustees appointed by the late Mr. Astor. The will appropriated four hundred thousand dollars to establish a Public Library in the city of New York, to be accessible at all reasonable hours and times, for general use, free of expense, to persons resorting there, subject only to such rules and regulations as the trustees may from time to time enforce for general convenience. The trustees are also allowed to expend any surplus income of the fund, in procuring public lectures. Only one hundred and twenty thousand dollars are to be expended in the site and building, and a like sum for the Library, in the first instance; the remaining one hundred and sixty thousand dollars to constitute a fund, of which the interest only shall be expended. Nine thousand dollars a year will pay current expenses, and make a very respectable yearly addition to the Library.

Revolting Barbarity.—A private letter received in Pittsburg, from Helena, Arkansas, relates the following circumstance of revolting barbarity:

'A steamboat touched at the wharf, and landed a man, his wife and child, suffering with the cholera. It was raining at the time, and the man, enfeebled by disease, fell into the river before he reached the shore. He finally struggled out, and, sick as he was, began searching for a place of shelter. Not a door was opened for him: the hotels refused him admittance. At length he found a shed which afforded some sort of shelter. Here he took his wife and infant—and in a few hours the whole of them died.

Death of an Old Chief.—The Milwaukie Wisconsin notices the death of Thomas Williams, aged ninety years, a distinguished chief of the Iroquois Nation, and descended from the Rev. John Williams, of Deerfield, Mass., who, with his family and parishoners, was taken captive at the sacking of his native town, by the French and Indians, in the year 1704. The deceased was an active participant in the scenes of the Revolution, espousing the cause of the British at Bennington and Saratoga. During the War of 1812, by special invitation of the United States Government, he placed himself beneath its flag, and was present at the battle of Plattsburg. He had for many years maintained the tenets of the Christian faith, and died as he had lived, respected and beloved by his people, and in the hope of a blissful immortality.

Important from Yucatan.—A telegraphic dispatch, dated New Orleans, Jan. 25, says that highly important news has just been received from Yucatan. A great battle has been fought between 8,000 Indians on one side and 500 American volunteers on the other. The Indians were driven back after a desperate struggle, and American valor was again triumphant. The American loss was severe; they had 43 killed and a large number wounded, many mortally. The Indian loss was supposed to be immense. The Indian town of Tila was captured and burnt. The Americans were on the eve of marching toward Basalus, where a decisive battle was anticipated. The next news was looked for with much anxiety.

VARIETY.

The cholera has entirely disappeared from the vicinity of New York. The whole number of cases which have occurred at the Quarantine since the arrival of the New York, have been one hundred and two; of which fifty-two died, and fifty were discharged cured. Of these, fifty-nine cases occurred among the passengers of the New York, and twenty-nine of that number died. Of the old inmates of the hospital, forty-three were taken sick, and twenty-two died.

The Liberia Herald says that there have been captured by British cruisers, nine slavers off Gallenas, Sea-Bar, and Gallabah. Her Majesty's frigate Amphitrite captured, during her stay on the Bight of Benin, six slavers, three of which contained nine hundred and seventy-three slaves. H. M. steam frigate Penelope, Commodore Sir Charles Hotham, K. C. B., captured a large Brazilian steamer on the South Coast, fully equipped for the slave trade.

Commodore Stockton's gold mines at Whitehall, Va., have been worked during one week by his new machinery, now for the first time in operation. Fifty negroes were employed in the work, and the product for the week was eight thousand two hundred dollars. This is quite equal to California, being an average of twenty-seven dollars and thirteen cents daily to each man. The amount will be greater as the vein is worked deeper.

Cassius M. Clay, through the columns of the Examiner, proposes a convention of the anti-slavery men of Kentucky, to be held at Louisville, next spring, for the purpose of organization, with a view to secure the adoption of some scheme of emancipation in the new Constitution.

A bill is before our Legislature for the incorporation of another Suspension Bridge Company at Niagara Falls. George W. Clinton, Peter B. Porter, and Mr. Ellett, the architect of the bridge lately built, are to be the trustees. It is proposed to build the bridge from a point on the American shore just below the Falls.

We learn that Messrs. J. B. Lippincott & Co., of Philadelphia, are binding a copy of Webster's Quarto Dictionary in a splendid style, to be presented by the publishers, G. & C. Merriam, to T. Babington MacCauley. The publishers have received an order from the authorities of the city of New York for forty-seven copies of the work, to be placed in forty-seven of the Public Schools, for the use of the teachers and scholars.

Messrs. Allen & Paxson of this city have determined to establish another line of steamers on the Pacific, between San Francisco and Panama. The propeller Hartford, which they have recently placed on the line, will leave this city the 1st of February. The steamer Senator is also about to leave for the purpose of running between the same ports.

The Memphis, Tenn., papers, Jan. 16th, give long details of the ravages of the heavy rains which had fallen thereabouts since the preceding Friday. Bridges have been swept away, swamp grounds heavily inundated, and portions of the country roads overflowed.

Henry Nash, who, while clerk of the steamboat Ohio Mail, last summer, killed a hand on board the boat at Bloomington, Iowa, has had his trial at that place. The verdict of the jury was manslaughter, and the prisoner was sentenced to the State Prison of Iowa, at hard labor, for seven years, and to pay a fine of $10,000.

John H. Prentiss, Esq., has sold his Freeman's Journal establishment to Messrs. Daniel Shaw, and J. T. Titus, who become its proprietors and editors. Mr. Prentiss has published a paper at Cooperstown nearly forty-one years, and was the father of the Press in the Empire State.

Miss Sarah Creshore, a member of the Handel and Haydn Society of Boston, died of Hydrophobia, at Castleton, Vt., on the 19th ult. She was bitten in the foot by a dog last September.

It is supposed that the new census will show the population of Upper Canada to be about 700,000. Lower Canada is estimated to contain 800,000.

The steamship Crescent City returned to N. Y. last week from a voyage to Chagres. She reports considerable sickness on the Isthmus, and the death of several California adventurers.

Hon. Henry Clay has accepted an appointment from the Legislature of Kentucky as United States Senator.

The N. Y. Mirror, of the 16th January, says that the packet ship Montezuma, Captain Lowber, which arrived from Liverpool after a most disastrous passage of fifty-seven days, encountered a succession of hurricanes, and was visited by pestilence and frost in addition. She had nearly three hundred and fifty passengers, 20 of whom died of small-pox, 22 were taken on shore to the hospital, sick with the ship fever, six of the crew had their hands frost-bitten, and one seaman was lost overboard.

The ship Apollo recently left New York for California, full of goods and passengers. She had on board two newspaper presses, types, paper, and ink, and everything complete for the establishment of a newspaper at the Gold Region, under the charge of Mr. Reuben C. More, and John B. Ormiston. This is, indeed, enterprise.

The New York True Sun says that some house in Wall-st. purchased up, on Saturday, all the revolvers they could lay hands on. Allen's establishment was completely gutted. The price of the California indispensables has advanced three dollars each, and the demand is tremendous.

Mr. John Thompson, publisher of the Bank Note Reporter, recovered in the Superior Court, a verdict of ten thousand dollars, the total amount claimed, against the proprietors of the Sun newspaper, for libels several months ago, impeaching his integrity, and assailing his character, in terms of unusual reproach and abuse. The verdict is one of the heaviest we have known.

Henry J. Rider was examined before the Mayor of Cincinnati, and held to bail in the sum of one thousand dollars, on the 12th ult., on the charge of kidnapping, in having abducted a mulatto out of the State of Ohio, without taking the preliminary step of having the negro first examined before a Justice of the Peace.

A letter from Thomas Spooner, Esq., at Franconia, gives the recent record of the famous thermometer in that region. He says: 'Our spirit glass was down yesterday morning, the 11th inst., to 24 degrees below zero; this morning 22 degrees below. On Monday morning last, 19 degrees below. The mercury was down to thirty degrees below zero on the 11th.'

The Boston Transcript says that a new History of the United States, in three volumes octavo, from the pen of a distinguished member of the Massachusetts Bar, has been completed, and is in the hands of a New York publishing house. Richard Hilldreth, Esq., is said to be the author.

Hon. Charles Marsh, of Woodstock, Vt., died in that village on the 11th inst., at the advanced age of eighty-four years. Mr. M. graduated at Dartmouth College in 1786, was an eminent lawyer, and for several years represented the Woodstock District in Congress. He was the father of Hon. Geo. P. Marsh.

Gen. James Cook, an esteemed citizen of Mercer county, New Jersey, fell down, while in the Princeton Bank on Thursday, and almost instantly expired. He was the father of Colonel Cook, the Superintendent of the Camden and Amboy Railroad.

The number of steamboats which passed the little town of Cairo, Ill., on the Mississippi, during the year 1848, is given at four thousand nine hundred and fifty-six—or, about one arrival every 1 3-4 hours.

A bill was recently reported in the House of Representatives of Massachusetts, by the committee of the Judiciary, making it a penal offence to manufacture or circulate shop bills bearing a similitude to bank bills.

Captain Knight, of the New World, has declined accepting the medals offered him by the Humane Society for his conduct in the affair of the Ocean Monarch, saying, he had only done his duty, and could therefore accept no reward for it.

Henry Clay was unanimously re-elected President of the American Colonization Society at its recent annual meeting, held in Washington.

Rev. W. Taylor, of the Baltimore M. E. Conference, has been appointed by Bishop Waugh to the California station. His coadjutor in this field is Rev. Isaac Owens, of the Indiana Conference.

A Typographical Association has been formed by the printers of Syracuse, N. Y.—providing, among other things, that in case of sickness, each member shall be entitled to two dollars a week for subsistence.

Fourteen Days later from Europe.—The steamship Canada arrived at New York on Monday evening last, with foreign news to Jan. 13. There is nothing of special importance. In England, the cholera was on the increase; cotton and provisions had declined. France is quiet. There was a sanguinary battle in Spain about the 1st of January, between the Carlist and the Government troops. The Austrian army is still successful, but has not been very active. The Pope is at Gaeta.

New York Market, Monday, Jan. 29.

ASHES—Pots $6 87; Pearls 7 87.——FLOUR AND MEAL—Flour, pure Genesee 5 87 a 6 00; common and good brands 5 56 a 5 62; Rye Flour 3 37. Meal 3 00.——GRAIN—Wheat, Long Island and Western 1 08 a 1 12. ## MISSIONARY ASSOCIATION—EXECUTIVE BOARD.

A Quarterly Meeting of the Executive Board of the Seventh-day Baptist Missionary Association will be held in New York on the evening of third-day, February 6, 1849.

By order of the Board, GEO. B. UTTER, Rec. Sec.

FARM AT AUCTION.

WILL positively be sold at Public Vendue, on Thursday, 8th of February, a Valuable Farm, containing about ninety acres, situated in the Township of Piscataway, N. J., half a mile from the city of New Brunswick, formerly owned by Jonathan Dunham, deceased. The improvements are a large comfortable Dwelling House, new Barn and Stabling, and out buildings, and a never-failing well of water at the door—the whole well watered by two streams running through it. There are about eight acres of Wood, the remainder is good tillable and meadow land. There is also running across the Farm a Valuable Copper Mine. For further particulars, apply to Jonathan Drake, on the premises, or to the subscriber at Metuchin. Sale to commence at 1 o'clock, P. M., when terms, which will be liberal, will be made known.

SAMUEL DUNHAM.

FARM FOR SALE.

THE subscriber offers for sale his farm, situated in the town of Genesee, county of Allegany, N. Y. Said farm codsists of 280 acres of first-rate land, 175 of which is level, ann the remainder gradually rising side-hill; all of which is susceptible of cultivation, mostly adapted to grazing purposes. About 75 acres, however, is a gravely quick soil, as productive of wheat and corn, as any in the southern part of said county. Upon said farm is about 100 acres improvement, two framed barns, and a large two-story framed house, well inclosed, lately built, and conveniently calculated. There are two good wells of water upon said farm, and it is also abundantly supplied with numerous brooks and springs. Said farm is situated in a good neighborhood, and convenient to school, and the central place of business for the western part of said town; and on the main traveled road from Angelica to Smithport. For pleasantness and locality it is not surpassed by any in the township or vicinity. To those wishing to purchase a good farm, the present opportunity offers rare inducements. The farm will be sold low for cash; or, if desired, by paying one-half of the purchase money down, the balance will be arranged to accommodate purchasers for any reasonable length of credit. A careful view of the premises by a discerning individual, is only requisite to a thorough conviction that an investment made under such favorable terms as the subscriber offers, is but safe and a fair speculation. For farther information, address the subscriber, P. M. at West Genesee, Allegany Co., N. Y., or inquire at his house.

JARED MAXSON.

ALFRED ACADEMY AND TEACHERS' SEMINARY.

W. C. KENYON, A. M., }
IRA SAYLES, A. M., } Principals.

Assisted by nine able and experienced Teachers, five in the Male Department, and four in the Female Department.

The Trustees of this Institution, in putting forth another Annual Circular, would take this opportunity to express their thanks to its numerous patrons, for the very liberal support extended to it during the past ten years that it has been in operation; and they hope, by continuing to augment its facilities, to also continue to merit a share of public patronage

Extensive buildings are now erected for the accommodation of students, and for Recitation and Lecture Rooms, &c. They occupy an eligible position, and are finished in the best style of modern architecture; and the different apartments are heated by hot air, a method decidedly the most pleasant and economical

Ladies and Gentlemen will occupy separate buildings, under the immediate care of their teachers. They will board in the Hall, with the Professors and their families, who will be responsible for furnishing good board, and for the order of the Hall. Board and rooms can also be had in private families, if particularly desired.

Each room for those who board in the Hall is furnished with a bed and bedding, a table, two chairs, and a pail.

The plan of instruction adopted in this Institution, aims at a complete development of all the moral, intellectual, and physical powers of the student, in a manner to render them thorough practical scholars, prepared to meet the great responsibilities of active life. Our prime motto is, "The Health, the Manners, and the Morals of our Students." To secure these most desirable ends, the following Regulations are instituted, without an unreserved compliance with which, no student should think of entering the Institution.

REGULAR ACADEMIC EXERCISES.

The regular exercises, at which all the students will be required to attend, unless specially excused, are, Chapel exercises each morning during the term; Recitations, from two to four, five days each week, from Monday morning till Friday evening. Compositions and Declamations, one-half day, once in two weeks, Literary, Scientific, and Moral Lectures by the Principals. Public Worship, once in each week, either on Saturday or Sunday, according as the students may be in the habit of keeping the Sabbath, either on the seventh or first day of the week.

ADMISSION.

Candidates for admission as students, must present testimonials of good moral character, or be known to possess such a character, and must be willing to comply unreservedly with the foregoing regulations; and no one will be permitted to receive instructions in any class, until all academic bills, for the term in prospect, be paid or satisfactorily arranged.

ACADEMIC TERMS.

The Academic Year for 1848-9 consists of three terms as follows:

The First, commencing Tuesday, August 15, 1848, and ending Thursday, November 23, 1848.

The Second, commencing Tuesday, December 5, 1848, and ending Thursday, March 15, 1849.

The Third, commencing Tuesday, April 3, 1849, and ending July 12, 1849.

As the plan of instruction in this Institution, laid out for each class, will require the entire term for its completion, it is of the utmost importance that students should continue through the term, and accordingly, no student will be admitted for any length of time less than a term, extraordinaries excepted.

Students prepared to enter classes already in operation, can be admitted at any time in the terms.

N. B. Students who are expecting to teach during the winter or summer, will specify such intention on entering in the beginning of the fall or spring term; and, for the special accommodation of such, a day will be set apart at first, on which they can leave, if they wish; and they will not be permitted to leave on any other day, nor will any other than teachers be permitted to leave on the day specified.

Farther, it is of the utmost importance that the student be present at the day of the opening of the term, as on that and the succeeding day, the students entering are examined and classified.

It is also suggested to parents who patronize this Institution from the distance of a few miles around, that students should go home only once during the term, as every absence from classes is always attended with disadvantages to the student. This is a suggestion, and not imperative. But to meet this suggestion, the exercise of the school will close at noon on the seventh Friday in each term, and open again on the afternoon of Monday following.
